The speaker was the most eminent living student of the effects of sunlight on white men, and perhaps the only historical scholar who has investigated with patience and erudition the part which complexion has played in the drama of the rise and fall of nations, races, and civilizations—Major Charles E. Woodruff, M. D., Surgeon, U. S. A. Major Woodruff spent a day in New York City last week, on his way from his home at Plattsburg Barracks to Norfolk, where he is Medical Officer of the army camp at the Jamestown Exposition. It has been nearly two years since Major Woodruff published his great work, "Effects of Tropical Light on White Men," a book which was in effect an outline of a new version of human history from the standpoint of the study of the chemical effects of the sun's rays, especially the short, or actinic, ones, on the physique of man. Though the book is still popularly unknown, there are those among the discriminating who affirm that it is one of the epoch-making treatises of modern times, a work to be classed with Darwin's "Origin of Species" and "The Descent of Man."

Major Woodruff's thesis is in brief that man, orginally a dark-skinned and hairy animal, a forest denizen or a cave-dweller, of nocturnal habits, afraid of the sun and injured by it, survives as the creature into which he has now evolved only by virtue of the pigmentation of his skin in proportion to the degree of light to which he is exposed. Ages have produced various types of men, each suited to the zone in which he is fitted to live—the negro at the tropics, the brown and olive-skinned races further into the less fiercely lighted zones, the blonder races at the cloudy north, the red and yellow men on the plains and on the snow steppes of the Arctic. These races are permanent each in its own zone. The effort of a northern race to establish itself permanently in the zone of a more southerly one has always failed and will always fail. Nevertheless the repeated invasions of the home of a southern people by a northern one, its temporary periods of domination there, furnish the critical chapters of history. The blonde man, that is to say the tall, long-headed, blue-eyed, flaxen-haired man, who probably originated in Scandinavia, is the most powerful type of man, but is unfitted to survive anywhere except in a land of Winter and of mists. He comes to the south, conquers—and dies. He was the Aryan. He made the Sanscrit language and imposed it on all Europe and most of Asia. He was the ruler of Greece in the time of its classic civilization; then of Rome. They are monuments of his greatness, probably, which lift their immortal shapes on the sands of Egypt. He was, of course, the barbarian of more recent times, who descended upon the civilization in which his forefathers before him has perished. He rules Northern Europe today, constituting the aristocracy even of Russia, and to-day still feels the impulse of the "white man's burden." He is dominant in North America, though the brunette race is fast overpowering him here.

Actinic Rays Destructive.

"Nothing could be more certain," said Major Woodruff to a TIMES reporter, "than that light has properties which make it destructive of life. Von Schmaedal found that the most destructive rays were those at the short wave end of the spectrum—those which we see as blue, indigo and violet, and those which we cannot see at all, but know as the ultra-violet rays—the actinic rays. Every scientist now recognizes this, just as he recognizes that X-rays and the Alpha, Beta, and Gamma rays of radium are destructive. The corpuscular theory, now generally accepted, describes all these radiations, including light, in terms of electricity. In all radiation there is given off from the radiatory object, whether it be a Crookes tube or a lump of radium or the sun, a stream of infinitesimal particles, which we call 'corpuscles.' These bombard the retina of the eye or the sensitive plate of the camera or the unprotected skin, and produce the sensation of light or color, a picture, or a burn. The reason of it doesn't matter, though it is clear enough. The bombardment, when it strikes a system of life-cells, excites them. At first it stimulates them, but the stimulation soon passes into destruction. Then results the leprous-like hand of the X-ray operator, or the sunburn on the skin of the exposed face. These are external, superficial symptoms. If the bombardment is allowed to continue the injury goes deep."

Major Woodruff detailed at some length the evidences and character of the injury done living cells by exposure to light.

Living protoplasm is a very unstable substance. Its basis is nitrogen, and all nitrogen compounds are noted for their instability. Nitrogen is on this account likewise the basis of all explosives. Some of these "go off" on exposure to light. The bombardment of protoplasmic, or life, cells by the stream of corpuscles which radiate from the sun or from any source of light dissociates, wrecks, the molecules of the cell. Everybody understands that there may be an overexposure to the sun's rays with fatal results. Major Woodruff's contention is that the injury is done by the actinic waves, by the cool light, rather than by the heat, and that the degree of exposure which is injurious is much less than is popularly supposed.

Black Skin a Protection.

"By far the greater part of the animals live in hiding from the light," he continued, "in the sea, underground, in caves, and in deep forests. In the tropics you pass by day over silent and apparently lifeless areas which by night you find are teeming with life. And such as must venture abroad by day have provided themselves through the evolutionary process with protection—feathers, woolly hair, or, chiefly, pigment.

"The negro is particularly fitted for life where he is exposed to the light of the sun. The pigment of his skin is a shield against its ultra-violet rays. He is at a disadvantage anywhere else. His nose structure is such that he falls an easy prey to tuberculosis in the north. Even the negro, however, is a nocturnal animal, sleeping by preference by day and growing active at night. Nature has taught him the danger of sunlight.

"The white man is out of place in the tropics and cannot live there, except by hiding away from the light, and even then he rapidly deteriorates. With the utmost carefulness he gradually goes to pieces, and if he leaves any children they are frail.

"The mulatto dies out as quickly as the white man. In Haiti he has entirely disappeared. Elsewhere he is entirely failing to perpetuate himself. The negro has less difficulty in adjusting himself to a darker climate, though he could not permanently live in the north if he had the disposition. The negro death rate in America is about double the white rate. Our black population is finding its way farther south. The first negroes came to Virginia, and in 1790 the centre of black population was in that State. It is now in Alabama. The black man is getting back to the latitude of Nubia.

"Each race in its own zone," is Nature's law. There it is ineradicable. The modern Greek is the Greek of 3,000 B. C. There are more pure-blood Indians in Mexico to-day than there were in Montezuma's time.

The Brunette Zone.

"At an early period we find a race of pronounced brunettes inhabiting the shores of the Mediterranean. My own impression is that they should be described as Semites, though the Hebrews were but a single small family among them. This Semitic race included the inhabitants of Spain, Italy, Greece, and North Africa. It pushed out from the Mediterranean eastward across Asia and is found to-day throughout Southern Asia, in India, and even further to the east. The language of these people has been drowned by later floods of Aryan and Asiatic tongues, but their alphabets have survived in scores of forms all the way to Mindanao. From Gibraltar to the confines of further India there is a brunette, a Semitic, belt. Pick out a Hindu, a Persian, an Oriental Jew, a Greek, an Italian, and a Spaniard, and dress them alike and you may defy an ethnologist to tell which is which.

"The point is, the Semitic type was fitted to the amount of light radiated in this belt. It is olive-skinned, with plenty of dark hair, and has learned to shield itself from the sun by arbors and awnings and dark houses with flat roofs and small windows. The most of the United States is in this belt. Our territory is at this moment beginning to be overrun by the type of men best adapted to life here—the Semite, or, if you prefer, the Mediterranean man.

Origin of the Blonde Man.

"Some ten thousand years or more B. C. there appears to have come into existence in Northwest Europe, probably in Scandinavia, the blonde type of man. It would be idle to speculate as to how many centuries or millennia it took to evolve blondeness. It is not hard to understand the cause of the process. Scandinavia is a dark country, a land of almost eternal clouds and night. Its people lived in caves. The necessity for a high degree of pigment in the skin ceasing to exist, the pigment in part disappeared.

"But the blondeness of these Northern men was only an incident concerning them. Their character was also developed by the conditions which they had to encounter and surmount in order to live. Life amid the cold, on unproductive soil, where half of the year is night, is hard. It develops necessarily forethought, resourcefulness, and courage. The aboriginal man who happened to have brain enough to hide away a few oysters or a bone survived and had children who in some cases inherited his braininess. Of course, only the physically hardy survived. The absence of the excitement of light—which is a chief cause of nervousness and is responsible for the volatility of the Mediterranean peoples—allowed the Scandinavian to become composed, purposeful, persevering. Conditions developed, in short, the tall, blonde, hardy fighters and conquerers, who became what figures in history as the Aryan race. For awhile the original home of the Aryans was believed to be in Asia. That theory is practically abandoned. The Sanskrit language was first discovered in Asia, but the earliest forms of the Aryan tongue are now believed to be identified in Scandinavia, from which all Europe and much of Asia received their language.

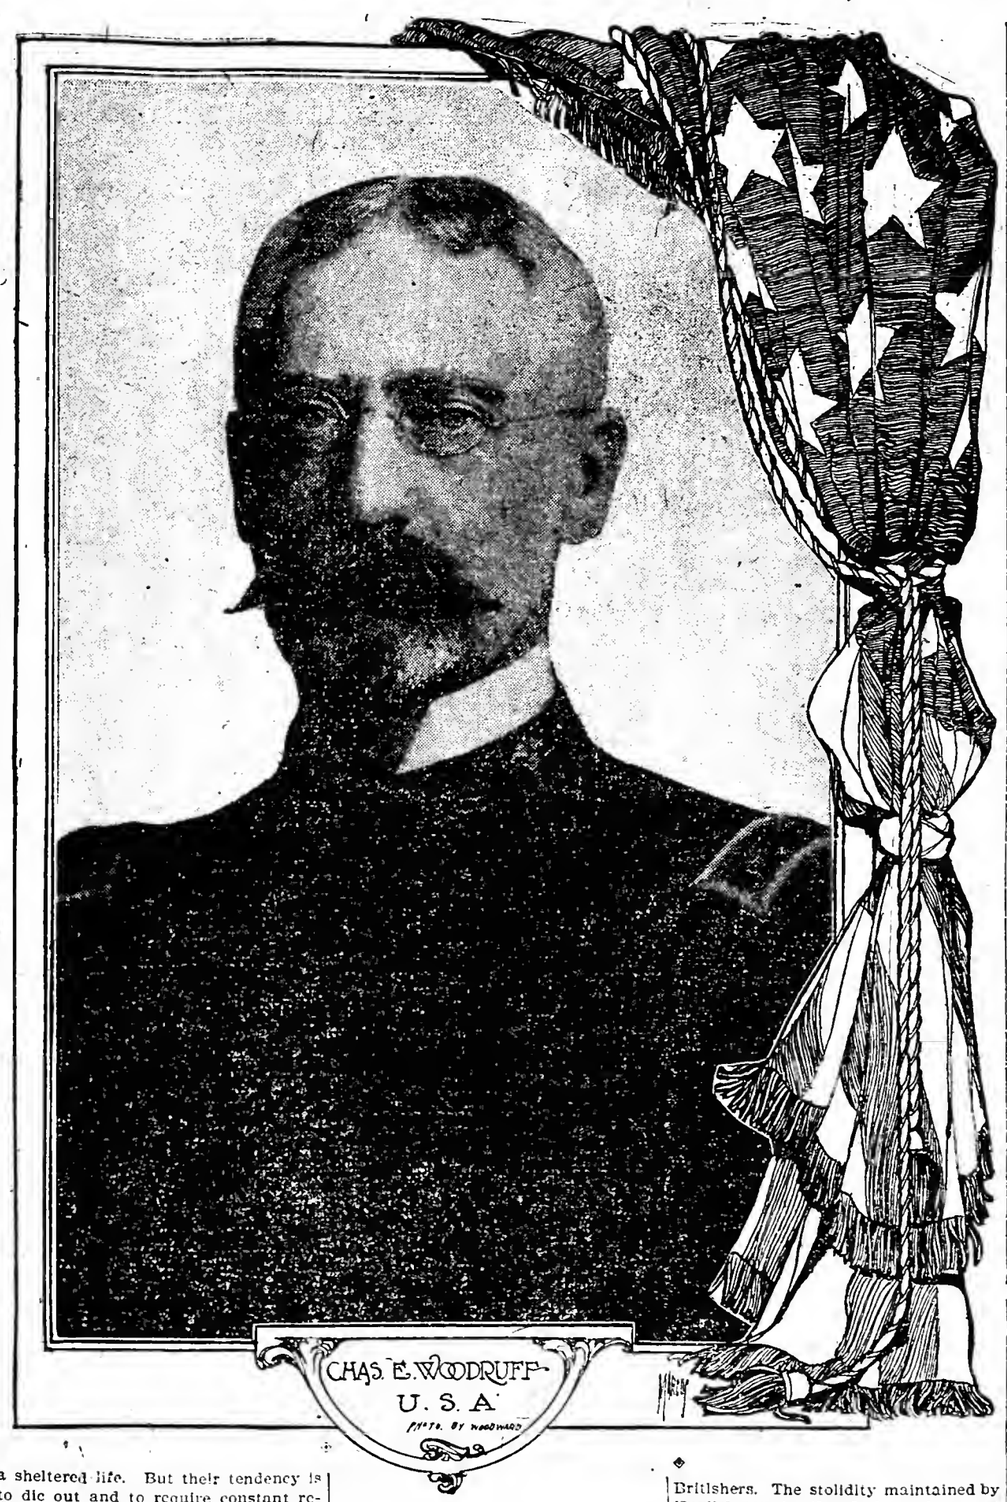
"When the Aryan took it into his head to turn to the south, the less hardy nations there were his easy prey. The great Pharaoh of the Bible, Rameses II., was a Northern chief ruling over a semi-tropical people. Egyptian pictures show 'white men of the North, with blue eyes,' as early as 4000 B. C. By 2000 B. C. the Baltic man, the Aryan, had become the ruling class of Greece. The faces shown in Greek statues are faces of Germans. The 'Hellenes" were blonde men, as the name indicates. You may see in the Boston Art Museum a Greek amphora showing artisans at work, all dark men; but the customer being served in a shoemaker's shop is white. All the Greek heroes are tall blondes.

"It required about seven centuries to destroy the blondes of Greece. But before they perished they had built up the Homeric civilization on the ruins of a Semitic one. The decadence of Greek was the dying out of the Aryan blood and the reassertion of the original Mediterranean Greek, who is the same today as he was 4,000 years ago.

"About 700 B. C. the big, yellow-haired Aryans came down on Rome, and here built up Roman civilization on the foundation of a Semitic population. The blondes ruled Rome a thousand years, and then died out, the original Mediterranean population which they left behind being again and again the victims of new raids from the North.

"In England the Aryans established themselves and still remain. The climate is cloudy and the light not excessive. Until a century or two ago many Englishmen of the country lived in mud huts and caves.

"The Aryans maintained themselves over a considerable area in Northern Europe, especially as aristocrats living a sheltered life. But their tendency is to die out and to require constant replenishing from Northwest Europe.



"North America was conquered and settled by Aryan descendants. This country is in the latitude of Rome and Greece. Its skies are Italian. Its sunlight is as constant and exhilarating as that of Hellas. There was no considerable population here to rule over. The Aryan had to populate the land as well as govern it. But now this tide of Mediterranean invasion has set in. If we want to maintain Aryan supremacy here, we must learn, as the Aryan Greeks did not, who stripped their children that the sun might tan their skins, that what we have to fight is not another race of men, but the rays of the sun.

"A great deal is being said nowadays about the increase of nervous diseases in America. Breakdowns are frequent. Suicide is on the increase. Our athletes are more highly nervous than Europeans and excel in sports requiring bursts of speed. But in endurance and in sports requiring a solid nervous system they are beaten by Britishers. The stolidity maintained by Englishmen in the dark environment of their islands is normal to the Aryan, and our quickness and brightness are abnormal. The American girl is a bundle of nerves. She is a victim of too much light."

Major Woodruff declares that the finest part of the United States for the home of the blonde is in the extreme Northwest and in Alaska, where the conditions obtaining in the original home of the Aryan are closely reproduced. Denver he singles out as a city unfit for habitation by a white man—too much light. He goes so far as to formulate the rule that in the United States, other factors being equal, the death rate of a place is proportional to its sunshine and inversely proportion to its latitude. The death rate decreases steadily from Florida to Vancouver, with its fogs. On the sunny tablelands of the West the death rate is high. In the excessively cloudy Adirondacks it is low. He believes that the beneficent effect on consumptives of residence in the Adirondacks is due to the possibility of getting there plenty of air without sunshine.

"The simple fact of the matter is—and the sooner we recognize it the better—light is a deadly enemy of life. In small quantities it is a stimulant; in excessive amount—and very little is excessive—it is destructive. A bright day affects one like wine, but too many bright days madden as surely as too much alcohol—and with far more permanent results. Men go to the Philippines and praise the climate—and in two years come home to die. Scandinavians come here, are excited to new vigor and leave a second generation of neurotics. Our climate spurs us all to frantic energy, and we are becoming a Nation of neurasthenics. It isn't coffee, it isn't the necessity of the strenuous life in America—except in the sense that this is due to exposure to excessive light.

"Mothers expose their babies to the sunlight. Every other nation hides them away like grubs of bees in dark cells. The baby parade is responsible for much physical degeneration! We actually strap the poor little sufferers in carriages and torture them by letting the rays of the sun pour upon their heads. They dwelt in darkness for months by the kindness of nature before their foolish mothers were thus allowed to thrust them into the glare and bombardment of the light.

Girls and young men run about bareheaded. What insane folly. Far better seek the excitement of drink. We are daft over the idea of plenty of 'God's sunlight' in schoolrooms and factories. We forget that miners are proverbially healthy. The Scotch are bountifully healthy. Their houses are dark. The Irish are brimful of health. They huddle in huts and live in mists. Sanitation? Yes. Plenty of light to kill the microbes, but none to kill nerve cells of the human body. Sun one room while you retreat to another. Plant trees, train vines, stretch awnings, and keep out of the bright sun, except for occasional stimulation in moderate weather."

Interest in Woodruff's Theory.

Major Woodruff's theory of the effect of light is gradually being accepted by the younger medical officers of the army. As a sanitary expert he stands very high indeed. The new historical thesis is inspiring eager interest in quarters competent to estimate its value. It is recognized to be, on its biological side, an extension of the conclusions of von Schmaedal, and on its ethnological side in accordance with the results of Ripley, as well as illuminative of innumerable problems of anthropology and archaeology.

Incidentally Major Woodruff throws light on many curious facts. He tells you why a baby's nose is flat; why it is sometimes born with black hair; why the demi-monde bleach their hair and wear red; why Northern Europe is Protestant, and why Roman Catholicism is growing in the United States; why the saints and the fairies are depicted as blondes, and why the Japanese are good sailors.

Army Discipline Indispensable to Germany

Prof. Hugo Muensterberg Elaborates the Ideas He Was Prevented from Explaining at the Peace Conference.

PROF. HUGO MUENSTERBERG of Harvard, the hero of one of the principal skirmishes of the Peace Conference, told a TIMES reporter the other day the things he might have said at the conference if he had had a chance. Though he has his full share of Teutonic calm, Prof. Münsterberg was still simmering from the excitement of the encounter.

"I regret," he said, "that the papers not only exaggerated the importance of the incident, which was essentially humorous, but entirely changed and put a wrong construction on the real point of my argument. I said that the German nation loves its army, and considers the years of service in the army as a national schooltime for strength and discipline. I also said that the burden is financially not so heavy after all, since the country is prosperous.

"Mr. Carnegie answered that I would change my mind if I asked the opinions of the laborers of German descent in his Pittsburg mills. He added that the emigration from Germany was a proof of the dissatisfaction of the masses with the situation of the land, especially as regards conscription.

"As I had no chance to reply I was unable to point out the fallacy of that argument. As a matter of fact I should not give any weight whatever to the opinions of those Pittsburg laborers who left their Fatherland because they did not want to fulfill their national duty. I should certainly not ask a schoolboy who runs away from school what he thinks of the school system and its educational value.

Real German Sentiment.

"The mass of German-Americans by no means share the views of Mr. Carnegie's friends in Pittsburg. On the contrary, they warmly indorse the views of the German nation which I expressed in my speech, as can be clearly seen from the fact that the greatest and most representative German-American paper in the United States—the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung—came out at once with a strong editorial emphasizing the fact that I had at last said the full truth about the German Army.

"If emigration were really a test of the existence of undesirable conditions at home it would furnish evidence against the United States and in favor of Germany. If the figures which I happen by chance to have before me are correct, Germany had, in the year 1903, a total emigration to all countries of 36,000 persons. In 1904 this total was 28,000. Yet from the United States there was an emigration to Canada alone of 49,000 persons in 1903, and 45,000 in 1904. In other words, according to these figures, 17,000 more people left the United States for one foreign country than left Germany for all foreign countries together.

"As to the question of the financial burden imposed on Germany by the maintenance of her army, the following figures may be sufficient:

"The population of Prussia—I have not at hand the figures for all Germany—was, in 1870, about 24,000,000; in 1890 it was about 30,000,000; in 1905 about 37,000,000. The money which the population of Prussia had in savings banks was, in 1870, about 160,000,000; in 1890 about 800,000,000; in 1905 about 1,900,000,000. So, although Prussia, as we heard, was crushed by the burden of expense for the support of the army, these figures show, nevertheless, that during a period wherein the population increased 51 per cent. the money placed by the population of the country in savings banks grew 1,179 per cent.

Value of Discipline.

"Not only is industrial Germany not suffering from the compulsory service in the army, but all Germany knows that the rapid progress of German industries in the last twenty years would never have been possible without the wonderful discipline inculcated in the masses by the years which every German has to spend in the army.

"On such an immensely fertile soil as that of the United States, with its unlimited treasures and supplies, it is not difficult to achieve a great deal; but to build up first-class conditions of industry and commerce on the less-favored soil of Germany, with its small resources and its overdense population, demands efforts of a much more serious nature. The happy-go-lucky American methods would never have resulted in the imposing achievements of German economic life.

"In short, the discipline maintained in the German Army is indispensable, and I feel quite justified in repeating that Germany is perfectly satisfied with her army system, even if some persons here and there do not like the discomforts attendant upon such a course of physical training as service in the army implies. There are many people in Germany who likewise complain loudly when they have to pay their little monthly contributions to the State insurance system. Yet that does no contradict the assertion that the German nation is and ought to be proud of that gigantic insurance system which secures all German toilers, not as a charity but as a right, against financial embarrassment in case of accidents, sickness, chronic ill-health, or old age.

No Reason to Change.

"Thus, I have not the slightest reason to change what I said. But, as I insisted from the start, my speech has been misunderstood, if it is interpreted to mean that I came to the Peace Conference to stand up for the German Army. I came to work for peace exclusively, and the frequent and long applause with which the huge audience received and interrupted my address made quite evident that those who were listening to me thoroughly understood the tendency of my speech. If you want to turn the German nation toward the support of the peace and arbitration movement, I said, then you must not waste your energies by useless appeals to motives and arguments which have no meaning for them. On the contrary, you must try, first of all, to understand the real German attitude. Germans will never be brought in line with the movement for peace by mere denunciations of the German Army; they will insist on the educational value of that army, and on the necessity of keeping such an army for the purposes of possible defense of a country surrounded by strong and ambitious rivals. The only thing which is necessary for the purpose of influencing the German mind, I added, is to appeal to German idealism—to the deep desire of the German nation for justice and righteousness. To tell the Germans that they must abolish the army because it is a heavy burden will always be ineffective. If you want to make an effective appeal, you must tell the Germans to avoid war and submit to arbitration by diplomatic methods because justice so demands it.

"I believed that I, being familiar with the workings of the German mind, could do a greater service to the cause of peace by pointing out the mistakes that have been made in dealing with German ideas, and in showing the right way to obtain results of practical value, than by simply indulging in the usual arguments against the German Army. My whole speech was an appeal for practical idealism and justice, and it was unfortunate for the cause of peace that Mr. Carnegie's Pittsburg reminiscences, accompanied as they were by his humorously dramatic gestures, attracted all the public attention to the short negative remarks with which I was preparing my way.

Deliberative Misrepresentation.

"It is hardly necessary to insist, after the above remarks, that when I was denounced on the following evening as a defender of "wanton militarism" and offensive warfare, it was no longer a mere misunderstanding, but a willful distortion of my argument. The attack was the less justifiable in view of the fact that it was inflicted in a careful speech, sent beforehand to the newspapers and elaborated several days prior to my speech on the basis of my manuscript, which had been given to the speaker who attacked me, confidentially and without my knowledge. The statements reflecting on me contained in this speech were in complete contrast to Mr. Carnegie's humorous remarks, which came out on the spur of the moment, in the heat of discussion, and which did not cause me to feel personally hurt in any way. On the contrary, I found that wonderful man more lovable and admirable than ever."

Dyspeptic Philosophy

Prof. Robert T. Hill Expounds the Latest Theory of Earthquakes and Connects the Disturbances in California, Jamaica, Mexito and the Mediterranean in One Zone.

THE EARTHQUAKES OF TWELVE MONTHS.

April 5, 1906.—Most violent eruption of Mount Vesuvius in thirty-two years. Five hundred believed to have perished.

April 18.—San Francisco and California shaken by most violent shock in their history, and San Francisco burns. Loss, $500,000,000.

July 16.—Many shocks in New Mexico, Arizona, and lower Rio Grande Valley. The town of Sorocco ruined.

Aug. 16.—Slight earthquakes in Kingston and St. Lucia, West Indies.

Aug. 17.—Violent earthquakes in Chile ruins Valparaiso, destroys 140 smaller towns and villages, and kills 1,000 persons.

Aug. 20.—Martinique, French West Indies, shaken by four shocks.

Aug. 24.—Slight earthquakes in Ecuador.

Sept. 27.—Earthquake in Porto Rico. Slight damage.

Jan. 14, 1907.—Violent earthquake in Jamaica ruins Kingston. Loss of life estimated at 1,500.

April 14-16.—Severest earthquakes in Mexico in fifty years destroy Chilpancingo, Ayutla, and Chilapa in Province of Guerrero. Loss of life estimated at 100.

April 17.—Earthquakes in Tortosa and Mincia, Spain; in Constantinople and the Russian provinces of Western Asia.

April 19.—Severe shocks in the Philippine Islands and Algiers, and a slight quake in Charleston, S. C.

IS there any connection between the great earthquakes of San Francisco, Jamaica and Mexico and the minor seismic tremors reported of late in the West Indies and Southern Europe? The question is most vital to scientists and all who seek to know this old Earth and her dangerous moods. Just a year ago the San Francisco earthquake horrified the world. So overwhelming was the disaster and the eruption of Vesuvius which preceded it and the quake in Chile more recently that the minor quakes reported from week to week seemed trifling by comparison. Then followed the violent quake in Jamaica on Jan. 14 last. The débris had hardly been cleared away before news came last week of the worst earthquake Mexico had known in fifty years, of two cities destroyed and many lives lost.

Robert T. Hill, one of the leading geologists in this country, said yesterday that the three earthquakes were all part of the same great world change. As he put it, San Francisco, Chilpancingo, one of the ruined Mexican cities, Jamaica, and possibly Madrid and Constantinople were probably all on the line of the same great earth stress or mountain-making movement.

New Theory Advanced.

The deductions of Mr. Hill depart in several vital points from the theory of earthquakes usually accepted by scientists. Heretofore 94 per cent. of the earthquakes have been believed to originate in two narrow zones. One was supposed to pass through the West Indies, the Mediterranean, the Caucasus, and the Himalaya Mountains in Central Asia. The other zone was believed to encircle the Pacific Ocean and embrace the Andes in South America, the mountains of western North America, the Aleutian Islands, Japan, and the East Indies. If this theory is accepted the Jamaica convulsion was in the first, and the earthquakes in Chile, Mexico, and California in the second zone.

The earthquake zone of Mr. Hill, on the other hand, sweeps through California, Mexico, Yucatan, Central America, Cuba, Jamaica, and Porto Rico, with its probable termini in the Sandwich Islands and Southern Europe. Thus Mr. Hill's theory and that of the two encircling zones are in conflict.

All of the circumstances surrounding Mr. Hill's deductions add to their weight. His opinions are the result of nearly twenty-five years of study. A mining geologist and author, Mr. Hill was engaged in the United States Geological Survey and geological and geographical explorations of the Southwestern States and Mexico for more than twenty years. With Prof. Alexander Agassiz he studied the geological history and the origin of land forms in Central America and the West Indies. He was sent in 1902 by the National Geographical Society to explore the eruption of Mont Pelee and the earthquakes in Martinique.

Of general interest is also the fact that Mr. Hill's theory embraces the story of how North America was built. It begins in the days when the Appalachian Mountains—then a region of earthquakes and volcanos—extended from Nova Scotia down the Atlantic coast and westward to Southern California. Then the Rocky Mountains were cast up by vast convulsions of nature. Finally the earthquake zone from California to Jamaica intersected the two older formations in Northern Mexico. It is in this region that Mr. Hill spent years in geological exploration.

Mr. Hill formulated his opinion yesterday for THE NEW YORK TIMES from his technical papers now in course of publication. The opinion follows:

"The earth, one of the many millions of heavenly bodies, is supposed to be a cooling globe. It is also supposed, according to the best evidence obtainable, to consist within of an intensely heated 'protomagma' (the mother, interior substance) under great compression, consisting of all the known elements of universal matter, retaining the intense temperatures inherited from the time when the earth was a burning sun, and which has been incrusted by rocks, the by-products of its own combustion. As the interior substance and heat of the earth decrease through volcanic contributions to the outer envelopes of air, water and rocks, the crust contracts and shrinks.

"The crust does not contract in all of its parts uniformly, however, but gives and wrinkles along certain great belts or zones of weakness, like a line of creases across a new-lain table cover. These folds, or pleats, occur along certain long lines or zones, thousands of miles in length and hundreds in width, and constitute the mountain systems of the world. The rock sheets along these zones also break, slip and settle, making great fissures known as faults.

"The growing mountains are, therefore, the sites of great stresses and strains, which sometimes result in a breaking and giving way of such intensity as to shiver the whole earth. Such occurrences are known as earthquakes. The mountain ranges in different parts of the world follow different directions, and are largely of different ages.

"The great belts, or zones of folds and pleats, can be traced along or across the continents, but their continuity is lost at the ocean margin. It is not impossible to argue that in some instances these belts have extended nearly around the world, but usually, when the geographer goes to making hypotheses of this character not founded on detailed field work, he only succeeds in putting into scientific literature some great and almost ineradicable fallacy, like that of the continental backbone, which does not extend through all the Americas, as Humboldt alleged.

"Each great belt of wrinklings represents a geologic period of disturbance and contraction in the earth's interior. Some of the mountain ranges are very old, and quit growing many millions of years ago. In fact, some of them are so old that they have worn away so that they no longer appear as mountains, and in instances their former extent now lies beneath oceanic waters or has been obliterated by newer ranges crossing them. Movements have ceased along the sites of these older mountain systems, and hence the areas which they occupy are not subject to the great earth slips or quakes. The fact that New York lies in one of the belts of old and finished mountain making is the reason why geologists consider the city free from danger of violent shakes.

"Millions of years after a great zone of pleating and fractures has been made on particular parts of the earth's surface and the movements have entirely ceased in that area, the earth begins to wrinkle in another area, and a newer mountain system begins to grow, with its axes in entirely different directions. The new belt, in turn, undergoes tremendous stresses of folding and earthquake, producing fractures, and ultimately completes its growth and ceases its groanings.

"Strips of the earth's surface have been wrinkled in this manner since the most remote geographic period, and are being wrinkled to-day. In the North American Continent there have been many of these belts of mountain ranges at different intervals of time, three of which, however, are especially conspicuous and, in order of sequence, would be called the Appalachian, the Rocky Mountain, and the Antillean systems.

"The Appalachian belt of wrinkles is the oldest, and its remnants dominate the easterly half of the continent. It was folded at the close of the coal-making period, which, upon the geographic calendar, is called Carboniferous Period. This great system which, upon the map, apparently runs from New York to Alabama, in reality extended from Nova Scotia on the northeast diagonally across the continent in a southwesterly direction, across the Mississippi Valley, Arkansas, Indian Territory, and New Mexico to the Gulf of California. Its northeasterly end has been worn away, and the Atlantic Ocean now covers some of its former site. Its southwesterly extension was likewise degraded and buried beneath the waters of the Gulf of Mexico, which once lapped the shores of the Montana and the Nevadan lands.

"Millions and millions of years after the great Appalachian revolution, as it is called, the earth began to develop another belt of wrinkles, this time along the western half of our continent. It extended in a north-south direction, from Alaska to at least 15 degrees of the equator, coincident with what is now known as the Rocky Mountain region, including the Mexican Plateau.

"The last mentioned belt of wrinkles, or Rocky Mountain folds, has a north-south direction and must have been accompanied by quakes and volcanoes of enormous proportions, which mostly occurred at the close of the Cretaceous and the beginning of the Tertiary Period.

"In time the Rocky Mountains also ceased to grow, and rugged and wonderful as may seem their scenic phenomena, so far as the world's history is concerned, they are dead, decadent, and, geologically speaking, will soon be worn away. The north-south belt of the Rocky Mountain folds extends directly across the older Appalachian belt, as may be seen in the Trans Pecos Province of Texas.

"Still later our North American portion of the earth's crust started to wrinkle again, and this time along still different lines, in a curving direction from the west to the southeast, along the Pacific Coast of California, across the north-south Rocky Mountain belt in Mexico, through the Isthmus of Tehuantepec and Honduras across the Caribbean Sea by way of the Mistirisoa and Honduras Banks, to Jamaica, Cuba, Haiti, and Porto Rico. This great belt, so far as is traceable, is over 4,000 miles long, and extends from Cape Mendocino, Cal., to the easternmost of the Virgin Islands, east of Porto Rico. Its ends undoubtedly continue into the sea, probably connecting with the Sandwich Islands, and probably continuing northeast from Porto Rico across the Atlantic and through the Mediterranean Sea, where shocks have been reported since these lines were written.

"This belt is known to be over 1,400 miles in width, and extends from El Paso, Tex., the southern edge of the Colorado Plateau, in New Mexico and Trans Pecos, Tex., to the Isthmus of Panama, the northern coast of Venezuela, and Trinidad. This belt of folding and faulting began as far back as Miocene time, perhaps a hundred million years ago. This is only yesterday in geologic time, which takes no account of years. Its movements have occurred progressively from north to southwest. This is the great zone of stress, strain, and folding movements, with the accompanying earthquakes which the earth's crust is undergoing to-day. The great quake of San Francisco in April, 1906, the Chilpancingo quake of last week, and the Jamaica earthquake are its accompaniments.

Latest Geological Formations.

"Along this great northwestern belt will be found later geologic features of the Western Hemisphere, such as the Coast Ranges of California, the modern volcanoes of Mexico, the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, Panama, and the Great Antillean Islands, and probably the Oceanic Islands of the Pacific. Some of the older features are the great southeast trend of the Rio Grande from El Paso to San Vincente, the southern edge of the Colorado Plateau, the extinct, but wonderful volcanic foci of the little described Davis and Chisos Mountains of Texas, the western Sierra Madre of Mexico, the remarkable, quaquaversal ranges of Northern Mexico and Texas, and the great overthrown mountains of Jamaica and the Great Antilles.

"Prof. James D. Dana, in the fourth edition of his Manual of Geology, published in 1895, called attention to the fact that two great systems of courses, or trends, prevail over the world—a northwestern and a northeastern, transverse to one another. He also showed that the islands of the Pacific Ocean were adapted to the northwest trends. I can now, in the light of my later studies of the Mexican Plateau and the West Indian Islands, suggest a continuation of these curving northwesterly trends through the Coast Ranges of California and the Mexican Plateau, Central America, and the Great Antilles, crossing the older northeastern trends of the Appalachian and the Northern trends of the Laramide, or Rocky Mountain system.

"It is also possible now to speculate upon the proposition that the axial trend of the mountain making movements of the continent, which dominate all of our great physical features, has progressively swerved from northeastward, through north, to a northwestward direction, in which latter direction lies the present zone of stresses and corrugations, following a course around the globe more concentric with the pole than radial from it. The great stresses of the San Francisco and Jamaica earthquakes, apparently, are manifestations of a recent series of stresses along this later northwest zone.

"These suggestions will be more apparent if one traces out the strikes upon the new, and, in general, excellent Carté Geologique du Nord America of 1906, prepared for the International Geological Congress by Mr. Bailly Willis."

Parlor Games That Amuse London Society Folk

LONDON hostesses who are often sorely put to it to find suitable light entertainment for their guests in the hour after dinner when the men return to the drawing room, have this season hit upon several new games which have proved very successful in arousing merriment.

Strangely enough, in London neither the modern man nor the modern maid has any fear of ridicule. A game, therefore, that may show each guest in some absurd attitude or performing some ridiculous antic is hailed as one that will give the keenest enjoyment to both hostess and guest, and its success is therefore assured, provided that it brings peals of laughter in its wake. Such mirth-provoking games may seem eminently childish to serious-minded people, but, nevertheless, they are extremely popular at the present moment.

An example of a laughter-compelling game is the favorite pastime of asking each guest to enact the part of a bird, beast, or fish in dumb show, while the would-be interpreter, who has previously withdrawn from the room during the time the characters are selected, stands in the centre of the circle of chairs and tries to guess what the various absurd antics represent.

Imagine a portly stock broker, for instance, crawling laboriously and slowly on his hands and knees the length of the drawing room, laden with a doll's house on his back. How is the guesser to interpret his antics to be representative of the actions of a long-suffering snail? Or when a well-known actor suddenly leans forward from his chair and jerks his head violently first to one side and then to the other, in a series of spasmodic nods, who is to guess that these extraordinary movements are supposed to indicate the butting of a goat?

When the ladies are called upon to enact their respective selections from the performing menagerie, and one rises solemnly from her chair, rubs one dainty slippered foot violently against a slender ankle, gives a sudden twitch of both feet, and apparently kicks out the whole length of her train in a succession of rapid movements, only the guesser endowed with a vivid imagination could surmise that these were the antics of a Spring chicken!

And the fair colonial, who gives a series of stiff hops on both feet, holding her arms extended stiffly, with drooping wrists, is really trying to depict the action of the kangaroo, albeit the interpreter may find but little resemblance to a marsupial.

As a reaction from the delights of this violent recreation comes a thought-reading game, which the two confederates boldly announce is as clever as the Zancig mystery. Confederate No. 1, the husband, retires from the room and begs each guest to choose a letter of the alphabet, which he will name on re-entering.

Confederate No. 2, the wife, is provided with paper and pencil, and marks down in turn the various letters chosen. Now comes the display of thought-reading. The first confederate returns to the drawing room, and, turning his back on his wife, looks intently at the first person whose alphabetical letter he has engaged to decipher à la Zancig.

"Well done," remarks his confederate, the wife. "The letter B," swiftly replies the thought-reader, and at once surprise and almost consternation reign supreme in the circle. How on earth can "B" be obtained from the words "Well done"? That is the puzzle that immediately sets every brain agog with almost irritating thought.

"The King is dead," says the second confederate. "The letter L," again responds the thought-reader, once more correct in his solution. "Go and search for the truth," remarks the wife. "The letter A," declares the pseudo Mr. Zancig, astonishing every one with his mental prowess.

No one is happy until the confederates have generously given away their secret. The code is formed on an exchange of English and French. The thought-reader translates the first word uttered by madame into French, and then selects the first letter. Thus "Well done" becomes "bien," and the letter is therefore "B," while "'the' King" is "'le' Roi," and therefore "L" is the consonant chosen. The would-be Zancigs are generously applauded for their clever exhibition and retire, covered with honors.

A lady proud of her memory now insists upon a game that will show her mnemonic powers. This is the somewhat appalling game of "I packed my Saratoga trunk with —," whatever article may be chosen by each individual. The difficulty lies in the fact that each guest has to repeat the whole string of articles uttered by the previous speaker, and to add another word to the list. By the time that the packing of the Saratoga trunk has gone the round four times, the list has attained an inordinate length, which can only be repeated by those gifted with an extraordinary memory.

An amusing game, which is provocative of laughter, is played as follows. This is really a variation of the popular game of forfeits, and is called "Leading the Dance." Any man who has been sentenced to pay a forfeit is called upon to execute the first steps of a dance, such as the waltz, the polka, the mazurka, the schottische, and to whistle his own air at the same time.

In this game the lady who is condemned to pay a forfeit may call upon a man to lead her through the dance, and the couple solemnly waltz around the room, the lady humming an accompaniment to her partner's whistle.

The simple life appeals only to those who don't have to live it.

Nearly 6,000 Refugee Cottages Built in the Public Squares of the City —A Bonus Fund Which Aided Lot Owners to Erect Homes for Themselves—Work Nearly Ended

IT WAS on the morning of April 18, 1906, just one year ago last Thursday, that San Francisco was overtaken by earthquake and fire and practically destroyed. Shortly after the catastrophe there was organized the San Francisco Relief and Red Cross Funds, a corporation empowered to receive and disburse the moneys coming from all quarters in aid of the refugees.

The Land and Building Department of this corporation is at present winding up its affairs, after a year's remarkably economical and effective work. A retrospect of the labors of the department forms an interesting chapter in the history of the great disaster. There have been built in the public squares of San Francisco a total of 5,938 refugee cottages. Of these, 4,168 were of three rooms each and 1,770 were of two rooms. In addition to this work the department erected nineteen tenements at South Park, having a capacity of 328 two-room cottages. And finally the building of a permanent structure for the Home for the Aged and Infirm has been undertaken on the Almshouse Tract. This building is nearing completion, and will be finished before the Land and Building Department formally goes out of existence.

A portion of the funds has been used to provide a bonus to aid lot owners in the burned district to help themselves. This bonus plan proved very successful, and enabled many of San Francisco's burned-out citizens to begin the erection of homes immediately. Up to the middle of March $200,000 had been applied in this way, enabling lot owners to build 470 homes, and $290,000 more is appropriated for the same purpose, so that over 1,000 homes will have been built under this plan in the next four months.

Great difficulties had to be overcome by the Land and Building Department in securing the erection of the cottages. The original plan was to erect bungalows on leased or purchased ground, and sell them on installments. On account of the high prices at which land was held the committee had to abandon this plan, and build cottages on the public squares instead. Advertisements were inserted in the daily papers, calling attention to the bonus and building plans, and within a very few days a large part of San Francisco's population was besieging the department for assistance.

3,000,000 Feet of Lumber.

A large quantity of lumber was needed, teams to haul it had to be secured, and materials had to be bought. Dealers demanded exorbitant retail prices for everything needed. The department finally succeeded in securing an option on 3,000,000 feet of lumber, and shingles in proportion, at prices which did credit to the fair-minded spirit of the dealer. This lumber was rushed down by steamer, and not being able to secure local teams except at exorbitant prices the department employed teams from outside the city to do the hauling. The apartment houses at South Park were begun forthwith, and a temporary mill was erected on the spot, which proved of great value in expediting the work and curtailing expense.

In the meantime contracts were let to four different companies for the erection of comfortable two and three room cottages at the very reasonable rate of $100 and $150. Ground was broken for the first cottage on Sept. 11, 1906, and the work was continued with a rush until, when the first rains came, there were enough cottages erected to house all who needed them. Much credit is due to the contractors for entering into the erection of these cottages with so much enthusiasm, and turning out such artistic and comfortable dwellings. They were spurred on in their efforts, however, by the offer of a bonus of from $50 to $200 a day for every day saved under ninety days in the completion of the houses, and a forfeit in case they failed to complete in ninety days.

The sanitation of the camps was a hard problem under the circumstances, it being almost impossible to get plumbers. But the department succeeded in having all the public squares occupied by these cottages supplied with sewers and a proper system of sanitation, keeping pace with the erection of the cottages themselves. By the middle of March there had been installed 667 patent flush closets, 247 hoppers, over six miles of gas and water pipe and over five miles of sewer pipe, together with all necessary fittings and incidentals, including 325 galvanized iron sinks with faucets and traps, at South Park, and 624 gas brackets. It is expected that a large part of the cost of these sanitary appliances can be recovered when the materials are no longer needed, and the relief fund can be reimbursed in greater amount than the first cost of material, on account of the rapid increase of prices.

The practice was extended of erecting temporary mills on the public squares where large numbers of cottages were to be located. The average cost per cottage, including painting, plumbing, sewering, flush toilets, hoppers, water and gas connections, removing tents from the public parks, and laying sidewalks, and including also all office expenses, was $150.50. The net office expenses for the department headquarters in Union Square, including postage, telephone service, and other necessary items, was $238.94. This small expense is partly accounted for by there being no rent to pay. The department succeeded in letting a contract for gas at a rate very advantageous to the relief funds, and all the cottages were connected with gas for light and fuel.

One episode in the construction was the removal bodily of 300 cottages that had been erected too near Mountain Lake, a water supply for the military camp at the Presidio. Gen. MacArthur, in requesting this removal, promised that the Government authorities would reimburse the funds for the expense incurred.

Up to the 19th day of March the total amount expended by the Land and Building Department was $1,131,892.30, and it is estimated that the total expenditures to July 31, 1907, will amount to $1,584,470.66 for everything.

The Father of Vaudeville.

Tony Pastor "Reminisces" About Growth of the Business Since War Times.

"I'M no good at the interview game," was Tony Pastor's first remark to the man who wanted to ask questions. But when pressed he decided that he might be seen at his famous little theatre which has nestled in one corner of Tammany Hall for over twenty-five years.

"But don't come to see me on Monday," he added. "That's the day that I'm busiest. You see, I have to get the new acts under way and run about behind the scenes getting things started for the week. Drop down Wednesday, and I may have something to say to you."

On Wednesday, sure enough, the Dean of Vaudeville was seated in his little office, surrounded by pictures, playbills, and other souvenirs of his fifty years of managership. And he started at once to "reminisce" about the past.

"The variety show had its origin in the days of the civil war," he said, "when men felt gloomy and wanted laughter, not philosophy, in their hours of relief. The more serious forms of the drama became neglected, giving way to minstrels and variety shows of all sorts.

"Not much was required in those days in the way of scenery and other stage accessories. Small halls and even stores were used as variety theatres. Drinks were served, smoking was allowed, and everything was free and easy. So popular did the variety entertainments become that rich men embarked in them as a business. One after another the variety cropped up; the Crystal Palace, for instance, and the American Theatre, at 444 Broadway, long known simply as 444.

"But all these were essentially resorts for men. Now, I had believed for a long time that ladies and families ought to attend variety shows. To demonstrate my theory I formed a partnership with Sam Sharpley, who was a well-known manager of minstrel shows. Together we leased an opera house at 201 Bowery. This was in 1865. We at once invited all the ladies to come and enjoy our show.

"In those days the east side was a fine residential section. The door plates of old Knickerbocker families still showed on thousands of homes. Our success was gratifying, but our main object was not attained. The ladies wouldn't come. I announced distributions of bonbons—of dolls—of flowers. Still they were coy. I had 'Ladies' Nights' every Friday, advertising far and wide that husbands might bring their wives and young men their sweethearts free of charge. In vain. I tried more substantial arguments. I gave away bags of flour—tons of coal—hams—even sewing machines. Still the ladies wouldn't flock to the box office.

"At last I announced one day that I would give away twenty-five silk dresses to ladies attending the show. That caught 'em. Talk about bargain day at a Sixth Avenue department store! You ought to have seen the lobby of my theatre after the ladies had read that announcement! Next I announced bonnets—twenty-five free bonnets. Did it work? Twenty-five policemen had to be present to keep the ladies from breaking ranks.

"At last I had induced them to come to a variety theatre and they have been coming ever since.

"But I wasn't left long to enjoy my prosperity alone. Competition sprang up right and left. The principal new theatre which entered the variety field at this time was the Olympic, in Broadway.

"It was then that I decided to organize a road company and try my luck in other cities during the months from June to August, when New York theatres closed their doors. I did so, visiting New England, the West, and even California. When I returned to New York I found my Bowery house too small for the increased business, so I moved over to 585 Broadway. But soon Harrigan and Hart started up at No. 512 and the Olympic at 620, so I removed to where I am now, in East Fourteenth Street.

"So marked was the success of my first road tour that I extended my annual time on the road from three to six months, and included every prominent town on the map in my schedule.

"Variety at that time comprised some ambitious acts. A forty-minute condensation of 'Pinafore' introduced at my theatre served to introduce Lillian Russell to the New York stage. May Irwin also made her first success on my Fourteenth Street stage in its early years, likewise Jacques Kruger. And in a production of a skit called 'The Stage-Struck Barber' who do you suppose made his début and an instant success? Nat Goodwin.

"Hoyt's 'Rag Baby,' one of the famous Hoyt farces that delighted New Yorkers of yesterday, was produced at my theatre; also the famous 'Parlor Match' and Neil Burgess's 'County Fair.'

"But it would take too long to give the names of all the actors and actresses, who are now celebrated and have long ago moved to up-town theatres, who started doing turns of various kinds on the boards of my theatre. One of them was Denman Thompson. His sketch called 'Joshua Whitcomb' was later elaborated into the phenomenally successful 'Old Homestead,' played for year after year in the best theatres all over the United States. Evans and Hoey of 'Parlor Match' fame also began under my auspices, likewise Billy Barry and Hugh Fay, the comedians who did 'Muldoon's Picnic,' and W. J. Scanlon, one of the most famed of Irish funny fellows. Francis Wilson used to do turns on my stage; so did McIntyre and Heath, who are now starring for themselves. George M. Cohan began his career as one of the Four Cohans, well known to my patrons. The Rogers Brothers used to exchange their face-to-face compliments on my stage, unsurrounded by the company which supports them nowadays. And last, but not least, Joe Weber and Lew Fields, as everybody knows, started on their triumphant career as Dutch funny men down on a certain little stage in East Fourteenth Street.

"And Vesta Tilley and Vesta Victoria and Little Tich and—but what's the use of telling about any more of them? They have come and gone or moved away, and still Pastor's is doing business at the old stand. What about the future? Well, I have been at it for over fifty years and I guess I'll stick it out. The public in that time has never lost its love of variety shows, and I don't think it ever will."

Workingwomen's Hours of Labor

Testimony of the Need of Legislation—Reform for the Sake of the Race.

THE need of protecting the workingwoman from herself, and from the demands made upon her by the employers of factories, has taken form in projected legislation in the Assembly, both in the limitation of her hours of work and in the appropriation of several hundred thousand dollars for an investigation to ascertain the specific facts of her condition. The proposed law will prevent all women, in mercantile establishments, from being compelled to work more than sixty hours in any one week, this prohibition now applying only to women under twenty-one years of age. In this way the killing experience of the Christmas rush season will be prevented. The enforcement of this statute will be secured through the State Department of Labor, instead of the Department of Health for New York City; past experience has proved that the burden of the latter is already too great to admit of the imposition of an increase of its duties.

The testimony of physicians in New York City regarding the effect of women's work upon her health and morals leads one to believe that supervision of the hours of work is as important to the coming generation in her case as it is with children's labor. Dr. A. Jacobi, whose many years as a practitioner in this city has brought him into contact with the condition of workingwomen, presents as a typical case of the effect of unremitting labor a woman of forty-two years, whose condition was beyond cure. She was always sleepy and tired, but could not sleep and could not eat. She went to bed at 11 and got up at 5. "No law of the land will reach her case," Dr. Jacobi says, and "there are 100,000 women of the kind in the State of New York whom no legal enactment will ever protect."

"What I say is not theoretical," he continues. "It ought to interest you to know what to a practitioner is of daily occurrence. I see a goodly number of young women who work at tobacco—mostly in the shops, many at home. The latter are worse off than the former, for to them there are no regular hours. All of these patients are anaemic, sallow, thin, underweight. They are poorly paid, poorly nourished, early risers—for they begin work at 7—without appetite. Their breakfast consists generally of what they call a cup of coffee, a roll, or a piece of bread. The stomach and digestion suffer invariably. Depression, migraine, hysteria are the results. During the constant sitting the chest does not expand, is flattened, compresses the heart, and prevents the lungs from developing. Tuberculosis is very frequent among these young tobacco workers, who are carried off in great numbers between the fifteenth and twenty-fifth year."

According to the latest statistics from the report of the Factory Inspector of this State, there are 29,745 women engaged in this industry, and in those related to liquors and food, over 16 years old. In textile industries there are 49,165, and in clothing, millinery, and laundry work, 118,311. The number is increasing very rapidly, and 50 per cent. of these women are under 25.

Aside from these figures, there is little definite knowledge of the status of the workingwomen of New York, and the proposed appropriation to pay the expense of an intelligent investigation is necessary before a helpful movement may be inaugurated. The work of the National Consumers' League has gathered much information of the condition of workingwomen throughout the country. According to the National census of 1900, workingwomen increased more than any other class of laborers. There were 5,000,000 of them then, and half of them were under 25 years of age. Nothing could be more impressive of the need of special legislation in behalf of these workers. Only four States in the Union prohibit night work for women. This fact brings into greater prominence the more advanced movement abroad for the world-wide prohibition of night work for women in industrial establishments. In May, 1905, representatives of most of the civilized Governments, except the United States and Japan, met at Berne, Switzerland, to draw up a definite international agreement prohibiting night work for women, and the establishment of a twelve-hour period of rest at night. There were fourteen nations represented in this conference, and their discussions covered the physical and moral need of such an agreement for the preservation of the race, and the greater efficiency of workingwomen; the industries to be included; the necessary exemptions to be made; the effect on competition for world markets, and other matters. This conference accomplished something. By an agreement, which will be ratified by these Governments in December, this year, a specified period of rest for eleven consecutive hours will be established, beginning not later than 10 P. M. and closing not earlier than 5 A. M. An interval of three to ten years (according to the state of the industries affected) is to be allowed before the international agreement goes into effect.

In the United States great pressure in opposition to legislation of this character is made by the corporations employing large numbers of women.

The request that women be restricted to sixty hours of work a week in the State of New York is yielding little enough to the needs of the race; but it will be a wholesome sign that the trend of legislation is not backward. Later, through the intelligence to be gained through a systematic investigation, New York may look for further help in the preservation of its citizenship.

D'Annunzio As a Lecturer.

Value the Italian Author and Poet Places on Himself Makes Managers Smile

GABRIEL D'ANNUNZIO, Italian poet and playwright, has declined an offer to visit America for a lecture tour, says a cable message from Italy. According to the report, he was offered $2,000 each for eight lectures, or $16,000 in all. He replied that he "was disposed to cross the Atlantic, but not for a packet of cigarettes."

The author's joke seemed to be at the expense of America and of Signor Bonetti, who made the offer. Men who know the American and European lecture field said last week that the joke was on the poet. "Who is Gabriel d'Annunzio, and what has he done lately to make him draw a crowd?" they asked. "Why should he be paid $2,000 for a lecture when men equally famous are not paid more than half that sum?" Such lecturers as Henry Ward Beecher, Mark Twain, and Henry M. Stanley considered themselves well paid at $1,000 a lecture. James Whitcomb Riley and Lieut. R. E. Peary receive $500 for a talk, and Sir A. Conan Doyle and Max O'Rell got not more than $250."

"The value of a lecture depends on the speaker's fame at the moment," said William C. Glass, manager of the J. B. Pond Lyceum Bureau. "D'Annunzio has not done anything lately to make Americans want to see and hear him. Capt. Richmond P. Hobson was popular, for instance, just after the Spanish-American war. His lectures brought him $250 each. Hall Caine lectured here in the season of 1898-9. He was a famous author, yet the tour was not a success. If G. Bernard Shaw would come to America, his lectures would be popular. But he must come soon, before his plays go out of fashion. Mr. Shaw's lectures would be worth at least $1,000 each.

"The greatest lecture success in this country recently was made by Henry M. Stanley when he returned from Africa in 1890. He was paid $1,000 each for 110 lectures. The highest price ever paid here was $5,000 for Mr. Stanley's services in the demonstration in his honor at the Metropolitan Opera House, on Nov. 11, 1890. The receipts were over $15,000, and 400 men seated on the stage paid $10 each.

"Mr. Stanley's fame at the moment, however, was quite unusual. Sir Matthew Arnold at the height of his career earned the next highest price, $2,000 for a lecture at $5 a ticket. Mark Twain is more popular than ever. His managers are refusing many offers at $1,000 a lecture. His fee would probably be somewhere between $1,000 and $1,500. If Henry Ward Beecher were living he would also get about $1,000. In his day halls were smaller than now, and his fee and that of the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage were about $500. Nansen, the arctic explorer, earned $50,000 for 100 lectures.

"These prices apply, as you see, to the most famous men at the moment they are prominent before the public. For the average man of note $500 is a large fee, and $250 nearer the average. The Rev. Charles Wagner, author of 'The Simple Life,' was much sought, and earned $250 a lecture on the average. James Whitcomb Riley, probably our most popular poet, earned $500 at one of his readings. Lieut. Peary, just back from his arctic trip, is paid about the same sum every time he lectures. In England the fees for lecturing are about one-half the American prices. The other countries of Europe do not have the work systematized, and there is no standard of cost. So you can see d'Annunzio's fee is absurd on its face.

IDAHO'S GREAT TRIAL ABOUT TO BEGIN

HARRY ORCHARD

NO one living in the Rocky Mountain regions can have an unprejudiced opinion regarding the coming Steunenberg murder trial. This is the most important event that has occurred in Western America in recent years, and when William D. Haywood, Secretary of the Western Federation of Miners, is arraigned in Boise, Idaho, May 9, charged with the murder of Idaho's Governor, he will have half the population of the entire Western country with him and half against him. This is the culmination of a long line of bloodshed in the mining camps, beginning in the Coeur d'Alène's mines fifteen years ago, and culminating in the bloody mining riots in Colorado. The prosecution will attempt to show that all the crimes in the mining camps which appeared at the time to have their motive in the existing bad feeling between the mine owners and the Western Federation of Miners were planned by the "Inner Circle" of the Federation. Of this the three officials indicted for the murder of Gov. Steunenberg were members, and the crimes committed were supposed to be carried out under their directions. The defense is confident of its ability to disprove these allegations, as well as the charges made in Orchard's confession, described further on in this article.

At the time of the Wardner riots in the Coeur d'Alènes, Gov. Steunenberg, in the absence of the Idaho militia in the Philippines, asked for Federal aid, and Gen. Merriam established such stringent military rule that Gov. Steunenberg gained the enmity of the entire Western Federation of Miners. Two years later Steunenberg retired from office and returned to his home in Caldwell. Four years later, returning home from his office at six o'clock on the night of Dec. 30, 1905, he swung open his garden gate, and a mine that had been set for him exploded and tore his body to pieces. His head was found a block away.

Two Confessions Made.

Investigation implicated Harry Orchard and Stephen Adams in the murder, and both confessed. In their confessions they stated that they were the tools of the "Inner Circle" of the Western Federation of Miners, and implicated the officials of the Federation in a long list of murders and attempted murders. Charles H. Moyer, President; William D. Haywood, Secretary, and George A. Pettibone, Committeeman, all members of the "Inner Circle," were "kidnapped" in Colorado on hurried extradition proceedings and rushed to Idaho on a special train. Though indictments were brought against them a year ago, their trials have not yet taken place. Orchard has since become greatly weakened mentally and Adams has retracted his confession, saying that it was obtained from him by coercion and undue influence.

All Idaho is torn between the prosecution and defense in this trial. Although broken by great ranges of mountains and divided into separate sections by lack of through railroad connections, Idaho is a unit and its progressive citizens are well acquainted in all parts of the State. The population is small, but enlightened. Rich mines and irrigated farms have produced a great deal of wealth, and the resultant culture has not weakened the moral fibre of its citizens. The people of Idaho are a very high class of Americans. Among this class of people Gov. Steunenberg was well known and liked. His action in calling for aid to end the Wardner riots was approved by them.

This is one-half the population of Idaho. The other half is composed of miners. These are largely Slavs, Finns, and Scandinavians. Among them is a scattering of American-born miners, but only a scattering. They are in thorough sympathy with the Independent Workers of the World, a semi-anarchistic organization, which recently called unfavorable attention to itself in Goldfield, Nev., when at one of its meetings the American flag was jeered. There is at the present time a dissension in the Western Federation of Miners regarding their affiliation with the Independent Workers of the World. The inclination to break away has been growing steadily. In the event of the conviction of Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone, there will probably be an entire change of spirit in the Western Federation of Miners.

The prosecution of Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone has been made a labor issue throughout the United States. For a year and more meetings have been held, ending with a sensational series in all the large cities a few weeks ago, in which the prosecution was declared a persecution, and the question was asked, "Shall our brothers be murdered?" The purpose of these meetings was to obtain money with which to conduct the defense, and over a quarter of a million dollars has been raised.

There is tremendous interest in the coming trial all through the West, even in portions where there are no mines or miners. It is most talked of in labor circles. There the spirit regarding the trial is good. All the labor unions ask is a fair and speedy trial. The general tendency of the labor unions to defend any action in the name of unionism is checked on this occasion by the enormity of the crimes with which the defendants are charged. They have reserved their judgment and are willing to stand by the judgment of any twelve good men.

The Western Federation of Miners is hardly so conservative, but in the city of San Francisco, where union labor is in control, the leaders, while taking part in the exciting meetings held for the purpose of raising money for the defense, counsel sanity. Still, at the last mass meeting held on behalf of these prisoners in San Francisco the American flag was torn down and trampled upon.

The trial will cost the State of Idaho over $200,000. The defense expects to spend even more. It has a million dollars belonging to the Western Federation of Miners, besides the quarter of a million raised in public meetings. James H. Hawley, formerly a well-known California lawyer, now of Boisé, Idaho, and Senator W. E. Borah of Idaho, are leading counsel for the prosecution. Clarence Darrow of Chicago will head the defense. His principal assistants are ex-Gov. John T. Morrison and John F. Nugent of Idaho, the firm of Richardson, Patterson & Hawkins of Denver, and lawyers from every town in the West in which the Western Federation of Miners has had trouble.

The trial will be long and hard fought. In the first place, it will be difficult to secure a jury in a State where every one takes a vital interest in the trial. The prosecution will exert every possible effort to secure the conviction of Haywood, as the hope of fastening the long line of Colorado murders on the officials of the Western Federation of Miners depends on the validity of the confession of Harry Orchard and its power to convict.

Many months have been spent already in contests over extradition proceedings. The United States Supreme Court decided that they were valid.

The complaint that two terms of court had passed before the cases were brought to trial was made the basis of a motion to have the case dismissed a few weeks ago. The motion was overruled, Senator Borah arguing that the trial could not previously have been legally held under the laws of Idaho, as habeas corpus proceedings were pending in the Supreme Court.

The defense then petitioned for change of venue from Caldwell to Boisé. This was granted by Judge Wood, the defence agreeing not to bring up the question of change of venue again. Judge Wood then set the trial of Haywood for May 9 in Boisé.

About this trial centres the greatest interest, as the fate of Haywood will decide the fate of the others, since all three of the indicted men were equally implicated by the confession of Harry Orchard.

The prosecution has been generally criticised for allowing a whole year to pass without bringing these men to trial, and many excuses have been made to account for it. The Idaho laws provide that a man cannot be convicted of a crime on the uncorroborated confession of an accomplice. It is stated that the prosecution has delayed because it was unable to obtain corroboration of Harry Orchard's confession. The District Attorney yields no information on this point. But since the prosecution is now taking up the case, it is presumed that it has stronger evidence against Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone than the confessions of Harry Orchard and Stephen Adams. The fact that Adams has retracted his confession practically destroys it as evidence, and Orchard is understood to be in so weakened a state of mind that he will not be able to take the stand, and the prosecution will be forced to seek to have his sworn testimony, on which the indictments were brought, admitted as evidence in the form of affidavits.

Adams was tried recently at Wallace, Idaho, for the murder of Fred Tyler, in which his confession was the strongest evidence for the prosecution. But the jury disagreed, as Adams also repudiated this confession.

The confessions of Harry Orchard and Steve Adams for the murder of ex-Gov. Steunenberg were obtained by James McPartland of the Pinkerton detective service, who broke up the Mollie Maguire gang in Pennsylvania in the seventies, and secured the conviction and execution of seventeen members.

When ex-Gov. Steunenberg was murdered, Dec. 30, 1905, the naturo of the death trap set for him and the only probable motive for the act pointed suspicion toward the Western Federation of Miners. James McPartland, Superintendent of the Western branch of the Pinkerton service, with his office in Denver, took up the case. The Pinkerton service was very familiar with the activities of the Western Federation of Miners, having played a part in all the troubles from the early days in the Coeur d'Alenes. Three days after the murder McPartland arrested Harry Orchard, in whose room in a hotel in Caldwell was found a suspicious white powder and some letters. In his trunk in the railroad station were found materials for making bombs, a cipher code, and letters from several Federation officials, containing instructions and advice.

McPartland set about obtaining a confession from Orchard. He worked on his nerves by placing him in solitary confinement with silent attendants. At the end of a week McPartland appeared, sowed the seed of distrust in Orchard's mind, and left him to ruminate over what he believed to be the treason of his instigators. McPartland did not come back for days. By that time Orchard was ready to talk. It took five days' steady writing to take down his confession. Orchard has in no way indicated since then that the confession was false in any detail. Points in his confession which could be corroborated by investigation at the time were investigated and duly corroborated. It takes seven hours' rapid reading to get through with this document, which purports to give the entire history of the activities of the "Inner Circle" of the Western Federation of Miners. It covers seven years of crime, explaining disasters and murders which at the time horrified whole communities. The crimes in the Cripple Creek district in the last few years find explanation in this document.

According to his own confession, Orchard was the principal assassin in the pay of the Western Federation of Miners, hired to get rid of objectionable persons. A remarkable side to his story is his care not to injure persons not enemies of the Federation. He planned many times, he confessed, to assassinate Gov. Peabody of Colorado, but, as he says in his confession: "I could have got Gov. Peabody time and time again, if I had not been afraid of blowing up those Peabody girls."

He tells in another place how he deliberately foiled a determination on the part of the Federation to destroy a whole trainload of innocent people. There was a military ball at Victor, Col., Nov. 14, 1903, in the midst of the mining trouble in this district. The military was in control, and the miners objected to the martial law. A train on the Florence & Cripple Creek Railroad took over to Victor from Cripple Creek 218 persons. Knowing that this train was to return at 2 o'clock in the morning, Orchard, according to his confession, was ordered by Secretary Haywood of the Federation to wreck the train on a very dangerous curve. The motive for this diabolical crime was "to put the fear of God into the hearts of the people." The attempt to wreck the train was made: spikes were pulled from a rail on a curve of a 300-foot embankment. "When I was ordered to wreck that train," says Orchard in his confession, "I said I would not do it. And I was the man who passed the word to the conductor, warning him to look out." The conductor took warning and the wreck was averted. This part of the confession has been corroborated by the conductor.

In the long story of his confession Orchard tells of many things. He confessed to the blowing up of the Independence railroad station. The Findlay mine, at Independence, Col., employed non-union men. The plan was to kill off two shifts at once by blowing up the railroad station as one shift was going to work and another leaving. Two o'clock in the morning was the hour selected. Orchard says that this crime was "framed up" in Haywood's room in Denver. Haywood made his "get-away" by inducing a saloonkeeper named Neville to burn down his saloon, get the insurance money, and then to travel north through the mountains. On the first night out, Orchard pretended to have forgotten his gun, and rode back in the night with the ostensible purpose of getting it. At that time he laid the mine which tore thirteen men limb from limb and crippled six more for life. He pulled the wire a moment too soon or he would have killed a hundred. Neville, when he learned of the crime, suspected Orchard of it. He later got hush money from the Federation, and, going to Goldfield, Nev., died mysteriously a year later of poison.

"It's not as easy to get a man as you'd think for," said Orchard. "First you must arrange a 'get-away,' and then you must catch the man you want. No good getting small fry or people who don't owe you anything. Until you have tried it you don't know how many things come between you and the man you want."

Orchard went into many details in the story of his attempts to get Gov. Peabody, proving that the way of an assassin is hard. The chief interest in these details is that so many of them were corroborated by actual investigation at the time of the confession. McPartland, when he first got the confession, placed it before Chief Judge Gabbert, Adjt. Gen. Bulkeley Wells, Judge Goddard, all of Colorado, and J. H. Hawley, representing the Governor of Idaho.

Judge Goddard's Escape.

The confession contained accounts of effort made to "get" the two Judges present. In one instance Orchard had planted a bomb just outside the gate before Judge Goddard's house, buried six inches below the surface, on the outside of the gate post, covered with a piece of sacking, and attached to a fine wire connected with a small bottle of acid, which lay above a heap of potash and sugar, deftly placed over the explosive. The little wire from the bomb came just above the surface and a fish hook was fastened to the end of it. A screw eye was driven into the gate and a piece of iron wire was attached to it. When the two wires were connected the slightest opening of the gate would explode the bomb. But Judge Goddard, said Orchard, constantly failed to come when he was expected, and the "job" was forced to wait until Orchard should finish some other work he had on hand. The time never came when Orchard was able to set the mine.

Judge Goddard sat through the reading of these details; then, with a "wait for me," he rushed to his home. He returned in less than half an hour with "the fear of God in his heart." "It's there," he said.

When the document had been read through the entire party went to Judge Goddard's house and watched while Bulkeley Wells carefully unearthed and removed the mine.

It was on this occasion, after a number of such corroborations of Orchard's story, that Gov. McDonald of Colorado granted the requisition for President Moyer, Secretary Haywood, and Executive Officer Pettibone. Moyer was arrested on a Union Pacific train leaving Denver. He was going to Deadwood, S. D. Haywood and Pettibone were arrested in Denver. All three were then rushed to Idaho on a special train. This action was called "kidnapping" by the miners and their sympathizers, but others looked on it as a short cut to justice, carried out in characteristic style.

Stephen Bonsal, After an Absence of Several Years, Finds Russia Completely Transformed

Customs Inspectors Unhesitatingly Pass Revolutionary Literature—Court Equipage Makes Way for Humble Street Car.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co

ST. PETERSBURG, March 29.—We crossed the frontier at midnight and were marched into the Custom House pens, surrounded on every side by soldiers and gendarmes. For a moment it seemed as though I would find the same old Russia of ten years ago. The Inspector with eagle eye of course places his hand upon a mass of quite revolutionary literature in one corner of my trunk which I had not had the time to digest during the voyage and had not the heart to throw away.

"You must read the other side, too, Monsieur," he says sadly, and then without further ado my baggage is passed. "Incredible, but true," was my comment. I hope you will have no other.

We are on the fastest train that connects the Russian and the German capital. A speed of twenty miles an hour is claimed for it, but I have my doubts. The fuel we burn is exclusively fagots of birch wood, and the consumption of the same by our locomotive is something enormous, and perhaps fortunately so, for the gathering and delivering of these same fagots at the stations would seem to be the only industry of the provinces through which we pass. We are far indeed from the lordly forests of East Prussia now, where the ground under the oaks and the pines is kept as neat and clean as the floor of the best stube in the German housewife home. To tell the truth, these Russian forests, or rather "woods," carry me back across the seas and suggest our own slouchy forest scenes.

But the cars! And now I veer back, the incident at the Custom House was due to a personal idiosyncrasy, I argue; people have even been politely received upon their arrival in New York. But Russia remains the same, the condition of our sleeper convinces me. It is new, quite new. The conductor admits it was only delivered in Russia three months ago, and with the broader tread of the Russian rails it could be so comfortable. Here indeed is a sleeper in which you could stretch yourself and take your ease as imaginary people are supposed to do in the picture books and posters which our railways publish so plentifully, but unfortunately everything, and especially my bed, is broken and out of gear, the ventilator won't work, the windows are stuck, and no power of man or Cossack can raise or lower them, and in the lavatory out of the spigot runs a dark, black alluvial ooze where water was expected.

"Nitchewo! it is nothing," says the Kalmuck porter with a smile; and indeed it is nothing to him, whose only use for water is in the brewing of tea.

My fellow-travelers are a rich and a timid company, a dozen or more men and women representing the classes which are supposed to have a special stake in the welfare of their country. Some draw their money from the Court, which may be abolished; some from the administration, which may be put to useful labor, and some from commerce, which may be purified and purged, placed upon an honest basis. Now they are returning from the azure coast of the Riviera at least six weeks before the usual time.

"I haven't seen the Neva frozen in twenty years," says one ink-slinger of the bureaucracy, "but I will see it soon. I wonder what else will happen now that Peter Arcadiawich [which is the front and more familiar part of Prime Minister Stolypin's name] is in power!"

"Why, don't you know they are going to lengthen the office hours and suppress the free cigarette burget?" this from a small landowner who has lost his house in the agrarian troubles, but none of his contempt for the Yellmovnik, though both are classed as Conservatives.

The gray, misty day wears on, and out of the shadows of the evening the lights of the great city dawn upon us across the great alluvial plain where Peter built his city, because he was new to the business. Suddenly a great flame soars toward heaven, and one of the passengers screams: "The city burns! The city burns!" The fearful cry ran like wildfire through the cars, and every one again tried to open his window, but without success. Men sob, women are for turning right around and going back to France, and the children heighten the excitement with shrill howls.

"But, gentlemen and ladies," urges the Kalmuck porter, "take the word of Ivan. 'Tis only the red flame of the great forge where the Czar's cannon are cast." And so indeed it was; but some minutes elapsed before our company was restored to its usual placid demeanor, and even then our talk was of sad things.

"Sometimes it sounds like the crack of a whip," says the wife of the Assistant Paymaster of the District Judges.

"It is on this account considered very bad form to crack your whip on the Newsky now—it makes so many people run," explains the wife of an ex-Provincial Governor.

"My cousin Geodor Geodorovich, who was in Port Arthur, says it's no use running, once the bomb is in the air."

"Well, what does he advise?" came from every direction.

"Cross yourself as often as you can, fall forehead first to the ground, and grip the cobblestones with your hands."

Everybody studies out the picture for a minute or two, and then some one snickers; I think it was Ivan, the Kalmuck. However, it grows contagious, and the anxious souls are possessed for one happy moment with a perfect frenzy of laughter.

"What times! what times! that I should have lived to see them!" says a Warsaw matron, somewhat reproachfully it seemed to me, looking in the direction of the saintly ikon which adorned her coupé "But I shall neither run nor beat the ground with the forehead—for why? I will tell you. Down in Warsaw, and there more bombs have been thrown than in all the other cities of the empire, it does not sound like the cracking of a whip. No, not at all. I have it from many who have heard and lived to tell the tale."

"For Heaven's sake, Madame, what does it sound like?" This burst of impatience from the Assistant Paymaster of the Judges.

"It sounds—well—it sounds like, very like, the hissing of a samovar."

With even the hope of enjoying good caravan tea once more goes a hope which had sustained the reluctant travelers through the coffee-drinking countries, our party began to disembark. I say began advisedly, for it required twenty long minutes to get those twelve good people out of the car. It was not lost time, however, not entirely, for watching the hurly-burly and the convolutions into which my friends twisted and tied themselves I understood, as never before, how those two thousand unfortunate people crushed themselves to death on the Moscow Plain at the Czar's coronation, and perhaps I had a glimmering of new light on the political situation, for here we are dealing with a people who indeed want to get out into the sunlight, but would rather risk throwing themselves from the windows than using the doors, and who, while they would dearly love to cross the river which confronts them, have an aversion to bridges.

Even in the dusk of the evening St. Petersburg seemed very shabby and out at the elbows. Men and women, too, looked careworn, and soon the conclusion was forced upon me, and I believe it is a true one, that mentally and financially every man, woman, and child in the capital has gone through the Manchurian campaign only to come back sore, weary, and on half pay.

Ten years ago there was a barbaric splendor about the place which was refreshing, at least, to the tourist's eyes, but that, too, seems quite lost. But here comes down the Morskaia a Court equipage as gorgeous as of yore. At the corner of the Newsky Prospect what should it meet? A horse car—one of those antediluvian affairs which have been the jest of foreigners and the mortification of Petersburgers for a generation. It looks as though there will be a collision, but of course the horse car must yield and shrink within itself, or make off without more ado, leaving the tracks if necessary.

But not at all. The Noah's Ark, loaded to the brim with its human freight, sails serenely on, the driver ringing his dinner bell of warning in the face of the Court coachman. He is a wise man, who has learned his lesson and has no idea of running counter to the spirit of the times. He pulls the magnificent Orloff stallions back upon their haunches, they scream with rage, but noblesse oblige, the great lady behind them does not seem to observe the horse car and its very human freight as it takes precedence of a Court equipage and a daughter of Rurik, while the gendarmes are all looking very hard and very fixedly in quite another direction.

"You must go to the Duma right away," said a kind friend in the morning. "You know, the Russ newspaper has been looking the palace over on its own hook, in the American fashion, as they call it here, and it announces that the building is liable to fall with its own weight any minute. Then, of course, there is always the chance. I would hurry up; pity not to see it after having come so far."

I hurried and soon entered the palace grounds which Catherine gave to Potemkin, fortunate both in love and war perhaps, despite the proverb. A great mass of men and women were clamoring at the main entrance of the graceful white edifice. "I want to see the representative from Perm," shouts one. "The member from Saratoff has promised me a job, and I must see him right away," shouts another, and some very Cossacky looking soldiers, even if they are not true Cossacks, hasten to do the bidding of the great unwashed.

Inside there is a strange figure in the Speaker's tribune. He faces the Ministerial bench and shakes his fist at the Prime Minister. He is a member of the Group of Toil—a strange, swart little man, with a wizened face and one shoulder six inches higher than the other. His eyes blink as though unused to the sunlight. He wears his boots right up to the waist, and a tunic that is cut down low in front. His voice is now low and rasping, now high and filled with falsetto notes, the voice of a man who is only learning to speak after a thousand years of silence and suppression.

"Yes, I charge you with crime—with every crime known to man!" he shouts. "Your Government is hated and despised throughout Russia."

"Would it not be more parliamentary to say unjust acts rather than crimes of the Government?" suggests the presiding officer.

"It might be, but it would not convey my meaning so clearly," continues the outspoken radical, and he gives the Government another blast. And then suddenly, why I do not know, he turns away from the Ministerial bench and talks to the men of toil on the left, his own little party, seeded by the blood of many martyrs, which stands there after generations of subterranean life before all the world and is not afraid. And suddenly the wizened face of the speaker becomes transformed, his eyes burn like living coals, and he shouts, "Yes, we want svoboda, svoboda, svoboda! Liberty, liberty, liberty!"

The Cossacks do not rush in and knout him, the Left cheers, and the Right hisses, and I go home. When we come to the palace of the once Grand Duke Serge, now bare and empty, I make up a mental bundle and throw all my important knowledge of Russia ten years ago into the dark waters of the Fontanka, for the Russia of to-day is quite a different proposition.

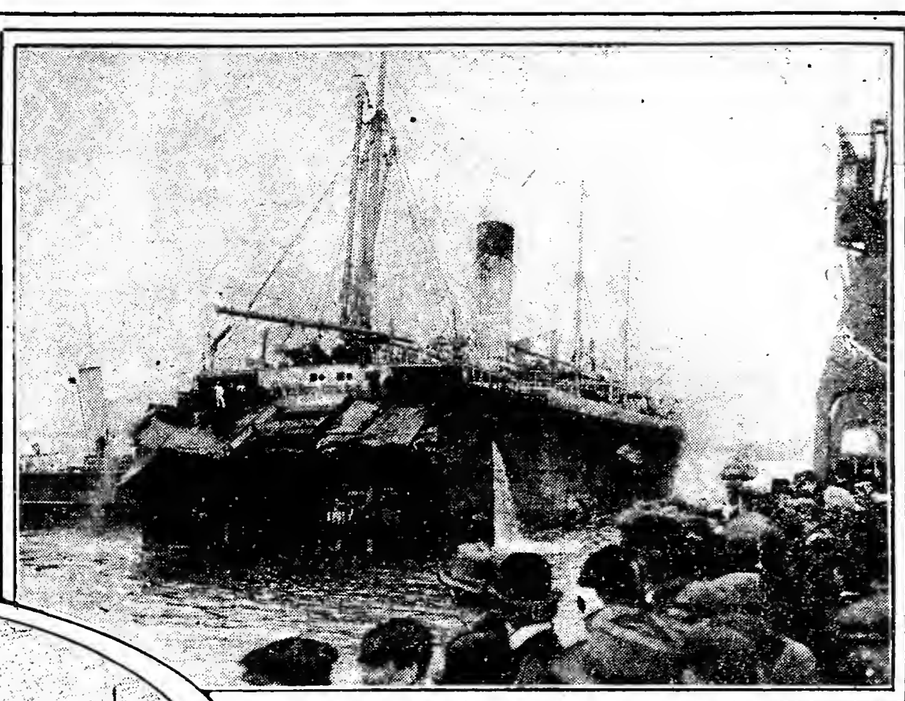
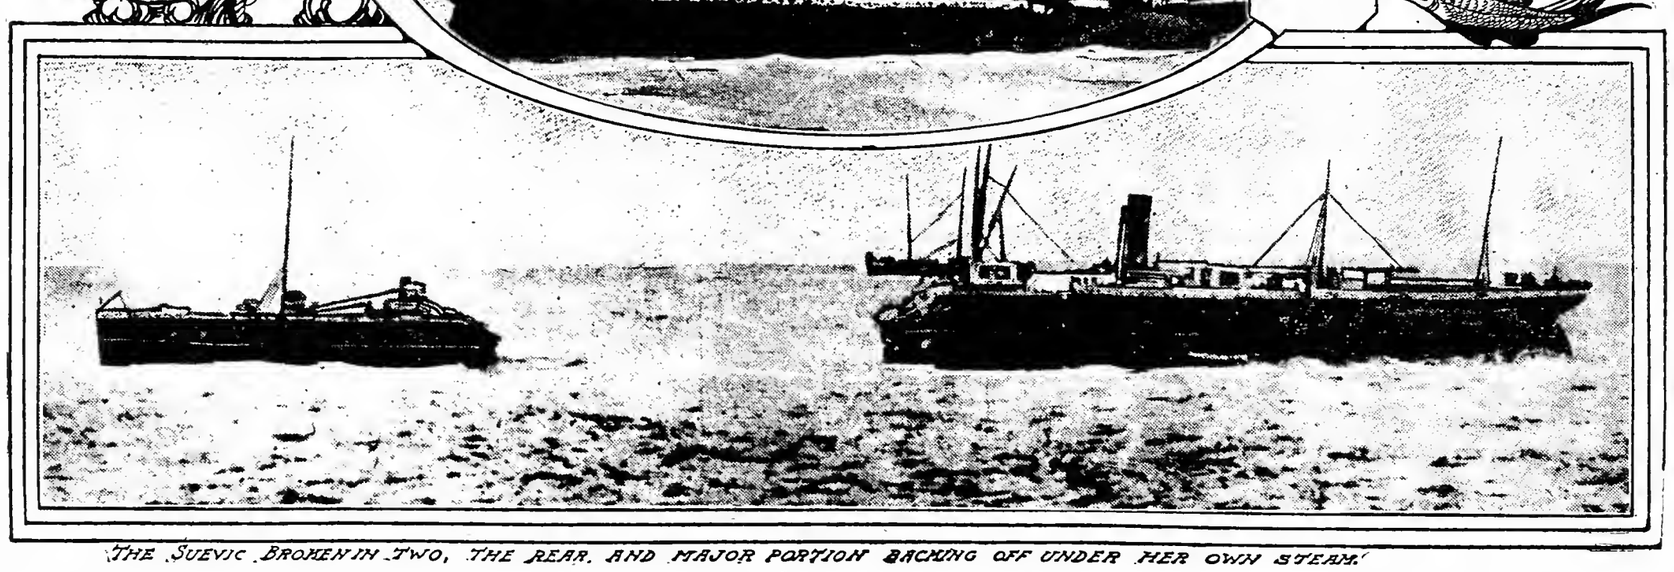
THE TRUNCATED SUEVIC IN DOCK AT SOUTHAMPTON HER DECKS SHOWING THE WORK OF DYNAMITE

AS THE SUEVIC APPEARED BEFORE HER GROUNDING



ARRIVAL OF THE SUEVIC AT SOUTHAMPTON AFTER HER REMARKABLE JOURNEY



THE SUEVIC BROKEN IN TWO, THE REAR AND MAJOR PORTION BACKING OFF UNDER HER OWN STEAM.

White Star Liner Suevic Reaches Port Under Her Own Steam with 100 Feet of Her Bow Missing.

THE accompanying pictures tell the story even more graphically than could the pen of what has been described as one of the most wonderful of salving feats ever accomplished. The big White Star liner Suevic went ashore on Stag Rock, near the Lizard, on March 17. She was steaming at a 13.14 knot speed on her way to London, and she grounded so hard and fast that all efforts to free her were useless. Her passengers were landed in safety and a part of her cargo was removed.

It became apparent to the officials of the Salvage Association and the management of the White Star Line that only a part of the Suevic could be saived. An examination showed that the after part, containing the engines, was practically undamaged, as the watertight bulkheads had been closed.

It was decided to cut off the bow of the stranded craft and try to save the best part of her hull. Not only was this accomplished successfully by the use of dynamite, but the Suevic, with engines throbbing, backed away from the rocks on which she had been fast, leaving a hundred odd feet of her bow behind her. With the aid of four powerful tugs she reached Southampton in safety, and she is now in dry dock there. A new bow will be fastened on to her, when, it is expected, she will be as good as ever.

On March 21 a salvage steamer got alongside the Suevic and began taking off cargo. Investigation showed the vessel was fast in the grip of the rocks from her No. 3 hatch to her prow. The cutting operations were begun on the 28th. The break was made through at No. 3 hatch, just aft of the jagged hole made by the rocks. The task required large quantities of explosives and necessitated not only extreme care, but the engineering ideas of experts.

A blast was placed in position, and after it had been exploded an examination of the hull had to be made and careful calculations made before the next charge could be put into position.

This process involved the greatest risk to the divers, who were frequently washed from their feet against the ship's side. They worked at a depth of forty feet and stood at times on fragments of two other wrecks.

In the uncertain light they saw ghastly evidence of the treacherous nature of the Cornish coast.

Owing to the vessel being loaded, they had to break her up from the outside, and this increased the difficulty of the undertaking. As holes were blasted in the Suevic's hull, carcasses of mutton kept washing out and dropping down upon them. The divers stuck to their task with a courage nothing short of heroism.

At 6 A. M. on April 2 the last charge of dynamite was exploded, and, with the breaking out of a number of plates on the starboard side, the Suevic's hull was parted. Soon after the vessel's engines began to work and she backed off into deep water minus her bow. Tugs were waiting, and under their guidance she successfully made the trip to Southampton, a distance of 170 miles, and entered the harbor at 9 o'clock on the morning of April 4.

The length of the ship that has been salved is about 400 feet, leaving about 184 feet still on the rocks. This includes No. 1 hold, which was submerged, containing copra, wool, and general cargo. The contents of holds Nos. 2 and 3, consisting chiefly of food supplies, have been also lost. So far as can be ascertained, the cargo that has been actually salved amounts to about $10,000.

The portion of the hull of the Suevic salved is computed to be worth at least $750,000, while the salvage operations are expected to cost something like $250,000.

The salving of the ship, therefore, represents a saving to the underwriters of half a million dollars.

It is interesting to note that this process of salving, which is of such great importance to owners and insurance people, originated in Liverpool some years ago. Its first successful application was in the case of the Milwaukee, which subsequently had a new bow built and attached, and went into active service again. This task was carried out by the Liverpool Salvage Association. The next successful instance was that of the Highland Fling.

Mr. Hennessy's Reflections on the Excitements of Advocating Peace

DID ye happen to read how minny was killed and wounded?" asked Mr. Hennessy.

"Where?" inquired Mr. Dooley.

"At th' Peace Conference," answered Mr. Hennessy. "Fr'm th' accounts iv th' corrispondints who survived 'twas th' turr'ble affair. It began in Carnegie Hall th' other day and continued on th' sidewalk outside. It raged in Cooper Union and almost wr-recked th' Hotel Asthor. I must run out and get th' latest Peace extr-ra, Mar-rtin. I want to know who killed Sthead. Somebody did. Somebody, praysumibly Andy Carnegie or Sup'rintindint iv Schools Maxwell sthole up behind Sthead, mutthering, "Yure time's up!" an' disthroyed him with a blackjack. I'm sure iv that.

"Who's Sthead? Mar-rtin, I'm ashamed iv ye. Soon ye will be askin' who James J. Jiffries is. Sthead is th' gr-reatest loss that war iver had. If he had lived in Napoleon's time Napoleon wud have died. If he had been an ancient Roman, Julius Caysar wud have ben a bitther disapp'intment to Shakespeare. Sthead is th' gr-reatest fighter in th' English language. An' a peace conf'rince is th' finest place in th' wor-rid f'r Sthead.

"Why did they call it a Peace Conf'rince? To tell it apar-rt fr'm its twin brother, the battle iv Gittysburg. Peace, I wud have ye know, Mar-rtin, is th' up-to-date name f'r war. An' th' Peace Conf'rince at Carnegie Hall will be raymimbered and lovingly fought over agin by future ginerations to whom th' wor-rds Waterloo an' Bunker Hill will sound like disorderly Sanskrit ixclamations. Books like 'Th' Fifteen Gr-reatest Battles of Hist'ry' will be replaced by 'Th' Crucial Moment at Carnegie Hall,' or 'How Sthead Cleared th' Platfrom.' Yis, Mar-rtin Dooley.

"Ye see, it all came about this way. 'I think a Peace Conf'rince wud be an iligant and inthristin' Spring divarsion,' sez Andy Carnegie. So speakin' he rubbed two bank books togither, th' way Aladdin rubbed his lamp, an' a Peace Conf'rince appeared in Carnegie Hall.

"'Wher-re's th' fight?' scz all th' peace dillygates, takin' off their coats. Andy was delighted. 'This is goin' to be more fun thin I thought,' he sez. 'I see now why Tiddy Ronsenfelt likes peace. It gives th' individ'l scr-rapper a much bigger chance thin a pr-romiscuous battle.' An' with these wor-rds he threw open Carnegie Hall to th' masses iv th' American people and addrissed th' followin' tilegram to Tiddy:

"'Ring-side, Carnegie Hall.

"'Come on. It's th' finest thing since San Juan Hill. Sthead is here. He can beat ye by a parrygraph an' a half. Bring th' Big Stick. 'Yures f'r Universal Peace. ANDY.'

"Thin he rang th' bell an' sthepped into th' ring. 'Ladies an' gintlemen,' he sez. 'I take pleasure in inthroducin' to ye th' gr-reatest aggrigation iv peace dillygates in captivity.' 'Plaized to meet ye all,' sez Sthead, pushin' Andy aside. 'Sp'akin' iv peace, phwat a fine thing war is, is it not?' 'Shut up!' yells Andy. ''Tis not ye'er tur-rn. Th' fir-rst man on th' programme is Profissor Munsterberg iv th' Harvard War School. Ladies an' gintlemen, I take pleasure in inthroducin' him to ye all.'

'Delighted to know ye,' scz Sthead, bowin' right an' left. Andy looks at him in disgust. 'Will ye shut up, ye Cockney monologue,' he says. 'Niver,' says Sthead. But Munsterberg br-rushes him aside and begins to speak.

"'Ladies and gintlemen,' he begins. 'Andy, Andy, th' Profissor has brass knuckles,' yells Baron d'Eastrivertunnels de Cornstarch, th' Fr-rinch welterweight. 'Ye lie!' scz Munsterberg, 'Hooray f'r Roosevelt!' yells th' audience, catchin' th' dilicate compliment to th' Prisidint. 'Meet me at daybreak in Weehawken,' scz the Baron, in th' most beautiful Fr-rinch, 'an' I'll stuff ye full iv lead, ye iscaped pretzel.' But at this point Andy smothered th' Frinchman in a fur coat, and Munsterberg raysumed:

"'Th' wor-rd peace,' he sez, 'cannot be pr-ronounced in th' hearin' iv a German without makin' him think iv that most glorious thing, th' Ger-rman Arrmy. How th' Ger-rman nation adores th' Ger-rman ar-rmy!' 'Why, ye shameless Teutonic Bratwurst,' screams Andy, ''tis th' dread iv that same arrmy that has made thousands iv Germans live in Pittsburg.' 'Poor fellows! Poor, unfort'nate fellows!' sez Munsterberg, bur-rstin' into tears. That was too much f'r Andy. 'Kindly sthep outside with me,' sez he to th' Profissor, fingerin' a large brick. 'Sure,' scz Munsterberg, exthractin' a piece iv loaded pumpernickel fr'm his coat-tail pocket. An' they both rushed f'r th' dure.

"'Ivery time I sec th' dove iv peace,' sez Sthead, scrambling on th' platform, 'I slap th' bir-rd's face.' 'Yure time's up!' shrieks Baron d'Eastrivertunnels dc Cornstarch. 'Did ye allude to me?' asks Sthead. 'I did,' sez th' Baron. 'Thin ye ar-re a Parisian shrimp,' sez Sthead, composedly. 'Stip out on Sivinth Avenue with me, will ye?' sez th' Baron. And they both dashed f'r th' dure.

"'Peace is nothin' but a rist cure f'r war,' sez a Dutch dillygate, fightin' his way to th' fr-ront. He was greeted with a hail of buildin' materials.

"'Stop!' he sez, holdin' up his large Dutch indix finger. 'Stop, I say. I wud have ye know that me motto is, "In time iv peace prepare f'r Peace Conf'rinces." Consequently,' he sez, 'me pockets ar-re filled,' he sez, 'with Dutch cheeses iv a ferocious character,' he sez, 'and I'll make th' fir-rst man who throws innything at me look like a Wilsh rabbit,' he sez.

"Not a brick stirred. Th' Dutchman raysumed his inthr-rupted speech.

"'If innywan sez to me that in time iv peace 'tis not well to be pripared f'r war, I at wanst see my advantage an' knock him down,' he sez.

"'Back to Rottherdam!' yells Sthead, runnin' in an' throwin' th' Dutchman out th' window. Thin he tur-rned to th' audience. 'To be here to-day,' he sez, 'fills me with th' nearest approach to imotion that an Englishman can feel,' he sez. 'I feel that I cud sphake f'r hours—f'r days. Me bosom swells with—who threw that bottle? I say, who threw that bottle? If whoiver it was will kindly sthip into Cinthr'l Par-rk with me, I'll——'

"'Didn't I tell ye to shut up, ye gr-raphophone?' scr-reams Andy, dashing into th' hall. 'Yure time's up, Sthead.'

"'I have two minutes,' sez Sthead, with dignity.

"'Two minutes ye'er grandmother," sez Andy.

"'Back at you,' sez Sthead, takin' off his coat.

"But they wer-re inth'r-rupted by th' arrival iv a clergyman with an axe. 'I am Bishop Potter,' he sez, 'and I'm sorry to disturb ye all,' he scz, 'but,' he sez, with a sidelong glance at th' axe, 'I wish to know if th' Riv'rind Mr. Dix is here.' 'That's him vaultin' out th' window,' sez Andy. 'Thanks,' sez th' Bishop, doin' th' same. 'How inthristed th' Amirican clergy is in th' peace movement,' begins Sthead. 'Yure time is up!' yells iv'rybody in th' hall. 'I have two minutes!' scz Sthead, rollin' up his sleeves an' divin' into th' thick iv th' conf'rince. 'Hooray!' sez th' Frinch welterweight, punchin' iverybody in sight. 'Wow!' scz Andy, floorin' th' Frinch welterweight. 'Let us have peace!' sez th' Dutchman, floorin' Andy. 'Call out th' militia!' sez Gov'nor Hughes. An' th' ixercises closed with a disp'rit struggle bitween th' gallant Sivinth Rigimint, intirely unsupported, an' th' whole body iv peaceinfuriated dillygates fr'm all over th' wor-rld.

"And ther-re ye ar-re, Martin. That's a Peace Conf'rince. Why, th' name no more ixprisses th' goings-on in Carnegie Hall last week thin a Packingtown label does th' kalcidoscopic ingrejints iv potted ham. The idea! War is a bad thing, Mar-rtin, an' full iv th' most objectionable happ'nings, but, at lasht, in war times, we call a battle a battle. We don't say, 'Sure and that was a turr'ble five o'clock tay where Gin'ral Gollyflopper lost his life!' or, 'Wasn't that a hayroic cavilry charge at th' bridge whist par-rty?' No, Mar-rtin. Let us give th' divil his due. War is bad, but it is no hypocrite."

"Ye're quite right," said Mr. Dooley. "This universal peace under Marquis iv Queensberry rules might just as well be called by th' more cuphonious ter-rm iv indoor war. But Tiddy has th' right idea, don't ye think, Jawn? Can ye think iv a bettther doctrine than 'Peace with Rightcousness?'"

"Yis," said Mr. Hennessy, "Peace without Sthead."

For the Gourmet's Table

DELICIOUS little cantaloupes, grown in Southern France; Limerick hams, Rotterdam cheeses, gluten bread, made in Paris; Belgian peaches, South African plums and nectarines, and hothouse strawberries raised in New Jersey are among the rare and costly food products offered by exclusive dealers in New York at present. And their patronage is no less exclusive, for only persons of great wealth and those so-called epicures who make the selection of foods their chief object of life would think of paying the prices demanded for such dainties.

The French melons are no larger than a good-sized apple, and resemble more than anything else the small American mango. They have a smooth, dark green surface and are a rich salmon color inside. They are deliciously sweet and juicy, requiring just a little seasoning of salt to heighten their pungency. Packed in ice chambers and brought to this country on the fast line of French steamers, these melons loose but little of their freshness and flavor. From $1.50 to $2 each is the price one has to pay for these exotics.

No more delicious cheese has ever been imported to this country than the little Rotterdam cheeses. They look like small pin cushions. Being double creamers, they are much richer and softer than any of the Holland cheeses. A firm in Boston has the sole control of their importation, and the one dealer in New York who handles them has to get his Rotterdam cheeses from the Hub. Each cheese weighs a pound and costs 60 cents.

American palates are not, as a rule, educated up to the Limerick ham, cured by the old-fashioned hand process and smoked over peat fires. This is the first season these hams have been placed on the New York market in perfection. Ignorance of how to pack them to prevent their flavor from being injured by the sea voyage has in previous years made dealers here afraid to handle these hams. It took an American to teach the Irish producer how to do up and pack these hams, and then it took an American dealer to buy the exclusive right of selling them here. It costs 50 cents a pound to buy Limerick ham, but, expensive as they are, they are in great demand. If one does not understand the art of cooking these peculiarly cured hams it is throwing money away to buy one.

The gluten bread baked in Paris is the daintiest and lightest thing in bread stuffs. It is made of pure gluten, which cannot be kneaded, but must be mixed with water and whipped like the white of an egg before being baked. This Parisian gluten bread looks like baked lace. Each loaf weighs one ounce and costs fifteen cents.

Belgian peaches come here each one rolled in soft cotton batting and each one put in a separate box. They always come in good condition. The price of this fruit is 30 cents each. There is nothing in the realm of fruits more delicious than a Belgian peach. Raised in hothouses, with with most watchful care, they are taken from the trees, which are trained against walls, when in just the right condition.

South African plums and nectarines are three dollars a dozen and not half so good as our native grown fruit of the same class.

Jersey hothouse strawberries at three dollars a box—just twelve berries in a box—are the most expensive and most delicious native table luxury to be had. A club in St. Louis ordered one hundred boxes of these berries for a dinner yesterday. They were shipped from New York.

NON-CHURCH GOING—AND AN ENGLISH CLERGYMAN

The Decline of the Public's Interest in Religious Institutions Moves the Federation to Make Appeal to the President—What Dr. Aked Has to Say Concerning His Mission.

SO great has been the decline of interest in churches on the part of a vast number of New York City's population that, as a final resort, officers of the Federation of Churches recently made a pilgrimage to Washington to impress, if possible, the exhortatory services of President Roosevelt. The President has shown such a versatile enthusiasm for such a variety of causes that the delegation were sure that they would find him responsive to their cause. The conference was between the President and the Rev. Anson P. Atterbury, the Rev. Donald Sage Mackay, and Dr. Walter Laidlaw.

These reverend gentlemen were armed with an arsenal of statistics, all tending to show how the churches were losing their hold on the people, and that something must be done to revive interest. Otherwise the Church, as a whole, would soon be a comparative emptiness. The delegation gave a narration of what they believed had brought about this condition, pointing out especially that the working classes had drifted away from the Church and apparently, notwithstanding attempted revivals and ingratiating appeals, persisted in keeping way. The President displayed deep interest and promised to aid the cause in every way possible.

Church's Strong Hold Gone.

The officers of the Federation of Churches realize that to conceal the facts of the crisis which now confronts the Church would be futile. Their aim is to give the widest publicity to the strange stagnation which has set in, and they have gone to much expense in investigating what they believe to be the causes back of the popular attitude. Their statistics are voluminous, and it is not to be doubted that they are accurate as far as they go. The contention which arises is not as to the facts themselves. It is as to the interpretation of them. Every observer knows that the Church, as a whole, no longer possesses the strong hold that it did in decades gone by. Why is this so?

In property, as the Federation points out, the Church is richer than it ever was. It is plethoric with material wealth. In New York City the churches own at least $204,000,000, which is exempt from taxation. In the early days of the various religions the Church had little or no property. Caves and forests often sufficed for religious services. Despite every adverse circumstance, in the teeth of relentless persecution, the spiritual element was the predominating factor. It illumined religion and made it a vast power. But now that the Church is gorged with property it finds that it no longer has a hold, either spiritual or material, upon the masses of people. They reject its call and its forms; they give little attention to its teachings.

This condition is one which has affrighted the Federation and made it strive for an explanation. It does not say that all of the individual churches are rich in wealth. On the contrary, it specifically points out that many churches have a precarious time of it. But this also arises from the fact that their congregations have dwindled. Viewed as a whole, the Church is now vastly richer in property than it ever was. Never were there such splendid edifices of worship; the accompaniments and equipment and the style and clerical salaries are more sumptuous and commanding than ever before in the history of the Church in this city. While, however, the Church's material interests have bounded forward in increase of its real estate values, in costliness of structures, and in extent of endowments, its claim on the religious feelings of the masses has correspondingly declined. The little brick church of a century or fifty years ago was better filled proportionately and exercised far greater influence than many of our present capacious and impressive temples of worship.

Christians and Jews Suffer Alike.

Accurate statistics of Church conditions say of fifty years ago are lacking, but from various accounts it is believed that the church-going population then was a sizable part of the whole. There was then about one Protestant church for every 1,000 of population. Now in many of the districts there is less than one Protestant church for each 10,000 of population. The average is one church for each 6,500 of the population. While population is constantly advancing, Protestant church interest is receding. But the Protestant churches are not the only sufferers from this tremendous impact of popular indifference. The Catholic Church in a lesser degree is confronted by the same condition, while the Jewish Church surpasses all others in the astounding number of its co-religionists who never see the interior of a synagogue. As nearly as can be gathered from the rather defective plan of the census of 1900, reinforced by subsequent investigations, the city's Protestant population now numbers about 1,800,000, the Roman Catholic 1,500,000, and the Jewish 800,000.

It would seem from an investigation carried on by the Federation of Churches that 5.7 per cent. of Roman Catholic families fail to attend church, 28 per cent. of Protestant families, and 63 per cent. of Jewish families.

These are certainly very striking facts; and the condition of public passivity is so evident that they do not tax our credulity. A half century ago the minister's sermon was an important contribution to the week's events. It drew crowds and usually was copiously, if not wholly, reported in the daily press. The sermons of that day were mainly theologic in character, but they enlisted interest. Nowadays sermons are seldom reported, unless they have something in them of a distinct public nature or unusual interest. Few readers feel that they have missed anything if they fail to see the ordinary prosaic sermon. They prefer livelier news.

Present Ills of Greater Appeal.

Facing such changed conditions the Federation of Churches is anxiously groping about for the causes and the possible remedy. Several centuries ago the Church dominated law as well as morals, and could compel its adherents under penalty to go to church. That day is long since past. The only way now that the Church can hold the people is by the moral force of its teachings. But it has discovered that the masses of people are no longer attracted by the nature of this moral force. The Church thinks that it is teaching the same religious truths that it always was, and wonders at the loss of faith on the part of great numbers of people. It teaches virtue and sobriety, patience and morality, faith in God, and good dealing with all men. That millions should no longer care to hear its word has come to it as a matter of intense surprise.

It has found a ready explanation in the supposition that it has drifted away from the plain people. The more progressive spirits in the Federation have determined, and freely say, that the Church has become one-sided in practice. The masses, they point out, are no longer satisfied with the doctrine that they should be content with their lot on earth and expect their reward hereafter. The present is a reality while the future is a vague unknown. The present has many ills and wrongs which must be overcome, and the Church must help or die from stagnation. Representative workingmen have thus notified the Federation's leaders, who have been liberal-minded enough to take heed. In seeking out the cause why the workers, as a rule, take no interest in the churches, it was found that the workers had a distrust of the Church. The worker regarded the Church as an apologist for present conditions; it preaches down to his class and counsels it to be good and patient, but does nothing to bring about changed economic conditions whereby justice will prevail. The worker, so these church investigators have been told, does not relish having to live a life of privation or uncertainty, a constant struggle all his days, and then be told to be content with his lot and abide in patience. If poverty and humility are such noble things, why does not the Church preach their benefits to those who are surfeited with wealth and luxury, and to whom the Church toadies and from it begs endowments?

The Federation investigators were quite shocked to hear such comments from many workers with whom they came in contact. But they thought about them, and concluded that since these criticisms were so general, and all of the same tenor, there must be something in them. They heard further strictures. The working class, they learned, regards the Church as completely out of sympathy with real humanitarian aspirations. That it indulges in worn-out and mummified dogmas while neglecting to face the question of how to do away with wage-slavery, or the exploitation of human flesh,—in brief, the great, burning economic questions of the day which are engrossing the attention of millions upon millions of workers. It was all very well, the workers argued, for the clergy to counsel patience and faith. But did the clergy have to live in a few tenement rooms? Did they experience the pangs of uncertainty as to how long their jobs would last? Did they know what it was to face dispossess proceedings? Or to be down to the last dollar without any prospects? Did the clergy have to work day in and day out in factories, and stifle in the tenements in the heat of Summer, and have no other playgrounds for their children but the streets?

These were a few of the bitter criticisms. On investigating, the Federation found that there were 661,741 children in the tenements, outnumbering the whole population of any city in the country except Chicago and Philadelphia. At least 450,000 must take to the streets in the torrid days of Summer for a breathing spell. They began to see that the Church had not kept in touch with the people, but had closed its eyes to great evils which had grown up and which had to be abolished, whatever interest might be offended. They got a glimmering of the workers' attitude that if the Church had a moral force, that it should be used not to perpetuate injustice, but to assist in overthrowing it. Otherwise its power for influencing the people would be gone forever.

This expressed position of the working classes may be extreme, but the Federation found that it represented varying degrees of current thought among them. The worker, it was learned, was not opposed to religion as religion, provided the essence was practiced as well as merely taught. The investigators found that the average worker was sincerely religious in the true sense, but objected to religious institutions being made an agency for smoothing over what he considered his exploitation for profit and his consequent oppression.

The attitude of the working class having been established, it seemed clear to the officers of the Federation that to save itself from extinction as a moral force, the Church must get back to the people. This may seem easy of projection, but its accomplishment will probably be difficult. If the clergy denounce certain injustices, as Henry Ward Beecher did slavery, a portion of the community who do not believe that the conditions are unjust will take offense. As this portion is composed largely of the rich and influential, who control many of the churches, the path of the minister who undertakes to champion sweeping reforms, striking at the very basis of industrial society, is likely to be a hard one.

But without speculating further on what the future may hold in store, the fact stands at present that the Church acknowledges that its hold on the people has been badly shaken. The Roman Catholic Church, we have seen, has been affected least of all, largely because perhaps of the religious spirit of the enormous influx of immigration and its parochial methods. It is a singular fact that this denomination, which was practically outlawed in New York State until 1788, should now be the strongest of all in actual operation and vitality.

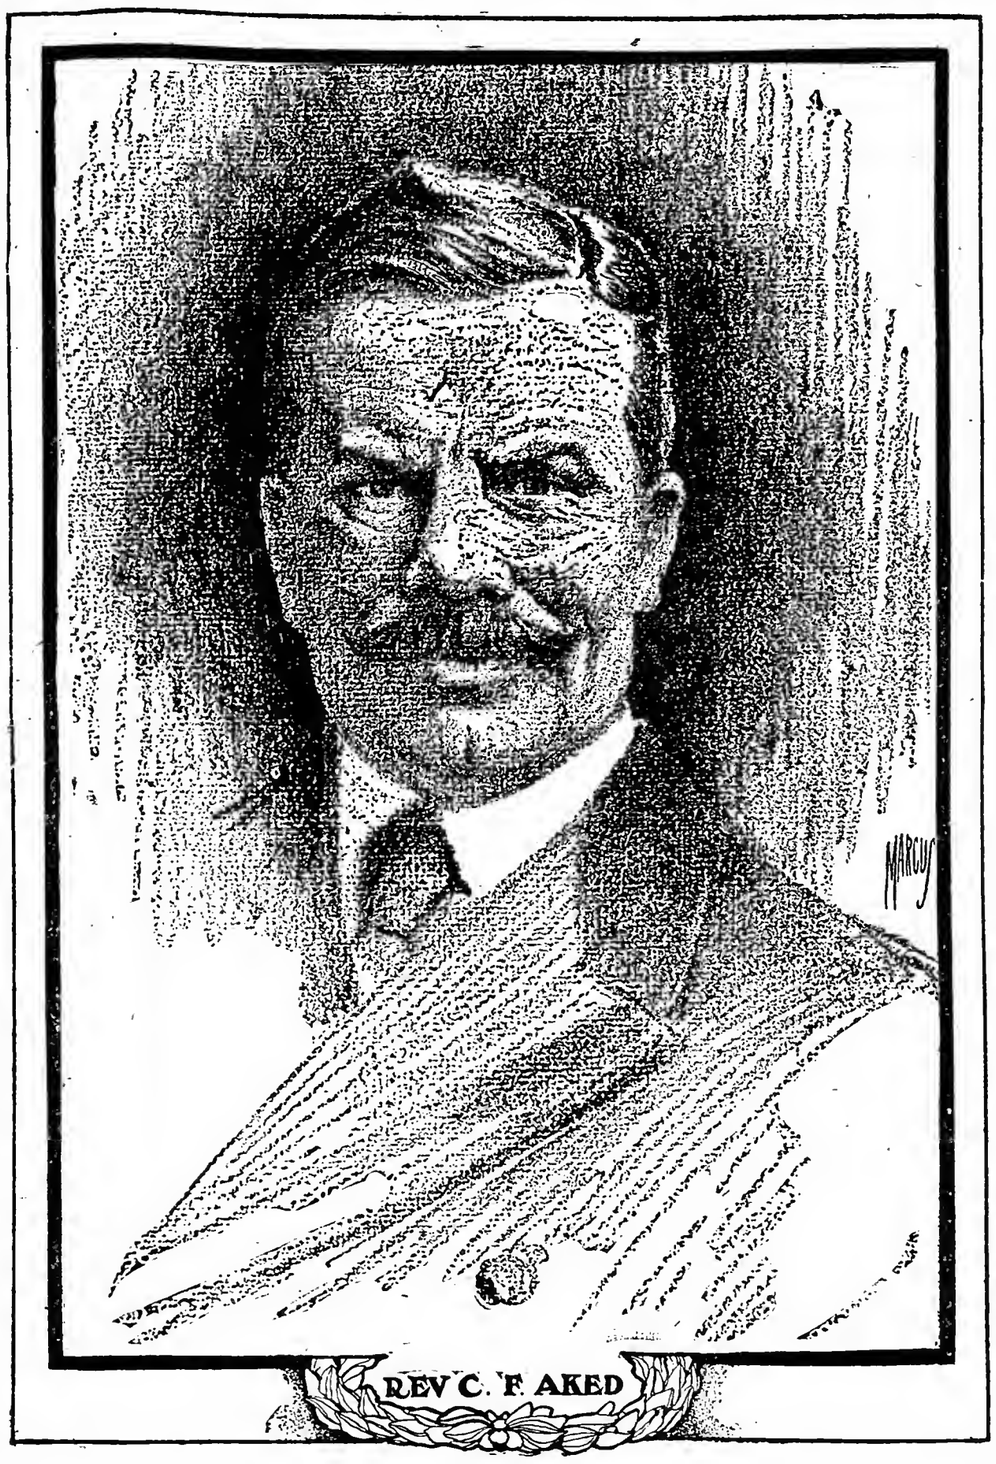
Original Power of the Scriptures.

The economic beliefs of the working classes, however, are not the sole cause of the decadence of church attendance, although the Federation ascribes them as such. The fact is that among the permanent absentees from churches and synagogues, are large numbers of persons in fair circumstances. Clearly, then, some other contributing cause has been working.

Is it the result of scientific research and discovery? Has science so completely exploded old dogmas, myths, and superstitions that theology has ceased to be a force to conjure with? There was a time when every line in the Bible was accepted as divine inspiration, but, one after another, various of its chronicles have been subjected to severe doubt, so that even in the Church itself there are the doubters who pass under the phrase of "higher criticism." It may be said in all moderation that in many quarters Scriptures are now held to be largely divested of all supernatural origin and that the old-time theology has become shorn of the stupendous power it once enjoyed.

In newspapers, magazines, and books the people read constantly of scientific onslaughts on this Biblical story or that time-worn dogma. They cannot reconcile the discoveries of science with theological teachings which have sprung from primitive times, when true knowledge was slight and the mind was mystified by occurrences which are now known to us as natural phenomena. All this has undoubtedly had its effect, although just how far no one can say.

But does this imply that the city is becoming atheistic? Hardly. True religion ever remains religion, however much the theological wrapping is torn away. Although New York City fifty years ago had more churches in proportion to population, and although they were better attended, crime of all kinds was rampant, and both political and commercial corruption were comparatively greater and more brazen than now. The records prove this.



Dr. Aked on His Mission.

The English Divine Has Been Informed That Good Preachers Are Needed Here.

"WE want to know you, Dr. Aked."

"Know me? What do you mean?" The Rev. C. F. Aked, the English preacher who reached here last week to become pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church—the "Rockefeller Church"—turned to the reporter, puzzled.

"So much has been written about you," explained the reporter, "so much has been said of your resemblance to Spurgeon, your work in Pembroke Chapel, Liverpool, and of your future here, I want to know what sort of a man you really are."

"I have been interviewed so many times I begin to be frightened," Dr. Aked replied, laughing. "I wonder if it isn't better to say nothing? Well, what is it you want to know?"

As Dr. Aked sat down in a parlor of his hotel there seemed to be some foundation for the stories that he resembled President Roosevelt. The English preacher is a man of vigorous energy—of virile masculinity. There was a certain intensity in the way he sat cross-legged in his chair, with one arm thrown over the back. The steady gaze of his blue eyes, his square jaw and sandy complexion suggested the same thing. He talked in an incisive way. His dress was that of a conservative business man. Although he had been in America barely twenty-four hours he was already very busy. John D. Rockefeller had just called. Two messages from newspapers were received and disposed of during the chat. Other callers were waiting.

"Well, what questions do you wish to ask?"

"One of the trustees of your church, speaking of your future here," replied the reporter, "said this morning that he hoped for fine things from you in the way of Christian work—of practical Christianity. What is your idea of practical Christianity?"

"The Christianity I try to teach," replied Dr. Aked, "is an appeal to the intelligence, the ideals, the hearts of men, the appeal for right thinking and right living. Spurgeon once said the people he preached to were like a dust heap, but a dust heap filled with thousands of little steel filings. 'I hold the magnet,' he would say, 'and I draw to it the little particles of steel in the dirt.' He meant, of course, that he aroused in his hearers that something that inspired them to be better men and women. I do not consider my hearers dust. They are much more to me. Neither is it a case of rich or poor. I do not see what that has to do with it. I do not ask a workingman to come to me as a workingman. I want him and all others to come simply as men and women, and give me their attention and intelligence—their naked intelligence. I have always worked for three things—peace, temperance, and right living."

Reaching the People.

"How can the people be reached? Much is heard of so-called magnetism of public speakers. Is it not really a sympathy between the preacher and the listener?"

"To me the preacher and his congregation bear an intimate relation, one to the other. The thoughts of the people I preach to seem to come to me as a mist which I must give back to them as a flowing stream. I receive from them, but I must return more than they give. Is it not Desmosthenes who says that the preacher must bestow with his lips first, then with his feelings? A preacher must have this sense of personal contact. A man preaching with his nose buried in a manuscript can do nothing."

"Do you expect to give much time to public speaking—I mean outside of your church on public occasions or in lectures?"

"I have worked in that way for a long time. Now I begin to feel that my first and chief duty is to my pulpit and my congregation. I have been told that good preachers are needed here—fine men who can reach the hearts and intelligence and enter into the lives of the people."

"It was said recently," remarked the reporter, "that one person in nine goes to church—they're not church members, but merely attend church services."

"In Liverpool about one person in ten goes to church. In Manchester it is one in ten."

"If it is one in nine here, how can you reach the eight who do not go?"

"Appeal to them through the things they feel and think about—their work, their public interests, their every-day lives, but above all appeal to their common sense and their intelligence."

"Is it not the fact that non-churchgoers are more or less openminded in the matter of religion?"

"There is probably a difference between America and England in that respect," Dr. Aked replied. "I think Americans are the more openminded. It is wonderful what a grasp of affairs, what a broad horizon you have here. Americans are like a people turning to the light; a people with their eyes fixed on the East. One feels that in this country, some new element, some electric spark has been added to the old peoples to lift them to bigger things."

One topic had been avoided in the conversation—the practical work that Dr. Aked might do among the vicious and degraded of the city. Dr. Aked is as well known in England for his fight against vice and intemperance as for his ability as a preacher. He had declined to discuss what he might do in the same directions in New York until he had learned to know the city and the conditions that prevailed here.

"My church here has two missions and a fine settlement—the Neighborhood Club," he remarked. "I will give much attention to them. I want to go among your settlement workers to see, to learn. What of the people who come to you in such numbers from other lands? What is to become of them?"

Dr. Aked now turned interviewer, asked many questions on the familiar phases of life on the east side. All the earnestness that was in him seemed to be concentrated in the topic. The way men became Americans, the schools, clubs, and settlements—each became a matter of intense interest.

"I must see that club," he would interject. "I must see the boys— Where is that school? Yes, yes, I must go there. What is to become of these people?"

How He Became a Minister.

Finally the chat drifted to the odd chance that made Dr. Aked a minister. As a poor boy he went to London intending to go to New Zealand and settle there. A few hours before his ship sailed, he passed the house of a minister and stopped to call on him. When he left the house the trip to the Antipodes had been abandoned; the youth had decided to become a preacher.

"I had thought before that day of entering the ministry," Mr. Asked explained, "but had no money and did not know how I could get enough for my studies. The chat with the minister showed me the way. I found I did not need money to go to college. In England they have a system by which a student who is recommended by three churches can prepare for the ministry free of cost. When I learned this, the way was clear."

"During the Boer war, Mr. Aked, you were mobbed in the streets of Liverpool because you insisted on delivering pro-Boer lectures. Was your attitude in the interest of peace, or did you think the Boers were right?"

"I work in the interests of peace, as I said, but I also felt the Boers had a just cause," replied Mr. Aked. "There has been a great change of sentiment in England since the war. You can hardly find an Englishman now who does not believe in his heart that the Boers were right. The men who stoned me in the streets think as I do now. Why, they cheered me twelve months after the riots and wanted to send me to Parliament."

"In other words, you were ahead of your time?"

"I formed my opinion twelve months before they did, that's all. I often think that the principle the Boers fought for in South Africa is the same that the English Baptists strive for and the principle that caused the American Revolution. The so-called dissenting element in England must contend with the Established Church and all the restrictions that term implies. They demand freedom of thought and action, free from interference. That demand is what you find in the Declaration of Independence."

Tercentenary of Protestantism in America

First Services Under the Auspices of the Church of England Were Held in Jamestown, Va., in April, 1607—Plans for the Celebration.

THE oldest Protestant Church in the United States will celebrate its three hundredth anniversary this year. It was in April, just three centuries ago, that the first company of Virginia colonists entered Chesapeake Bay and, disembarking at a little peninsula to which they afterward gave the name of Jamestown, erected the first building on this continent dedicated to the service of the Christian religion according to the forms and tenets of the Church of England Episcopal Church. This year the triennial session of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church will be held in Richmond, Va., and the occasion will be marked by a special celebration commemorating the 300 years of Episcopalianism in this country.

"This tercentenary celebration will be a simple one," said Bishop David H. Greer to a TIMES reporter. "At the last session of the General Convention, held in Boston three years ago, a special committee was appointed composed of George C. Thomas and George W. Pepper of Philadelphia and myself. This committee was empowered to collect what we have called a 'Missionary Thank Offering' from the Church throughout the United States, to be presented to the General Convention at its next session in Richmond this October. This offering is being collected by subcommittees appointed in all the dioceses throughout the Church in the United States, and when it is completed it is hoped that it will represent in concrete form the tribute of every member of the Church given in honor of its three centuries' growth in this country. Following the religious service at which this offering will be presented in October, a mass meeting will probably be held in some public hall in Richmond, at which noted speakers will celebrate the history of the Episcopal Church in the United States. Then, as an additional and most significant feature in the celebration of this anniversary, the Bishop of London, Rt. Rev. A. F. Winnington-Ingram, will open the session of the General Convention with an address—thus emphasizing the historic fact that it was under the direct authority of his predecessors in office that the English Church in America was founded and maintained until the days of the American Republic.

"The collection of the special thank offering in honor of the Jamestown Church settlement represents the most thorough and elaborate effort to raise a fund for missionary purposes that has been made by the general church. To swell this fund the various subcommittees have endeavored to secure an offering from every man in the Church, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The women in the Church have not been asked to contribute for the reason that they are already engaged in the work of making a united offering for missions every three years, at each meeting of the General Convention. The movement is, therefore, confined to men, and the results will be turned over to the Board of Missions to be devoted by them to the spread of the Church at home and abroad."

The first Jamestown Church, whose tercentenary will be celebrated this year, was no more than an old sail fastened to four trees, with seats made of logs beneath, and a bar of wood between two trees for a pulpit.

"This was our church," wrote John Smith, "until we built a homely thing like a barne, set upon cratchets, covered with rafts, sedge and earth, so was also the walls; the best of our houses were of the like curiosity; but for the most part farre much worse workmanship that could neither well defend from wind nor rain." The preaching of sermons in this church was not much favored by the colonists apparently, for John Smith adds: "The preacher did aske me if it weare my pleasure to have a sermon; hee said hee was prepared for it. I made answere that our men were weary and hungry and that hee did see the tyme of the dale was farr past—and that if it pleased him, wee would spare him till some other tyme."

The historian of the Thanks Offering Committee, Dean Hodges of the Cambridge Theological School, points out that with this Jamestown settlement as a nucleus the Episcopal Church in this country existed mainly in Virginia and Maryland during the seventeenth century, and was administered by commissioners of the Bishop of London. In the eighteenth century it appeared in all the colonies and was fostered by missionaries of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. The lack of a Bishop in this country, however, was keenly felt among the clergy and laity of the Church, and numerous petitions were sent to England all through the colonial period to have this lack remedied. But it was not until 1784 that the first Bishop, Dr. Samuel Seabury, was consecrated at Aberdeen, Scotland, and sent to the United States.

The growth of the Episcopal Church in America during the colonial period was slow owing to the fact that the majority of the colonists, coming from England in search of religious freedom, viewed the Church of England in this country with undisguised enmity. Thus, outside of Virginia and Maryland, it was only in New York that the Episcopal Church was hospitably welcomed. The Dutch founders of this colony naturally had no quarrel with the latter Church. When the provinces came into English possession, the Dutch Reformed Congregation shared with their Anglican brethren the church at the Battery, the Dutch worshipping there in the morning, the English in the afternoon.

During the Revolution the Episcopal Church in general was considered a Tory company—and this notwithstanding the fact that such Revolutionary leaders as Washington, Jefferson, Marshall, Patrick Henry, Robert Morris, and James Madison belonged to its communion. Most of the clergy, however, had come from England in mature life, and all of them had been ordained there. As a natural consequence the great majority of them opposed the revolutionists and strove to uphold the Government from which their Church had always received its support.

The triumph of American Independence wrought a complete change in the organization of the Church. Prior to this it had been the "Church of England in America," now it became the "Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States," with a special form of government of its own administered by a "General Convention" composed of its clergy and laity. The preliminary meeting of this convention was held in Philadelphia, Sept. 27, 1785. The second meeting was held in the same city in 1789, in the same room in the State House where the National Constitution had previously been signed, and where now the Church Constitution was adopted.

Dean Hodges finds that these coincidences correspond with a remarkable likeness between the new National and Church governments, which he thus describes:

"Each was founded on a written constitution. By adopting this constitution, thirteen independent ecclesiastical provinces became the dioceses of one Church, as thirteen independent colonies had become the States of one Nation. Diocesan conventions answered to State conventions, and the General Convention to the Congress of the United States. The House of Clerical and Lay Deputies was like the House of Representatives, and the House of Bishops was like the Senate, except in the matter of tenure of office. The principles of representative government controlled the Church as they controlled the State. The congregation elected the vestry; the vestry, sometimes with the formal approval of the congregation, selected the rector. The rector and certain elected deputies from the congregation represented the parish in the Diocesan Convention. These representatives jointly chose the Bishop. The Bishop and certain elected deputies, clerical and lay, from the Diocesan Conventions, represented the diocese in the General Convention. In that convention no change could be made in the constitution or in the Prayer Book unless it was first enacted by one General Convention, then reported back to all the dioceses, and then at the next General Convention re-enacted. In one respect the Church was more democratic than the State; it gave no man executive authority. There was a Presiding Bishop, but no President. This likeness of the administration of the Church and of the State came naturally from the fact that the same men were engaged in the two transactions."

The organization and form of Church government, which was thus adopted in the first days of the American Republic controls the Episcopal Church to-day practically without modification. A radical difference between this and the Anglican form of government lies in the admission of the laity to the councils of the Church. Fifty years after the first General Convention another great step was taken in the development of the Church here, when it was officially proclaimed that "the whole Church is a missionary society and every baptized member of it a missionary." From this movement may be traced the beginnings of the great "institutional churches," which are pointed out as being the most significant and increasing feature of the growth of the Church to-day.

THE LATEST PRETENCE OF THE DUKE OF ORLEANS

Some American Sidelights Thrown Upon the Character of a Princeling Who Persists in Believing That He Is an Important Factor In the World's Progress.

WHILE the white-winged doves of Universal Peace are softly billing and cooing at each other, and all the world looks on with gentle sympathy, a very insistent note of discord and tumult is sounded by a small black crow of evil omen who flies under the name of the Duc d'Orleans, pretender to the throne of France. After a long period—for him—of innocuous desuetude, this threatened disturber of the peace of the world takes occasion to issue a manifesto from Brussels—he usually retires to some safe spot for such a purpose—declaring that the recent separation of Church and State in France, and the consequent disorders show a ripe opportunity for the renewal of a monarchical propaganda, and that he is ready and anxious to place himself at the head of a movement to overthrow the Republic and restore the glories of the Orleans dynasty. Incidentally, he will divorce his wife, his own cousin and a Bourbon Princess, because she is not popular with the French people. Awaiting the verdict of his dear and brave countrymen, he may make one of his periodic dashes toward the North Pole, perhaps anticipating as warm a welcome there as in the hearts of his people.

There is no evidence that this croak has in any way disturbed the cooing of the aforementioned doves, but the Duc d'Orleans does represent by inheritance and adoption a form of government that prevails in every nation of Europe, with the exception of France and Switzerland, and he is always a sufficiently picturesque figure in historical romance to attract more than passing attention. The writer, at one time, enjoyed exceptional opportunities for studying this firebrand, who seems to-day, in early middle age, as mad and irresponsible as, when a youth, he used to shock his very precise and dignified father, the late Comte de Paris, most erudite and amiable of men; but in his gentle and reflective way quite as helpless a leader of a lost cause as his more impetuous son and heir.

The Visit to America.

It was in the late Summer of 1890 that the Comte de Paris made his last visit to the United States. As an exile he had served with enthusiasm and distinction on the staff of Gen. McClellan during the famous Virginia campaign and the battles around Richmond. It was his after-ambition to write an exhaustive and authentic history of his participation in the civil war. The visit to this country was ostensibly in the interests of such a history, to go over the old battlefields again, to refresh the memory and recall many scenes of personal endeavor and danger. It was generally understood, however, that considerable political significance attached to the visit which might indicate the attitude of this Government toward the Comte de Paris's pretentions in France. If this were true, the Comte must have been grievously disappointed, for he received no official attention or courtesy from our Government whatever, although as a man of letters and a former officer in our army he was offered every consideration. Later on in Canada he was received with an acclaim and distinction that could have warmed the cockles of a King's heart.

With the Comte de Paris came his son, Phillipe d'Orleans, the subject of this sketch; the Comte d'Haussonville of the French Academy, the political agent and propagandist of the Orleans family, and one of the ablest men in France; Col. de Parseval, chief of staff and a vieux soldat of the finest type; Capt. Marham, treasurer of the household, and as companions and playmates for the Duc d'Orleans were the Duc d'Uzès, the Marquis de Lastyne, a descendant of Lafayette, and Dr. Récamier, a great-grandson of the famous beauty; young, élégants of the most pronounced Parisian type, whose families were also devoted Orleanists. The party went at once to Washington. It was my duty to join the Frenchmen there as chronicler of their American tour, received at first with formal courtesy, afterward with the true bon homme of the Gallic nature.

When it became apparent that President Harrison was too sny a Republican bird to be caught with any monarchistic chaff, an early departure for Richmond was arranged. The Comte de Paris, with all the tact of all the Louis and Philippes of France, had announced the purpose of his coming, and declined any escort except that which might be offered by the gentlemen of Richmond. That declaration won him at once the special favor of as charming a lot of cicerones as could be found in the South. Our route lay up the historic James River by steamer. The Comte de Paris seemed familiar with it all, and kept up a most interesting discourse on various points of interest to all except his son and the Duc d'Uzès. There happened to be two very pretty Richmond girls on board the steamboat who seemed to have been on a little social campaign of their own in Washington. There was also a piano. It wasn't often that Southern girls have royal personages to play their accompaniments and sing boulevard ditties for them. The two Dukes saw nothing of the James River scenery, and what was worse, when Richmond was reached and a reception committee was dancing attendance on the French pretender, his son and d'Uzès disappeared completely, and it was not until the next morning that they showed up at the hotel looking rather unfit for a long ride over battlefields. The Comte de Paris was visibly annoyed, but in the face of such a kindly welcome as he received he bottled his wrath, and the whole party set off on thoroughbred saddle horses for the field of Antietam, followed by a train of wagons loaded down with an elaborate luncheon.

High Jinks on the Battlefield.

A half-dozen or more old Confederate officers acted as guides and escorts, but instead of listening to these the Duc d'Orleans, who had a camera slung over his shoulder, began a series of horse races with the young Frenchmen of the party, and it wasn't until they were tired out that they consented to accommodate themselves to the sedate pace of the main party. At length, an eminence was reached for which the Comte de Paris had been looking and inquiring. It was thence that Gen. McClellan had directed the battle, and down the hill to the right and across a brook that still flowed peacefully on the Comte de Paris had dashed off under a heavy fire with dispatches to a distant brigade. His voice rose, as in perfect English he described one of the most exciting incidents of his youth, and turning to his son he exclaimed: "Et voila, Philippe, c'est par la, ou ton père"—but Philippe was otherwise engaged. With his back to the party he had leveled his camera at a big hay cart, upon which two little darkies were seated, and with a loud shout of, "Hey, there! restez-tranquils. Keep still, you lectle black ones," he snapped his lens just as his distinguished parent had reached the dramatic point of his recital. It took the very good luncheon that followed by the historic old mill and some very emphatic remonstrance before the Comte was restored to equanamity and a desire to continue his investigations and reminiscences.

For the rest of the afternoon the Duc d'Orleans was more subdued in his behavior, but the next day he did not show up at all on the ride to the Swamp, nor did the Duc d'Uzès, and it was understood that they had abandoned Mars for Venus, and had spent a much more agreeable day.

It is said that the Duc d'Orleans is anxious to add the lustre of literature to his other renown, and is at work on his father's notes to complete the history of the rebellion left unfinished at the latter's death. Judging from his own experiences in Virginia, it will be remarkable if in his story of battle and strategy he does not weave a fair vision of a golden-haired, blue-eyed maiden who occupied most of his time in the old commonwealth, and who, as rumor of the day had it, afterward followed his fortunes further afield. This was scarcely the man—he was just of age then—who could afterward exert any compelling force upon the destinies of his country.

A return to New York soon found the Duc and his young compatriot plunged into the gayeties of the Metropolis. At the end of September there was little society of note at home, but the theatres were in full blast, Coney Island and the roof gardens were yet available. Many excursions by land and water were agreeable, and the restaurants were a novelty.

Meeting an Old Friend.

One of the festivities most enjoyed was a dinner given at the Knickerbocker Club by Mr. George B. McClellan, son of the old General, to the son of the General's old aide-de-camp. It was at these feasts of reason and flows of soul that the Duc d'Orleans could always be expected to excel. He was a handsome, vigorous youth, as his picture shows, with a splendid appetite and a thirst as mellow as the vineyards of his own belle France. So, also, was he a bright, witty fellow, of whom it might be said as of Charles II., he never said a foolish thing and never did a wise one. After amusing the company all the evening he performed some wonderful feats at billiards, including a long rip of the cloth with a wonderful massé shot. Before midnight the party adjourned to do the Tenderloin, beginning with a visit to the Thirtieth Street Police Station, over which the genial Capt. Reilley then presided. Much honored by his distinguished visitors, the Captain gave them seats behind the rail as the midnight squad was turned out. At the head of the line was a huge policeman known as the "Walrus," from his long drooping mustaches which hung down on each side of his mouth. The Duc looked at him hard as he lined up in front of the desk, and the policeman returned the look with interest.

"Surely I know that man," said the Duc, and then addressing him: "Have you ever been to the Arctic?"

"Indeed I have, your royal Highness," returned the "Walrus," saluting, "and was a member of your honored father's last expedition."

And so it turned out to be. A hearty shake of the hand followed, and then the "Walrus" was ordered to fall out and the squad was dispatched without him, he being assigned to special duty as aide to his Royal Highness for that night. Whatever the subsequent proceedings were, deponeth sayeth not, but the "Walrus" was lost sight of and forgotten by the Duc until at a very early hour he decided that he would like to take home as a trophy a large marble foot that used to stand in front of a Broadway chiropodist's. His Royal Highness was armed with a heavy night stick with which he was industriously trying to pry the foot off its base, when the huge, tawny mustaches loomed out of an adjacent doorway and the "Walrus's" voice said gently:

"I wouldn't bother about that now, your Royal Highness. I'll send it home to you in the morning," and with his attention thus diverted the French pretender was quite content to move off in search of some other prey. I don't know whether the "Walrus" is still alive, but if he is, I certainly hope he will make one of the new expedition, which the Duc d'Orleans is about sending to the North Pole.

With these and various similar exploits, in which the Duc was always guarded from annoying consequences by his faithful "Walrus," a lively time was passed in New York until time came for the trip to Canada, to which the French party looked forward with great interest. While not expecting any special recognition from the Dominion Government, and especially from the Queen's representatives, the sentiments of the French Catholics toward the house of Orléans were known to be intensely loyal. The party was received in Montreal with every evidence of good will and respect. The white flag with the lilies of France was flung to the breeze, a public banquet was tendered to the Frenchmen, and the clerics in particular were devoted in their attentions. But as the party journeyed northward through the Province of Quebec the journey became little else than a royal progress.

It must be remembered that nearly all the religious foundations and institutions in that part of the world owe their origin and means of maintenance to the French Kings. The crowds at the smaller stations and at the larger ones where stops were made, proclaimed nothing but "Vive le Roi!" The old royal standards of France were brought forth from a hundred chests and closets. The sweet old classic French of the monastery and cloister was preserved on every tongue. The children were taught it, and sang it in choruses expressive of the ancient glories of Church and State. It was all extremely impressive. The Comte de Paris threw off for the time the impassivity of a King without a throne, of a monarch without a country. His manner assumed the exaltation of one who has found his own at last, and his eye flashed with the possibilities of regained power. The Duc d'Orléans was deeply impressed, and for the moment seemed imbued with some of the dignity of his kingly race, but at Trois Rivères the village band, which was doing its best, played slightly out of tune. He made a wry face, stuck his fingers in his ears, and would have fled if some of the party had not stopped him.

He soon tired of the evidences of respect, almost of adoration, which his father's name inspired, and once at Quebec was content to seek such relaxations as that picturesque but stupid old city could afford. His vanity found full vent in the remarkable fur shops of Quebec, and he bought enough furs for himself to equip an Arctic expedition. One great coat in particular he was very proud of, fashioned of undressed undyed sealskin, with the fur outside, a very expensive but hideous garment, which he insisted upon wearing over the border on the way back to avoid the United States Custom duties, and the weather was warm at that.

After the return to New York the Frenchmen were invited by the Society of the Army of the Potomac to go over the battlefield of Gettysburg, and the trip, made in a sumptuous private train, was doubly interesting from the presence of all the surviving corps commanders of that battle, each one in turn taking up his position and describing the movements of his troops. But the Duc soon tired of even such a marvellous representation of one of the greatest battles of the world, and when Gen. Daniel Sickles entered into the minutiae of the amputation of his leg in a certain red barn that stood hard by, he made the General's son holler by giving him a sudden pinch in the leg. He was greatly more interested in the banquet given his father by the society at the Plaza Hotel, and after going to mass that same night the whole party set sail for Europe the next morning, and to the best of my knowledge and belief, not one of them has ever set foot in the country since.

More Escapades at Home.

The Comte de Paris never lived to complete his history of the War of the Rebellion, nor to realize any other of the dreams of his life. He must have realized though that he was leaving his political and literary future in hands that would never revive the illustrious past of his race; in hands that without being soiled by vice or incapacitated by ignorance, are simply too vain to work, too weak to accomplish. About the very worst thing the Duc d'Orléans could have done was to antagonize the very friendly feelings of England toward him and his family. By a silly bit of applause which he wrote to a cartoonist of a Paris paper who had lampooned the beloved Queen of England, he closed to himself all English doors from Buckingham Palace down, was compelled to take his name off all his English club lists, and managed to make himself the most despised of all foreigners to an honest British public opinion.

When he found that none of his bluffs against his own country received enough attention from the Government to warrant his being made a martyr, he adopted the foolish expedient of enlisting as a private in the French Army, and even then was duly warned to behave himself or endure perpetual exile. He has been notoriously unfaithful to the wife he married with the hope of advancing his own political interests, and now boldly announces his determination to divorce her as detrimental. His pretence that the religious convulsions which France has been through affords him the long-looked-for opportunity of advancing his own propaganda, as absurd on the face of it, for nobody knows better than an Orléanist that in suppressing the last relics of a corrupt clerical faction France has put a final quietus upon any possible monarchical uprising.

This hapless young Prince, with his handsome face and happy manner, has proved himself unworthy to bear the burden of any movement looking to the betterment of mankind. The world has slipped away from him and from under him while he has been lolling in idleness and frivolity between the equator and the north pole. There is hardly a walrus now to listen to the bombastic apptal that comes from the little capital of Belgium.

Value of Expert Alienist Testimony at Issue

Diametrically Opposing Opinions from Ex-District Attorneys John F. McIntyre and James W. Osborne, Both Widely Experienced.

THE expert alienist is on trial. David McClure, Chairman of the Lunacy Commission appointed in the Thaw trial, in an address delivered last week before the Alumni of the civil engineers of Columbia University, mercilessly arraigned expert testimony as it has been given in recent criminal trials, and pronounced it unreliable and valueless. This view has been received with more or less favor apparently by the public, judging by expressions which have appeared in the press. It has been strenuously opposed, however, in an article by Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton, one of the foremost alienists of the country, with a personal experience as an expert in criminal procedure extending over a period of thirty-seven years, who advocates the appointment by the Court of a Board of Experts to which questions involving the sanity of persons on trial may be referred. That a complete revolution in this matter of expert testimony is imminent appears not improbable also, from the fact that a bill was introduced at the present session of the State Legislature at Albany, prohibiting the taking of the testimony of physicians upon hypothetical questions in the courts and confining evidence in criminal cases to the testimony of lay witnesses.

The discussion that will undoubtedly be aroused by this radical measure will not be confined to any one particular case, but will concern itself with the whole body of experience furnished by the criminal or civil courts in the past wherever the question of insanity has been raised. Certain features in recent trials, however, have emphasized the importance of this subject, and in view of the interest that is thus being aroused THE TIMES has secured statements from two lawyers whose long experience, extending over the last twenty years, as the chief of prosecutors in the District Attorney's office, lends weight to their opinions.

The similarity of experience, however, has not caused a similarity of opinion in these two former Assistant District Attorneys, John F. McIntyre and James W. Osborne. On the contrary, Mr. McIntyre argues thoroughly with the view that discredits alienist testimony in criminal trials, while Mr. Osborne is uncompromisingly in favor of the continuance of the present system.

J. F. McIntyre Skeptical.

"I do not wish to be understood as reflecting on the honesty or ability of the expert alienists testifying in our courts," said Mr. McIntyre, "but I am strongly of the belief that recent experiences in criminal trials have shown this testimony to be entirely unsatisfactory and unreliable. I think it is high time, therefore, to inaugurate the most radical kind of reform in this matter, a reform that will not stop short of banishing the alienist from the courts altogether.

"Speaking out of my own experience, I doubt very much whether the average jury pays any attention to the testimony of the alienist. In most of the important cases that I prosecuted as Assistant District Attorney I was told by the jurors, after the trials were concluded, that the testimony of the experts was thrown out as unworthy of their consideration, while they relied entirely upon their own good judgment and common sense in reaching a verdict. That is the attitude of jurymen generally, I think, and it was so specifically in the Thaw trial.

"I think that whatever reforms may be undertaken in this matter, some little attention should be paid to its historical aspect. In Greece, in the days of Hippocrates, whenever there was a dispute in the courts as to a man's sanity the question was taken out of the hands of the Judges and left to the recognized head of the medical profession, or to one of his appointed representatives. The decision of the latter was final. Later on, in Rome, in the Justinian Codes and Pandects there was provision made for a board of inquiry, which was empowered to pass on the mental status of all criminals. The verdict of this board was then read to the Dikastes, a body of thirty or forty men, whose judicial function was analogous to that exercised by our juries, and became an important factor in the formation of their opinion. This method was continued throughout the Roman law, and was incorporated in the Napoleonic Code.

Legal Insanity in England.

"In England, in the time of King John I think it was, the King's Bench asked the House of Lords, the court of last resort in such matters at that time, for a definition of legal insanity. After a long debate, the Lords replied that legal insanity was a mental condition that excluded the discrimination between right and wrong and rendered the accused person incapable of determining the nature or quality of his acts. After this memorable decision the English courts began to tolerate expert testimony bearing on the mental condition of persons on trial. In those days alienists were not called experts, but simply 'men learned in medicine,' and they were supposed to take an absolutely unpartisan view of the matters which were laid before them.

"It is well to remember, also, that the original view of insanity, held by the House of Lords, was quite different from that in vogue in our courts to-day. The insane man was the man who killed without a motive, who did not stop to choose his weapons, who could not reason about and plan his acts, but who was, in every sense of the word, entirely irresponsible. Only a total deprivation of his reason, not a partial one, could furnish adequate excuse for a man who came within the shadow of the criminal code. There was thus very little opportunity for the confusing quibbles on the subject which have become possible in our courts through a too vague definition of insanity.

"This first admission of expert alienists on the witness stand in England has developed to the condition which exists here to-day when, judging by my own experience, these alienists have become partisans. I intend no reflection on the integrity of these men; in fact, I think it only natural for them to lean to one side or to the other, and thus to color their testimony unconsciously in the direction where their own interests lie. But the fact that this bias does exist discredits the whole system of alienist testimony, and suggests that it be abandoned. I suggest, furthermore, that we abandon the procedure originating in England, and go back, instead, to a modification of the Greek and Roman method of judging from authoritative alienism.

"For these reasons and with this precedent in mind, I advocate the creation of a State board composed of men of the highest ability in alienism, or neurology. The appointment of this board I would vest in the Governor, and I would make it a permanent body. To this board would be referred all questions relating to the mental condition of persons accused of crime. Furthermore, and this is a most important point, this board should have the power in the first instance to send for witnesses and to examine them on the facts bearing on the accused person's mental condition. It should also be vested with the authority to make a physical examination of the accused persons coming before it. The evidence thus taken before this board I would not have controlled by the strict rules in vogue in such matters. In this connection I think the proposed board should enjoy the widest scope, admitting any evidence that it might consider would tend to clear up any question, remote or direct, bearing on the sanity of the accused. With all the evidence before it, this board would then formulate a definite, final report which would then be placed before the court and given to the jury as an authoritative statement. In no case would I have the alienists composing the board placed on the witness stand. There would be no alienist testimony, in the present meaning given to the term.

Hypothetical Questions at Fault.

"The principal trouble to-day lies in the hypothetical question which is sometimes submitted to the expert by the prosecution, sometimes by the defense. This question can be so framed as to make the most honest expert testify that the sanest man living is insane. Frequently subjective symptoms are introduced in a hypothetical question that are founded on perjurious testimony, such symptoms undoubtedly tending to establish insanity. The expert is then confronted with some such verbal twist: 'Assuming the facts in the hypothetical question to be true, will you say with certainty that A—Z, at the time of the shooting was sane or insane?' This allows no loophole of escape for the unfortunate doctor who is constrained to say, under his oath, that a sane man is insane, or vice versa, his opinion being based on the testimony of others, which may be one tissue of falsehoods, and is evidently so to every one in the courtroom. In other words, the hypothetical question is a mere trap for the alienist who is forced on the witness stand and can be so framed as to make him say, for instance, 'Carnegie, J. P. Morgan, Harriman, H. H. Rogers, and all the other captains of finance are suffering from mental disturbances, hallucinations, monomanias to the extent of being insane.

"The Board of Alienists that I have suggested, by eliminating the expert from the witness chair, would do away absolutely with all this confusing and misleading testimony, and would make it possible for a jury to touch the real truth of a medical question without having to pierce through a maze of subtle sophistries."

James W. Osborne Dissents.

"I think that any man, be he lawyer or layman," said Mr. Osborne emphatically, "who attacks the value of expert testimony in a question of the sanity or insanity of a man who is on trial for his life has simply not stopped to think. To do away with the expert alienists in our courts of justice is deliberately to go back to a state of legal barbarism. We need an expert for almost everything we do—and not one expert, but two or three or four. Let me illustrate what I mean. Suppose you have decided to build a house. You know nothing of the science of house building, you are not an architect, and so you call in an expert in that line. You hear what he has to say; it convinces you somewhat, but you still feel the need of more light on the subject. What do you do? Call in more experts, more architects. These experts differ from one another, they hold radically opposite views, but they argue the matter out before you, and from their discussions, without impeaching the honesty of their opinions, you form your own. As it is with building a house, so it is with filling a tooth or mending a leg or testing a mineral—you need the combined, and often conflicting, opinions of experts.

"Because expert alienists disagree in their opinions in trials for murder, it is commonly supposed that their testimony must be in the highest degree confusing to a jury. I don't think so. I firmly believe that the jury has less trouble with the expert part of a trial than any other. In view of the current sensational talk, that may seem a strange assertion. But, remember, the expert deals purely with facts; his personal opinion, on the other hand, remains as a mere guide to the jury. One dentist, you know, may say that the condition of your tooth indicates a plug, the other may vote for a bridge—but both men may agree that there is something the matter with the tooth, to which a definite scientific name can be given, and which forms the grain of ascertained fact in the flower of theory.

"Now, most scientists, whether in or out of court, are truthful as to facts, although they may disagree radically as to theory. I don't believe in the least that it is ordinarily possible to bend expert opinion the way you want it. I will frankly confess that I have had cases in which it was impossible to hire alienists to agree with my view. Hence I would brand the statement that experts always go with the side that employs them as deliberately untrue. That is a popular misconception. I know from experience that the best of the alienists prefer to remain ignorant of the view held by the side that is engaging them, and as a class of men there is none for whose honesty I have a greater respect. These expert alienists, you know, have reputations as scientists to make or lose; their testimony is taken down in an important trial, and if they give utterance to a false theory or a perversion of fact they will be confronted with it in the future.

"I have never attended a case involving a great deal of important expert testimony where I could not tell in advance on which side the verdict would be. The reason is this: In a case where intelligent expert testimony is employed on either side fundamental principles are soon admitted and explained, while the residue of mere personal opinion falls away. Let me illustrate my meaning. Take a case involving the hypothesis that a murder was committed by the use of chloroform, as, for instance, in the Patrick case. Now, there are all sorts of debatable facts in regard to a death of this kind as it appears to the mind of a layman. Is chloroform an irritant, for instance; does it congest the vital organs of the body; does it leave an odor; can its presence be detected chemically in the human viscera? What can a layman do with such problems? Obviously nothing. But the expert comes in and settles the whole matter as to these facts, which are purely details of medical science, in such a way that the jury may decide the wider problem: 'Did this man come to his death by chloroform?' The experts, on the other hand, might disagree as to that wider problem, some maintaining that the man died of chloroform poisoning, others that death came through pneumonia. But you see what the value of expert testimony is in such a case—it furnishes the data upon which the jury can base a verdict.

Experts in General Agreement.

"As a matter of fact, however, the medical experts in criminal trials do not differ anything like as much as is supposed on fundamental questions. They may be made to appear to differ through the skillful way in which a lawyer puts questions to them and by their powerlessness, under the rules of evidence, to state their own position independently of their examiners. But they do manage to give, in spite of whatever hindrances may surround them, the fundamental facts of disease, and for that purpose an alienist is essential to a jury. This kind of testimony always does influence the latter. My theory of a trial is simply to get at the truth of a thing, and for that, if a medical question is involved, you need a medical expert.

"But the jurors in the Thaw case say that they were not influenced by the expert testimony. I don't believe it. I have had jurors tell me that such and such evidence had no effect on them. Too much weight should not be given to such assertions. Who of us can say exactly just what was influential with us when we have reached a conclusion necessarily involving a wide complexity of argument? I think these jurors unconsciously delude themselves.

"Why not banish the expert alienist from the witness stand and have a permanent board of alienists, appointed by the Governor, to pass on all questions of mental condition arising in criminal cases? We have too many officials already, too much restriction in the matter of discussion in the courts. Authoritative commissions are dangerous, in that they still further limit the freedom that is needed in such matters. It is the very clash of expert opinion in a trial that helps a jury—just as the clash of architects helps the prospective house builder in settling on the plans for his future home. All this would be done away with should an alienist commission be permanently established.

RODERICK DHU.

RODERICK DHU was a mongrel dog,
Yellow and rough was he;
Ah! but his heart was the very best
Ever a heart could be!

One of his ears had a rakish tilt,
One hung dejected down,
Shading the deeps of his kindly eyes,
Honest and bright and brown.

Roderick Dhu had a tail unique;
Straight for an inch it grew,
Then to the side in a jaunty curve
Euclid himself ne'er knew.

Every urchin for miles around.—
Roderick loved him dear;
Raggedest jacket ne'er clasped the "kid"
Roderick held in fear.

Roderick Dhu closed his loving eyes
Many a year ago;
Over his grave drift the orchard blooms,
Mingling their rose and snow.

Friend of my youth, though in manhood's years
Wealth and renown are mine,
Never hath heart, since my mother died,
Loved me with love like thine.

AND NOW THE EXPOSITION AT JAMESTOWN

Preparations to Celebrate Virginia's 300th Anniversary Practically Complete---On Friday President Roosevelt Will Start the Machinery.

AMERICANS will turn next Friday from thoughts of peace to the most splendid international war spectacle this country and probably the world has ever seen. At noon on that day President Roosevelt will press an electric button that will unfurl the flags and start the machinery of the Jamestown Ter-Centennial Exposition. The newest world's fair will be "a military, naval, marine, and historic exhibition," according to the official statements. Historically it commemorates the day in April, 1607, when the first English settlers in America moored their frail ships in the neighboring harbor. History will be given its due at the Exposition as well as the arts of peace, but the distinctive feature will be the sight of Hampton Roads—already a famous naval arena—alive with the fighting craft of many nations, the shores glittering with soldiers in friendly rendezvous.

The remarkable naval display is made possible by the fact that the Jamestown Exposition is the first great American fair held on a deep-water harbor. Practically all the civilized nations have accepted the President's invitation to send sections of their navies. As the Summer advances the varying types of fighting craft, from saucy torpedo boats to the largest war vessel afloat, will pass through the harbor in endless procession. The United States Government will have an extensive display, showing the evolution of guns and fighting ships from the early days of the Nation to the present. There will also be a large encampment of militia, regular army, and foreign troops.

A third element makes the Exposition unusual. The arts of war will divide interest with an elaborate programme of sports, the pastimes ranging from handling airships and yachts to a dog show, flights of pigeons, and the sprinting of boys from obscure country schools.

The Exposition will be opened at noon on April 26 at Sewell's Point, on Hampton Roads, Va., and will continue until Nov. 30.

In the Pictorial Section of THE TIMES to-day will be found two pages of pictures illustrating the general appearance of the grounds and buildings. Below is a condensed summary of the main features of the exhibition:

THE buildings and grounds cover 400 acres, with a frontage of two and one-half miles on the harbor and a forty-acre inclosed water space. In all, $10,000,000 is being spent for the 25 buildings of the Exposition Commission, 30 State buildings, 6 Government structures, and ground and improvements.

Panama's exhibit will be a miniature canal, 100 feet long and 50 feet wide, showing the topography, locks, and other features of the canal.

The Negro Building, on which the United States Government has spent $100,000, will show the life of the colored race from the days they were brought from Africa to the present.

The Library of Congress will show a model of the new Library in Washington, many rare maps, manuscripts, and autograph letters of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and other famous Americans.

In the Building of Historic Art the Colonial Dames and Daughters of the American Revolution will have an exhibition of ancient ceramics, bric-à-brac, jewelry, furniture, clothing, manuscripts, and hooks.

A new hotel with a frontage of 650 feet on the harbor and nearly 1,000 rooms has been built inside the Exposition inclosure. The Exposition Commissioners estimate that the hotel facilities near the grounds are sufficient for at least 25,000 people.

Rural life in the seventeenth century is shown in a quaint Arts and Crafts Village near the eastern end of the grounds. Visitors will see useful crafts employed in copper, silver, textile, wood-working, and pottery shops. There will also be a model school and Pocahontas Hospital.

The State Department will exhibit fac similes of the Declaration of Independence, the Acts of Federation, the Constitution, Monroe's message containing the famous "Monroe Doctrine," the swords of Washington, Jackson, Taylor, Harrison, and Grant, portraits, autographs, and relics.

The village of Jamestown—the first English settlement in America—is reproduced as it is supposed to have existed 300 years ago on the James River, forty miles from the Exposition. There are stockades, blockhouses, the church, log dwellings, and an Indian village close at hand.

The United States Government has arranged for the reproduction of the famous fight between the Merrimac and the Monitor on the exact site of the original engagement in the civil war in front of the exposition grounds. The mock engagement will be repeated at regular intervals.

Pastimes more or less frivolous will be found in the "War Path," a square and two parallel avenues lined with side shows like those on the "Midway" at Chicago and the "Pike" at St. Louis. The "War Path" will be lighted by 30-inch searchlights, with revolving colored screens, on a steel tower 60 feet high.

A winding water course, or "canoe trail," bordered by trees and shrubbery, extends two miles through the Exposition grounds. Hundreds of canoes will await visitors. A wood path, called Flirtation Walk, borders the canoe trail for a mile. It will be lighted by 1,000 blinking electric lamps hung in the vines and shrubberies.

Two hundred acres have been set aside for the military camp, with thirty-five acres more for manoeuvring, the field being called Lee's Parade Ground. The foreign troops, United States Army Division, State Militia, and semi-military and cadet corps will occupy the camp, each for a short period, and give exhibitions of tactics, sham battles, and military sports.

Two hundred conventions and special events fill the Exposition calendar from May 6 to the middle of November. July 4 will be Jefferson Day. Virginia Home-Coming Week begins on June 10. The Colonial Dames meet on June 5 and the Sons of the Revolution on Oct. 11. There will also be the first congress of students in Esperanto—the new universal language.

New York is spending $150,000 for a pretentious State building of Colonial design with a frontage of 200 feet on Hampton Roads. The New Jersey Building, erected with an appropriation of $75,000, is a copy of Gen. Washington's headquarters at Morristown. Independence Hall, in Philadelphia, has been reproduced with the $100,000 donoted by Pennsylvania.

The countries of the Western Hemisphere that will be represented by ships or private and commercial exhibits are Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, Chile, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Haiti, Mexico, and Venezuela. The Dominican Government has appropriated $10,000 for a special building. Porto Rico will have a pavilion in the grounds where coffee and other of its products will be served.

Conspicuous in the Government's large display are models of forts and harbor defenses by the Corps of Engineers, a complete assortment of firearms, powders, and projectiles, Gatling and Vickers-Maxim guns, armor plate, elaborate models of war ships, a model dry dock in operation, and a reproduction in miniature of the great floating dry dock, the Dewey, which was taken last year to the Philippines.

The people of Kentucky have set aside $40,000 to build a copy of Daniel Boone's first fort. Georgia's Building is a reproduction of Bullock Hall, the home of President Roosevelt's mother. The old State House at Annapolis suggested the façade of Maryland's $65,000 structure. Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Nevada are spending $250,000 for a building of Western timber shaped like a Maltese cross, each State having a wing.

The State of Virginia has contributed $300,000, the counties $150,000 more. The Virginia Building will be between the Pennsylvania and Maryland structures on the water front. It is of brick and white stone, with a frontage of 116 feet and Colonial porticos 50 feet deep, and will be used entirely for entertainment. The State has also loaned its collection of rare historical portraits of Presidents, Governors, Generals, and statesmen.

The sporting events at the Exposition will include an international rowing regatta, beginning Aug. 14; races of motor boats, including one over a long-distance course of from 100 to 150 miles; the meet of the League of American Sportsmen on May 6, pigeon flights on May 9 and 18, a dog show on Nov. 19, and amateur contests that will be almost continuous in the waters of the harbor and an athletic field with a fine cinder track.

Dates have been assigned for the visits of forty military organizations. Among them are the West Point Cadets, June 5; Company I, Fourteenth Regiment, of Brooklyn, and Company G, Twenty-third Regiment, of this city, June 15; Company E, Twelfth Regiment, of New York, July 4; the Ancient and Honorable Artillery of Boston, Oct. 7; Troop A, Governor's Guard, of Hartford, Conn., Oct. 12, and the American Continentals of this city, Oct. 14.

At least fifty American and foreign war vessels will rendezvous in Hampton Roads during the Exposition—the largest fleet of modern fighting craft the country has ever seen. The Atlantic Squadron of eighteen ships, commanded by Admiral Evans, will gather there for the opening exercises this week. The Atlantic Fleet of four squadrons will rendezvous in Hampton Roads in the Summer, take part in the manoeuvres, and act as hosts of the foreign visitors.

The State appropriations include the following: Connecticut, $26,000; Delaware, $15,000; Florida, $50,000; Georgia, $50,000; Illinois, $25,000; Louisiana, $15,000; Maine, $40,000; Michigan, $60,000; Missouri, $60,000; Massachusetts, $50,000; North Dakota, $15,000; North Carolina, $50,000; Ohio, $75,000; Oklahoma, $10,000; Rhode Island, $50,000; South Carolina, $20,000; Tennessee, $10,000; Vermont, $10,000; Wisconsin, $60,000, and West Virginia, at least $15,000.

The United States Government appropriated $1,575,000 for the Exposition. Of this, $1,325,000 goes for piers, buildings, and exhibits, including $250,000 for the main Government Building and $200,000 for the structure for Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippines.

The Nation will spend $250,000 for entertaining. To insure the comfort of thousands of American and foreign soldiers and sailors the Government has appropriated $75,000 for a model army and navy clubhouse.

Twenty-five foreign countries will be represented by war ships. England will send the Dreadnought, the largest man-of-war afloat, and the First Cruiser Division, comprising the Good Hope, Antrim, Argyle, Devonshire, Hampshire, and Roxburgh. France will send three ships, Italy three, Spain one, and Germany from three to five. Other nations accepting invitations to send ships and bodies of their best-drilled troops are Russia, Japan, Denmark, Venezuela, Mexico, and Belgium. The war vessels will represent an outlay of $250,000,000.

The unique feature of the Exposition will be the harbor for small craft, with an area of 1,280,000 square feet, inclosed by piers costing the United States Government $400,000. The piers and main landing are named after the ships in Capt. Smith's fleet—the Godspeed, Discovery, and Susan Constant. Two piers, each 200 feet wide, extend nearly half a mile into Hampton Roads. They are connected by the third, with an arch for boats to pass through. On the piers will be towers, searchlights, thousands of incandescent lamps, and the Lighthouse Service exhibit.

Airships, balloons, and experimental kites will claim a large share of attention. A special building with 8,000 square feet of space has been provided for them. The United States Government will show the Langley models. The German Government will send at least one of its war balloons. The Jamestown Aeronautical Congress has arranged twenty-five races and competitions for balloons, flying machines, kites, and allied devices. The first race will be on May 4, and one of the chief events the contest for the Lahm Cup for the longest distance flight, the minimum having been set at 402 miles.

There will be twenty yacht races at the Exposition, starting on Sept. 9. Sir Thomas Lipton will be present with his yacht, and has offered a cup for races between boats of the fifteen and twenty foot classes. President Roosevelt has offered a cup to be competed for by boats of the twenty-seven and thirty-three foot classes. The cup given by King Edward VII. of England is open for the twenty-two-foot class. The Jamestown Exposition Cup is open to all boats under the forty-foot class. There are at least twenty other trophies. The competing boats will be brought from England, the Atlantic Coast of America from Maine to Florida, and from the great lakes.

The main buildings, Colonial in design, will form three sides of Raleigh Square, a great plaza facing the harbor. The group includes the Administration Building, 250 feet long and 236 feet deep, containing an auditorium seating 4,000 persons and having the largest organ in the world. Other structures in the group are the Arts Building, the Historical Art Building, the Manufactures and Liberal Arts, and Machinery and Transportation Building, each 280 by 550 feet in size. Other structures are the States Exhibit Palace, 300 by 500 feet; the Mines and Metallurgy Building, 100 by 250 feet; the Food Products Building, 250 by 300 feet, and the Agricultural Building, 200 by 250 feet.

LITTLE STORIES OF FACT AND FANCY

Patches Gave the Clue.

POLICE business is usually a grim affair, but occasionally there is a bit of comedy in the day's work of the blue coat.

"I'll always remember the pursuit and capture of 'Hambone Charley,'" said Capt. Cottrell, now in command at the Leonard Street Police Station. "It happened out in Flushing, where I cut my eye teeth as a Police Captain.

"Almost every day some irate citizen would come to the station house and complain that a roast or a joint or a string of sausages had been stolen from his icebox. But if there was a hamhone in the refrigerator, it was always taken in preference to anything else. That's why we christened the unknown marauder 'Hambono Charley.'

"This Old Mother Hubbard business of going to the cupboard and finding it hare is not a soothing experience to a hungry family. 'Hambone Charley' became the hated pest of Flushing.

"I put detectives on the case; but neither they nor any of the hereaved citizens could get the slightest clue.

"One afternoon, after these icebox raids had been going on for a couple of months, a cook heard the kitchen door slam. She ran out into the back yard, and was just in time to see a pair of patched trousers disappearing through a hole under the fence. One patch was brown and the other was gray.

"A messenger was sent for me, and I hurried around with a couple of detectives. To us the cook recounted what she had seen of the thief.

"We then went a-sleuthing for a man inside a pair of patched trousers. And I can tell you that neither before nor since have I made such a careful inspection of the rear façade of my fellow-citizens.

"After three hours' searching a pair of trousers patched as per description, and with a colored gentleman inside them, was discovered in a ragtime dance hall.

"We led the protesting wearer of the trousers to the station house. The cook was summoned, and then the accused was made to assume the attitude that he was in when last seen by the cook.

"'That's him!' said she.

"Those patches got 'Hambone Charley' a month in jail."

"Butter Cakes."

BUTTER CAKES!" ehrieked the waitress.

"It isn't the primitive cooking that troubles me in these cheap restaurants," announced the man who had just ordered.

"Is it the noise?" asked the Lay Figure so necessary in an anecdote of this sort.

"No, it isn't the noise," continued the first man. "And it isn't the lack of gayety and music. No, it isn't that."

"Is it the service?" inquired the Lay Figure.

"The service is quite satisfactory," angwered the man with a grievance. "My dissatisfaction with cheap eating places has a deeper underlying cause. It troubles me year in, year out. In fact, so constantly is it with me that I have formulated it into a short query which I ask myself again and again."

"What is it?" asked the Lay Figure.

"Why ehould the minimum of price produce the maximum of indigestion?" groaned the other man.

"Why, indeed?" mused the Lay Figure. "That is a question asked by many a poor man."

"I really can't understand it," complained the other.

Both bowed their heads and sighed.

"Butter cakes!" shrieked the waitress.

She Got His Number.

A TIRED shopping crowd homeward bound filled the trolley car to suffocation. One of the last to get in was an aggressive-looking woman. When the conductor came for her fare she refused it. "I shan't pay," she said, decisively, "because I have no seat. You had no right to let so many people on the car."

"You saw it was jammed. Why did you get in?" retorted the conductor, tartly. "You will have to pay your fare or get off."

"I'll pay when you find me a ecat; not before," said the woman, her voice and temper rising, as she saw that popular sympathy was not with her. The conductor signalled to the motorman, and the car stopped.

"Now, give me the nickel or get off," he said.

By this time the woman was furious. "How dare you talk to me eo!" she cried. "I'll report you, Sir; what's your number?"

An inspiration eelzed the passengers. "Twenty-three!" shouted half a dozen of them in chorus.

The burst of laughter that followed effected the complete rout of the aggressive woman. Gathering up her parcels, she fled to the street, and the car went on its way.

The Crack o' Doom Club.

THE Crack o' Doom Club," said the Man Who Leans Against Bars, "is an organization with the sole object of getting newcomers to New York to 'set up' dinners. I'll tell you how the game is worked. One of the 'members' of the club approaches a newcomer, whom he has recently met, and asks him in a myeterious whisper whether he would like to join a little bohemian club.

"Some of the greatest celebrities in the city are members," he adds carelessly.

"Of course I'd like to join," says the newcomer.

"Well, I'll see if I can fix it for you," remarks the "member." "But promise never to mention, the club till the crack o' doom."

"All right," says the novice.

Shortly afterward the "member" seeks the newcomer again.

"I have fixed everything for you," he announces. "Be here to-morrow at 5 sharp and you'll be initiated."

At 5 sharp the novice is placed in a hansom cab, blindfolded, and taken to the house of one of the "members."

There a room has been especially prepared. It is Bohemia rampant. The newcomer scans the wall decorations and is surprised to find many autographed photographs of celebrities. "To the Crack o' Doom Club, from Francis Wilson." "To my fellow-members—George Ade." So the autographs run. Continuing his inspection he will find one part of the wall thus labeled:

"Reserved for original painting to be presented to the club by John S. Sargent."

And so on. While the novice is looking about various "members" who have been expressly notified stroll in, and talk as bohemianly as possible. Finally the newcomer's sponsor takes him aside.

"The initiation merely consiete in taking whatever members happen to be in the clubrooms to dinner," he announces.

"Delighted," says the newcomer, though he probably regrets that Mark Twain and Sargent and a few others among those whom he believes to be members are not to join the party.

At dinner time he naturally grows inquisitive. But whenever his questions become embarrassing the "members" tell him to wait for an answer until the crack o' doom.

Sooner or later, of course, the novice tumbles to the true state of affairs. If he is vexed the club tells him that if he can't take a joke he should never have tried to join an organization of bohemians.

But it is ten to one that the club's dupe will be thoroughly amused, whereupon hie name is at once inscribed as a "member," and he is promptly notified whenever the club has designs on the pocketbook of some guileless newcomer in search of bohemianism.

An Unguessed Destination.

A MAN who stutters badly, particularly when he is at all hurried or excited, rushed into the Long Island Railroad station at Jamaica one day laet week, and started to ask for a ticket.

"G-g-ive me a t-t-ticket to—to—" he sputtered, and then came to what seemed a hopeless stop. It was past the hour of the commuters' morning rush to the city, and most of the travel was the other way, so the ticket agent began to help him by guessing the names of the stations further out on the Island. "Hempstead, Babylon, Port Jefferson?" he hazarded, but the stuttering man shook his head in desperation, fairly dancing now in his impatience. A bell sounded, there was a rush of steam, and a train pulled out of the station. It was the one the man had hoped to catch, and the disappointment loosened his tongue.

"N-no, hang it!" he exclaimed, with only a trace of impediment; "I wanted to go to New York!"

New York Likes Dogs.

NEW YORK is the greatest dog town I have ever visited," remarked an observant person.

"By 'dog town' I don't mean the expreesion in a theatrical sense, but just as I say it. Your city is a canine heaven. I never have seen so many dogs in my life. It is easily understood that people in small towne have dogs for protection and companionship, but why they receive so much attention in the great, busy, hustling metropolis is one of the myeteries. It is well known that you only have enough time here to eat and work, with an occasional handshake between hours. Your oldest friends expect to find you busy when they come to New York, but the dog will always get proper attention.

"The apartment houses that are moet particular about not permitting children to enter their portals will welcome dogs. The bellboys devote their spare moments to leading somebody's poodle around the streets for an airing, and the maids nre aseiduous in eeeing that Fifi has her daily bath, that her little coat is properly brushed and combed, and that the bit of covering she wears is thoroughly dusted. President Roosevelt's family preecription lies unheeded in the memory. Why bother about it while there le Fido to console and keep one amused without any great amount of care and anxiety, for Fido is not subject to the whooping cough, the measles, and chicken-pox, altbough Archie Roosevelt did pay a visit to his doctor the other day in fear tbst his pet dog might have caught the diphtheria from him during his recent illness?

"There are all sorts and sizes of dogs. The Boston terrier still seems the favorite, although I have heard that certain faehionable women only carry them when they wear tailor-made suits. This dog is considered smart and well groomed in appearance, and he looks well on the streets; but in a carriage he is usually superseded by something fluffy and white. The former variety is generally preferred by young women and the latter by the older ones. It is a common sight in the vicinity of the Park to see white-haired ladies walking behind a toddling bundle of fur who leads them along by the string to which he is attached. I often pity these poor little animals, who are seldom permitted the pleasure of running and barking in freedom, for another noticeable fact is that New York dogs do not often bark. If they do so they are admonished at once to keep quiet. I have seen the elderly mistreeses of these dogs taking them out for a walk three times a day, and the other evening passed an old lady in my street who at 11 o'clock at night was pacing up and down in front of her house. She explained that she was giving her dog a breath of fresh air before she put him to bed.

"Every family of my acquaintance posseeses at least one dog, and frequently the different members have their own dogs, making a total of two or three in a small apartment.

"If I were a dog I should certainly prefer New York to all other spots on earth."

Destructive Dame Fashion.

IN the Hotel Martha Washington the head waitress walked gloomily to the chair in which the elaborately dressed woman had sat during luncheon. Regretfully she examined the back against which the woman had leaned. Then she frowned.

The more simply gowned woman at the next table inquired the head waitress's reasons for her scrutiny.

"The buttons at the back of that woman's dress," ssid the girl, "have ecratched the back of the chair. And it isn't only that one chair either. See, here and here and here."

She laid her hand on half a dozen of the near-by chairs. It was as she had said. The inner back of each was scratched.

"You see," she went on in explanation, "it's all the fault of that fashion that came in slowly from Paris last Summer and became the rage last Fall and has continued ever since. Now all dresses are buttoned at the back, or, rather, down the back. Not only are the buttons rather hard on the chairs, but instead of buttons many women use a series or row of little stickpins. These have elaborate heads and do more damage. You know we have only women guests in the hotel except for male visitors who dine with friends, and who only get as far up as the parlor floor. Just look at the chairs and sofas in any woman's sitting room in the city and see what you will see."

Tho woman found it as the waitress had indicated. She even found a theatre where they complained bitterly.

"It was bad enough," said the house manager, "when the ladies contented themselves with pinning their hats to the back of our finely upholstered seats in front of them, but now with their buttons and button pins it is much worse."

Disconnected.

I HAVE had a good many amusing experiences with my ear trumpet," said the deaf man, "but a new one happened yesterday. A man came up to me in the street, and as I saw he wanted to speak I took out my trumpet. He began to pour forth some tale of woe which sounded very 'fishy' to me, so I cut him short and walked on. The trumpet was tucked under my arm, with the mouthpiece behind me. Presently I felt something touching me lightly, and it seemed as if the trumpet was being moved. I turned quickly, and what do you suppose it was? My beggar had followed me, refusing to give up bope, and was trustfully continuing his hard-luck story into the mouth of the trumpet, regardless of the fact that the other end was nowhere near my esr. The thing etruck me as being so funny that I was extravagant enough to throw him a quarter."

True Politeness.

A LITTLE maiden of somewhere between 10 and 12 Summers, and becomingly garbed in a pink silk tea gown, sat down at an escritoire in the palm room of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel the other afternoon to write a letter. Among a number of pens she promptly selected one that stood out distinguished from its fellows; in short, it was a pocket pen, richly enchased. Presently a man hurried up to where she was seated, and, glancing hastily over her shoulders with an anxious look, said:

"Ah, you will pardon me, my little girl, but you have my pen. I left it here thoughtlessly a few minutes ago, you know."

"Oh, is it yours?" she said, turning and looking up at the stranger with a bewitching smile. "It is such a lovely pen. Won't you please allow me to finish my letter with it?"

"Why, certainly, my dear," the owner obligingly consented; "but you won't be long, will you?"

"Oh, no; just a minute. I'm writing to papa."

The owner of the pen therewith sat down on a near-by lounge and waited patiently until Mademoiselle finished her letter.

First Experience with the Elevated.

ELEVATED railroads are unknown in Spanish America and street traffic is calm and decorous. Consequently when a young lady from South America arrived in New York some time ago her sentiments bordered on panic.

Every time she crossed the street she was in terror, much to the amusement of the American lady who was guiding her through the perils of New York.

"Now we'll take a train," said the American, starting up an "L" station stairway.

The young South American stopped and crossed herself devoutly.

"I must pray first," she announced. "Ave Maria purisima—"

"Hurry up!" cried her companion; "the train's coming."

"San Antonio, San—"

"Come on!"

"San José, Santisimo Nombre de—"

"Step lively!"

"There now!" cried the American, as they took their seats in the train; "don't call any more saints, Dolores. The train's overcrowded already."

But the young girl kept on muttering prayers until they reached their destination.

"Here we are safe and sound, you see," said the American, as they alighted.

Again the South American crossed herself.

"A miracle!" she murmured.

A Flattering Occupation.

I HAVE just noticed," said the man who goes about, "another illustration of how certain kinds of business successes can be built up by catering to the pride of the patrons of the establishment. One evening last week I dined at a well-known French restaurant. As I was leaving the supper room after a splendid meal a sort of functionsry in evening dress at the door bowed to me, saying:

"'Good evening, Mr. M—'

"The name be mumbled.

"'Surprised and somewhat pleased. I turned to watch the man. At first I had thought that possibly the man knew who I was. Then it occurred to me that he did not, but that I must resemble closely some celebrity whom he did know. Either supposition was not at all displeasing, and to some persons whom I have known would have given positive pleasure.

"As I said, I watched the man. I found that he not only did the same to every other male member of my party, but also to every man who passed him. Then I saw that it was a trick. It was not quite so pleasing then. Later—and not much later either—came the reflection that a restaurant where they took such pains as to hire a man who, so far as I could see, had no other duties than to seem to recognize you, was a pretty good place at which to dine.

"And it is."

For the Young Person.

THE lot of the book agent, like that of the policeman in "The Pirates of Penzance," is generally regarded as "not a happy one," but there are amusing incidents which serve to lighten it occasionally. An unusually well-educated woman, who is canvassing for certain publications of real literary merit, called recently at one of the expensive houses that line Central Park West. "I sent up my card," she said, in telling the story, "and presently, with a switch of silken skirts, the mistress of the house, fairly glittering with diamonds, swept into the room. She listened to me for a few minutes, and then exclaimed, impatiently:

"'But what is the use of my subscribing to an expensive thing like that for my children, when I can go to almost any department store and buy plenty of pretty books a great deal cheaper? Now, I want you to look at this,' and she picked up a volume which lay on a table near by. 'I got it the other day for my little girl.'

"I looked and marveled. It was a cheap but showy edition of Ibsen's 'A Doll's House.' Undoubtedly she believed it to be a 'juvenile best seller.'

"'The binding is very pretty,' I murmured, and took my departure, without any more loss of time."

Snowing?—Yes.

IT beats all how some people will persist in making pests of themselves in forever chirping about the weather," said a salesman for a Broadway firm. "During that little snowstorm we had the other day, an elderly man met a casual acquaintance on lower Broadway.

"'Snowin', ain't it?'

"'Say, my friend, come into this doorway; want to talk to you a moment,' was the reply.

"The two took shelter, and then No. 2 turned rather fiercely to No. 1 with the interrogation: 'What d'ye think I am—a dope?'

"'Why, of course not. What's the matter with you?'

"'D'ye think for a second that I'm trottin' around with a blamed umbrella an' an overcoat for fun, eh?'

"'Certainly not.'

"'I'm rigged out this way because of the snow, ain't I?'

"'Sure!'

"'Well, then, Sonny, it snows. You know it snows. Everybody in town knows it snows. Now bear it an' let other people an' the weather alone. See?'

"'But—but—'

"'Forget it. You just let the snow alone. She knows her business. S'long.'

"And he strutted off uptown in the slush, leaving the other fellow guessing hard as to how it happened."

Where He Saw a Crowd.

UNCLE CONSTANTINE from Fishkill Landing was in town recently, for the first time in thirty years. His relatives were industrious in showing him the sights, but it was extremely difficult to get him to express surprise at anything. He even made disparaging comments, now and then, upon what he saw, and drew comparisons favorable to his own town. One afternoon they attended a crowded performance at the circus.

"Uncle Constantine," asked his niece, "did you ever see such a number of people gathered together before?"

"Well," said the old man slowly, as his eye ran critically over the thousands that filled the Garden, "I don't know as I ever did in a buildin', but I have to a bushmeetin'!"

The Fool and His Umbrella.

THE man who doesn't know how to carry his umbrella is quite as much an English institution as American. Maybe the English type is worse than the American. He is extremely dangerous when he enters an omnibus, for, carrying his umbrella with a grasp about its middle and its sharp iron point uppermost, there isn't an eye or a tooth in the omnibus that is safe. The London Saturday Review, which is considerably agitated over the question of "The Fool and His Umbrella," wants the omnibus companies to point the finger of scorn at the fool by posting a notice that his t'other-end-up, grip-around-the-middle fashion of carrying his umbrella will not be allowed.

AFTER BIG GAME ON THE "ELEPHANT HUNTING LIMITED"

Every Demand of the Most Fastidious Traveler Met on Trains Running Into the Very Heart of Africa.

OUR own great country and railroads have developed in double harness with such dramatic swiftness of late years that we are apt to overlook the amazing changes wrought in Savage Africa during the same period. Long ago the great Cape to Cairo line crossed the tremendous gorge of the Zambesi Falls, and is now nearly 600 miles north of that great dividing line of the continent.

The Uganda Railroad—unique among them all because one may shoot lions from the car windows!—has opened up to trade a great empire in the East. In Portuguese West Africa the Benguella-Katanga line, fast approaching completion by British capitalists, runs 1,200 miles into the very heart of the continent, until it joins the main Cape to Cairo system. In the Congo, too, railroad enterprise is going ahead in every direction, opening up rich mineral and rubber districts. Already the line from Stanleyville to Ponthierville is open.

But it is on the Rhodesian railways that one sees the most startling advance, and that not only because South Africa is the most civilized section of that vast continent, but rather because of the gold mines of the Rand, the diamond "holes" of Kimberley, and attractions for tourist and big game hunter alike.

It will be news to many that thousands of sportsmen now visit Africa every year in search of great game, in spite of the stringent protection laws made by the various powers interested in order to protect elephant, rhinoceros, giraffe, and all the greater antelopes. In fact, honeymoon trips have been organized from the port of Mombasa, and a few lions at least promised each adventurous couple. Sir Edmund and Lady Lechmere have been here bagging lions year after year for several seasons. And as to mere "sights," where on this earth can you match the Falls of the Zambesi, compared with which even our own mighty Niagara dwindles into a mere cascade?

Think of a river more than two miles wide dropping a sheer 400 feet! By the Rhodesian railways, too, one reaches the mysterious ruins of Great Zimbabwe, over which the archaeologists of Europe are fiercely debating at this moment. Some claim that these stupendous buried cities, with their temples and towers, lost in and overgrown by the African jungle, are really the "Ophir" of the Bible, whence King Solomon procured his incalculable treasures of gold for the great temple of Jerusalem.

Shooting Hippos via Parlor Car.

And so this enormous slice of Africa, covering 750,000 square miles, has gone ahead faster than any other part of the continent. At present Rhodesia has 2,200 miles of railroad in operation, with invested capital of $70,000,000.

And yet this region presents many queer incongruities. Think of boarding a palace car, sumptuous as any of our own transcontinental trains, with electric light and fans, shower baths, libraries, gramophones, iced drinks, and the rest, and running straight to the new hotel at the Zambesi Falls, from whose very windows the guest may shoot giant hippos—the behemoth of the Bible—as they rise, snorting and blowing with anger at the sight of a native dugout!

Strange, too, to think that less than ten years ago Buluwayo, now the railroad headquarters, was the chief kraal—a Central African village of wattle and daub huts—belonging to bloodthirsty Lo Bengula, King of the Matabele. To-day that cluster of African huts has disappeared, and in its place has risen one of the greatest railroad centres of the continent, with huge hotels, public parks, office buildings, raceccourses, and an immense Government House, which stands on the very site where old Lo Bengula held his palavers, while white people were being massacred and cut to pieces all over the country during the Matabele rebellion.

A few miles out of the town, in the Matoppo Hills, where Rhodes himself lies buried in the granite, you will find yet more hotels and parks, with a unique zoo, and every circumstance of a "week-end" resort of the people of Buluwayo.

Less than a decade ago Cecil Rhodes laid out the main line from Buluwayo to the Zambesi and on to Lake Tanganyika. Much of the work was done while the Boer War was raging, yet all difficulties were overcome by sheer perseverance. And that without great expenditure. The railroads of Natal, the Transvaal, and the Orange River Colony cost $75,000 a mile, and those of Cape Colony $50,000, while the Rhodesian lines cost but $3,000.

The thousands of employes working in the wilderness had their shopping done for them by a special train that ran once a month from civilization, and brought, besides provisions, the necessary rifles and ammunition to keep wild beasts and hostile savages at bay. The one were dragging down the telegraph wires, and the other pulling up the tracks and forging them into spears!

And to-day "circular tourist tickets," available for one month, are issued for all stations on the Rhodesian Railways. More ambitious still, there are superb palace cars for hire throughout the system, and these may be turned into luxurious traveling "camps" by big game hunters and tourists generally who want to "do" savage Africa in novel style and without roughing it. In short, they may penetrate into the land of savages and the largest of wild beasts, carrying with them their own luxurious hotel, with electric light and a French chef.

The Long-Heralded Cape to Cairo Route Rapidly Becoming a Reality—Zambesi Falls Boasts a Fine Hotel

The hire includes all catering, and the car is hauled to any part of the huge territory that may be desired, and there kept on a siding to await the hunters' pleasure.

Once a week the train de luxe from Cape Town to Buluwayo goes north, carrying the over-sea mail. It consists of dining and sleeping cars, observation and strong rooms, with a sumptuous lounge containing writing tables and an excellent library. There are also a cardroom, kitchen, pantry, lavatories, and bathrooms.

Scene of the Matabele Slaughter.

Most of these are upholstered in dark red morocco, with carved oak paneling and silver-plated fittings. Going north from Buluwayo the train crosses the Shangani River, where Major Alan Wilson and his companions were all slaughtered by the Matabele while trying to cut off and capture the fierce old King, Lo Bengula.

Soon the mopani forests are reached, and here the lion, giraffe, hippo, rhino, and elephant still abound. Their spoor may often be seen as this strangest of trains speeds north to the great Zambesi. And at last the Falls, 1,640 miles north of Cape Town, where one of the world's mightiest streams falls from a dizzy height into a forty-mile gorge, barely a hundred feet wide in some places, but of fathomless depth.

Here, for the benefit of wealthy hunters and travelers, two or three big hotels have been built, with electric light and elevators, and a Park of Peace is laid out, with a cast of G. F. Watts's superb bronze statue, "Physical Energy," overlooking the chaos of waters from a commanding eminence.

Just where Livingstone stood in awe watching the mountains of mist rising from the "Boiling Pot," a big town has been laid out, shaded with palms and boabab trees. And in the country round about cotton and tobacco are being cultivated, while the active work has been begun of "harnessing," for the benefit of all South Central Africa, the fifty million horse power which the world's greatest engineers declare lies latent in these mighty falls.

The queer thing is that in spite of all these bold projects colossal hippopotami still disport themselves in noisy herds a hundred strong beneath the very windows of the Grand Hotel, and as the train de luxe steams over the mighty Falls Bridge, 450 feet above the river, the traveler realizes that he has arrived in the only civilized town on earth where big game shooting is possible. For down below the Falls the lion still lies in wait for the stately giraffe in the dusk, just as he did before ever white face appeared in this part of savage Africa.

A Great American Dinosaur for the Kaiser and Germany

PROBABLY one of the largest and most wonderful gifts the Kaiser has yet received will be that of a great American dinosaur, Diplodicus by name. This giant, extinct creature was one of Wyoming's strange and mighty inhabitants some eight million years ago. Now his horculean fossil frame has just been mounted in bas relief fashion, appearing to the onlooker as if hewn out of solid stone. Genuine all-bone North American dinosaurs nearly 60 feet long are scarce on the other side.

Now, however, through the generosity of President Morris K. Jesup and Jacob H. Schiff, Germany is to have a realistic view and to permanently possess this one of the most valuable fossil prizes in the world, representing a type of one of the gigantic animals of former ages, of which only two or three incomplete specimens are now in existence. The big dinosaur is to be presented by Jacob H. Schiff to a new natural history museum to be dedicated shortly in the City of Frankfort, Germany, his birthplace. Mr. Schiff was requested by the citizens and the new institution to obtain a rare specimen from America, to be installed in the foyer of the museum. The gift was made possible through the generosity of President Morris K. Jesup of the American Museum of Natural History, who, learning of the appeal, donated a splendid skeleton, just finished, and bore the expense of mounting it, and presented it to Mr. Schiff in order that he might make the gift in his own name to his native city. The German Emperor and Empress will be present when the huge American dinosaur is officially presented.

The possession and housing of this huge fossil monster gives to Germany the lead over other European countries, insomuch as it is the first almost complete all-bone skeleton of a Diplodicus on the Continent. A TIMES man obtained the main details of the discovery, life habits, and appearance of this huge American fossil wonder, soon to be boxed up and shipped over to astonish and instruct the German people as well as the first photograph with a bevy of school children grouped underneath the massive and towering beast. Diplodicus was one of the giant amphibious reptiles and largest land animals that ever trod the earth, ranging from 60 to 70 feet in length and of enormous bulk. Some eight million years ago, according to geological reckoning, during the Jurassic Period and Age of Reptiles, the unfamiliar beast roamed the marshes and lived in the inland seas and lakes which at that remote period covered various parts of the Rocky Mountain region. His remains were discovered near the Medicine Bull River, in South Central Wyoming, a few years ago by some of the fossil explorers of Prof. Henry F. Osborn's Paleontological Department, at a point christened "Bone Cabin Quarry," which has been found to be a wonderful layer bed of entombed dinosaurs.

This small area, about 100 by 175 feet, has yielded in successive years the greatest number and variety in size and type of extinct animals of any single spot in the world. One of the remarkable skeletons excavated from this Bone Cabin Quarry was that of the long-limbed Diplodicus. About half of the mighty creature's form—hind limbs, ribs, and backbone—was found in a natural position lying on its side. It required several month of laborious work to chisel and dig out the petrified bone from the rock and clay matrix. These were then carefully protected by layers of plaster, incased in burlap wrappings, and further strengthened by splints of wood fastened with rawhide to insure safety in transportation.

In life Diplodicus was a bulky and comparatively slow-moving creature, which is indicated by the very small brain. He was without armor or any means of defense. When pursued by the fierce, flesh-eating dinosaurs living at the same time it is thought he took to the water as the only medium of escape from these enemies. The head was only two feet long, being astonishingly small in proportion to the huge body. In life it is conjectured he would have stood in height far above the largest elephant. The monster standing at full length would have occupied the space of three street cars, and when he rose on his hind limbs, kangaroolike, he was high enough to look into the window of an average three-story building or Harlem flat. The body portion was astonishingly short. The animal was principally aquatic, though he frequented the land at times. The head was supplied with short, rakelike teeth, which were of no use for cutting or grinding, being adapted only for pulling up and tearing off the soft water plants, vegetation, &c., of the lake bottoms, upon which he fed. Half a ton or more of this tender foodstuff could have been retained in its ponderous stomach at a meal. The food was swallowed without mastication. The long, flexible tapering, fifteen-foot neck enabled the animal to wade to a considerable depth to forage for food among the soft plants on the bottom. Nature provided the dinosaur with a series of successional teeth. By this means a tooth was replaced almost as soon as one was lost.

One of the most remarkable structural features of the animal was the whiplike and powerful tail, 30 feet long—over half the length of the body. This served the creature as a propeller, enabling him to swim very rapidly through the water, also as a weapon of rapid escape by water when attacked and pursued by the fierce, carnivorous dinosaurs of the period. Another peculiar function of this ponderous tail was that it acted like a lever and balanced and supported the animal when he assumed an upright position, which he is thought to have done both in water and on land.

One of the unique features of the specimen is the scheme of slab-mounting. This is a wooden framework with plaster for a foundation. It is 56 feet long, following the curvature of the spine of the animal, and is 13½ feet high. It is in twenty-five sections, each supporting one or more bones. These divisions are so constructed that they can be disjointed, reassembled, and bolted together, in such a manner as to form what appears to be a continuous stone slab with the skeleton hewn out in bold relief. The novel engineering framework was built by Harry Beers of the Museum staff, who will reunite and adjust the sections after transportation to Frankfort. The great creature, however, for the benefit of New York visitors, will possibly be shown for some time in the near future in one of the unopened west wings on the fourth floor of the Museum.

Carlsbad Fights Mine Owners.

BERLIN, April 10.—American newspapers recently published the news from Carlsbad that the famous springs were seriously threatened by the mines in the neighborhood. This information is correct in so far that for some time a bitter fight has been going on between the mining interests on the one side and the municipality on the other.

Valuable kaolin deposits located in Carlsbad yield a product which is extensively used by the manufacturers of porcelain ware. The operations of the kaolin mine owners have caused the City of Carlsbad, in the interest of the community, to take steps toward preventing measures which might prove injurious to the famous springs.

Dr. Edgar Ganz, one of the leading physicians of Carlsbad, at present in Berlin, expressed himself as follows:

"The Carlsbad springs have flown for 500 years, and there is no reason to believe that they will not do so for a thousand years to come. The first scientific examination of the waters was made a hundred years ago and has since been repeated from time to time. In the last twenty years daily observations were made by leading chemists and geologists. The result of all these examinations, extending over a period of 100 years, showed that the quantity and quality of the water has remained the same. Therefore all that has been printed on the alleged cessation of the flow of the waters, as for example after the earthquake at Lissabon, was either a fable or sprang from the imagination of careless observers.

"The Carlsbad water contains lime salts, which from time to time is deposited at the apertures of the springs. As a result these openings become small, so that the water, not being able to flow back, seeks an outlet at some other point in the spring region. Various methods have been employed to remedy this trouble. At regular intervals the apertures of the springs are relieved of the lime deposits by ingenious machines, and by other hydraulic work every precaution has been taken against a diminution of the flaw of water. While at times there may be a difference in this flow at the various Carlsbad springs, in the nature of things the average amount of water which comes to the surface always remains the same, and the mines in the neighborhood of the city have not thus far changed conditions. Nevertheless, the unfortunate experiences of other bathing places, for example Teplitz, where mining in the neighborhood was allowed too freely, has influenced Carlsbad to take the necessary precautionary steps. Therefore, after years of study, Spring Commission, to which belonged the foremost experts and scientific authorities, met in Carlsbad in the Summer of 1906, and later published a report. This report, instead of quieting the public, led to all kinds of alarming rumors. As a matter of fact, the Carlsbad springs have not been changed either in their chemical condition or in the quantity of the flow, and every scientific precaution has been taken to remove the slightest possibility of any injury to the springs at present or in the future. All rumors as to the condition of the Carlsbad springs have been inspired by unfriendly interests. The stoppage of the flow of the Carlsbad springs is no more probable than the destruction of the earth by an approaching comet. The City of Carlsbad has appealed to the authorities in Prague to restrict the mines from working in its neighborhood, and assurances from Vienna have been received that the Ministry will uphold our contention."

EQUINE PUSH BALL FASCINATES THE PACIFIC SLOPE

The Game an Accidental Development of Foot Push Ball, Which However Was Never Taken Seriously.

THE ingenuity of the devisor of athletic sports has produced a new game in which the pushball, which was invented some ten years ago and introduced as an amusing pastime, is put to a novel use. The game is equine pushball, for want of a better name, and is being played extensively in the West, especially upon the Pacific Coast. It is played with the regulation pushball, the huge inflated sphere some eight or nine feet in diameter, but the manoeuvring of the ball is confined strictly to the horses which the participants in the game ride. In conception the game is simple, merely the effort to force the ball through an opponent's goal on a field similar in plan to a football or polo ground. Its interest lies in the counter efforts of the two teams to attack their opponents' goal and to defend their own. The game has the advantage of being unembarrassed by rule or restriction and has been played by Western horsemen with the keenest zest and followed by the crowds of spectators that gather to witness the contests with the liveliest interest.

Pony Discovered the Game.

The game had its origin in accident. The pushball, which was used by players on foot in a game that was introduced in a spirit of buffoonery, was followed by a polo player on horseback, who found that the ball could be driven by the pony as expertly as it could be guided by human hands. The pony appeared to relish the sport in the spirit in which a kitten chases a rolling ball, and the solitary rider derived considerable amusement from driving the huge sphere about the field. The next day when a number of his fellows were gathered for a polo match, he related his experience with the pushball, and in a thrice the lot of them were following the ball and trying to take it away from each other and drive it to a corner away from the rest. An organized game between teams with opposite goals was a natural sequence, and before long the fame of the sport had spread from one field to another.

Once taken up, the game developed a lively fascination for the players. It was found possible to employ all the tactics of the polo field in the sport, riding off opponents and preventing them from diverting the ball or evading a rival rider to interrupt the course of the ball. Manoeuvres developed that required the highest measure of riding skill, and the game proved so enticing that the older sport of polo was forsaken for it. Viewed by a few cronies of the players, it was soon produced as a spectacle at a regularly scheduled match, and now the Westerners are holding tournaments chasing the great elusive sphere. There have frequently gathered on the coast great crowds to witness the games, and all have come away commending the sport as holding their interest as a contest and amusing them in its unexpected contretemps.

The players form for the match in the field in the same manner as in polo, in pairs, each player facing an opponent. The ball is put in play by a referee giving a signal and the two centre players ride at the sphere and try to start it toward their relative goals. The players nearest at hand give aid to their fellows as they can, and the others occupy themselves trying to keep their opponents out of the play. The ball is so large that a rider dares not place his pony directly in its path, but must so place himself as to allow the ball to strike his horse a glancing blow, so that its course will be altered; by repeating this process he endeavers gradually to work it around in the direction he seeks to take it. The ball is large enough to hide from sight the riders on the opposite side of it, and enables the obstructing played to manoeuvre effectively so that they aid his strength in deflecting the ball

It is surprising what skill can be developed in handling these phases of the game and how easy it is to entangle an inexperienced player so that he is absolutely helpless against the onslaughts of the ball—even at times succeeding in dismounting him. The game has been, however, singularly free from accidents in view of its rather rough character, the intelligence of the polo pony being responsible for that no doubt rather than the skill of the riders

The only rules of the game restrict the touching of the ball with hand or foot Failure to observe this feature results in penalties, such as a free start for the opponent toward the offender's goal with his team mates withheld a given distance from the ball. Provision is also made for the ball going out of bounds, so that it may be put in play again without loss of time and with the advantage to the team which was not responsible for driving the ball across the boundary line.

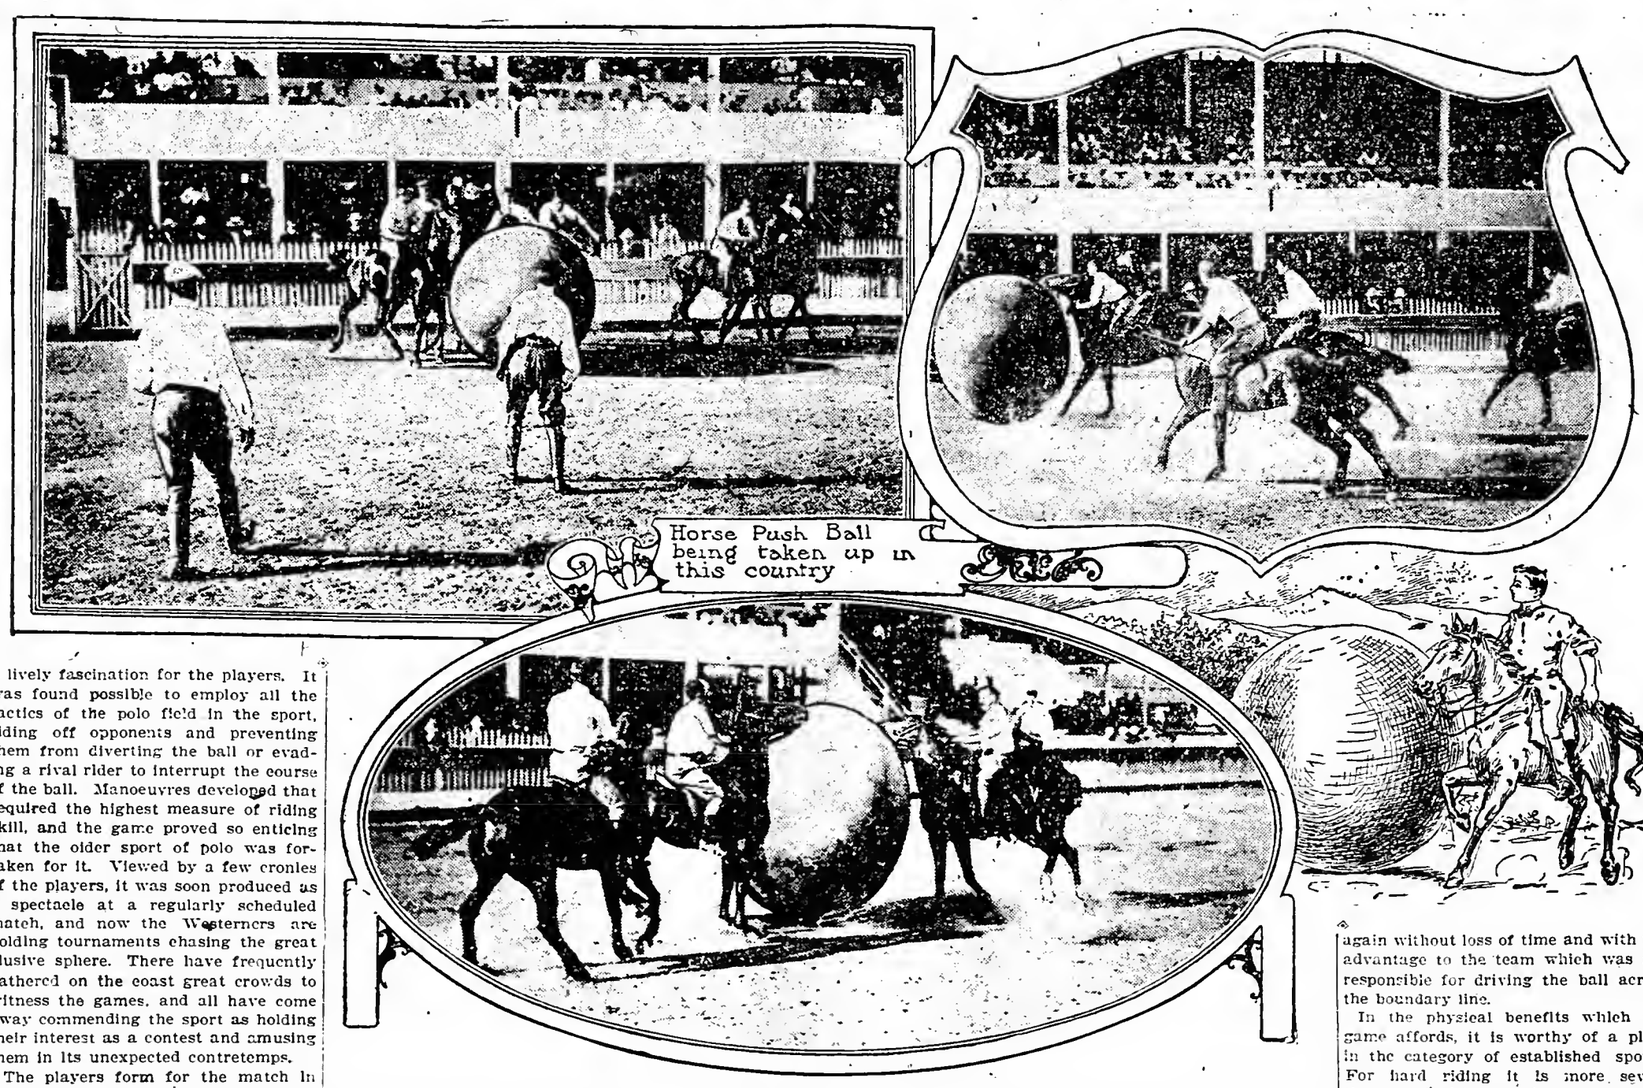
In the physical benefits which the game affords, it is worthy of a place in the category of established sports. For hard riding it is more severe than polo, with even fewer opportunities for breathing spaces. The participants in the game are driving at top speed all the time and bringing their horses about with the characteristic short, sharp turns of the polo field to follow the deviations of the ball's course. The rider who attempts to play it without being well hardened to the saddle finds himself badly put to it to keep on his horse ere the game is in progress for long. To play it well it really requires a well-developed man in perfect physical condition who is able to withstand absolute hardship.

The game, however, is of a character that would appeal to the devotee of the polo field. He would be sufficiently hardened to the saddle to undertake it, and the swift movement of the game would appeal to a man of his character. Once he took it up, he would follow it with the devotion of a zealot, and those who have seen it played in the West declare that it will find a tremendous vogue in the East when the pololsts become acquainted with it.

Foot Push Ball Not Popular.

The old game of pushball which is familiar to the East was not received with favor because the player could not enter into it in the spirit of serious competition. It was played by teams of from ten to twenty players on a side, who sought, by pushing the big ball, to drive it behind their opponents' goal. The ball would be lifted in the air and would fall upon the players of one side, knocking them down and rolling over them until it really became a hippodrome rather than an actual contest. It was amusing to the spectators as a novelty, but not such a spectacle as would hold their interest, while to the player one or two experiences sufficed to satisfy his appetite for the game. It was finally abandoned except for the purposes of training a few following it to develop the wind and muscles as a preparation for some contest requiring endurance and long-continued effort.

The horseman, however, is differently constituted. Such games as indoor polo, which is played with an inflated sphere a bit bigger than a football, have taken a hold on his fancy, and there is every reason to anticipate that the pushball which can be played out of doors, would prove even more attractive. It is possible that some of the leaders in the hunting and polo set in New York would introduce the game at some of the Hunt Clubs and give it a try-out. This would mean its firm establishment in the East, if the enthusiasts from Western cities deserve credence.



A Casanova in New York.

Amazing Record of Love, Intrigue, and Crime of a Roumanian Adventurer.

IT is the belief of the German police that the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, which left Hamburg on the 30th of March, bound for this city, had on board a Roumanian named Georges Manolescu, whose adventures in many lands have just been published after his own signature by a Leipzig house. Whether or not the New York police had been asked to be on the lookout for him, it is evident that he made a safe landing. With characteristic appreciation of the dramatic, he timed the publication of his memoirs so that they should appear simultaneously with the divorce proceedings brought against him in the little Bavarian town of Kempten.

Under various aliases—most frequently those of the Duke of Otranto and Prince of Lahovary—Manolescu, who speaks all languages, is well versed in art and literature, most energetic and audacious of adventurers, most captivating and irresistible of lovers, has for the last ten years visited many countries, everywhere having adventures not unlike those experienced by the notorious Venetian of the eighteenth century, Casanova de Seingalt. Like the Venetian, he has excited and gained the sympathy of merchants, Princes, and royalties.

This modern Casanova, to whose subtle touch all hearts and jewel cases seemed to fly open, was born thirty-seven years ago in that country on the eastern shores of the Adriatic which was once the Botany Bay of old Rome. If atavism be accountable for his extraordinary career, he could not have had a more promising birthplace. His father was a Roumanian officer who claimed ancient lineage. Like Casanova, the young Georges at an early age gave signs of wonderful intellectual possibilities, so his father sent him to the military academy at Galatz. Life was slow there, and he soon ran away to Constantinople. There he won the good graces of a high official in the Yildiz Kiosk, became his secretary and the tutor of his son, and finally showed his gratitude by running off to Athens not only with the pearl of his harem, but with a fat wallet stuffed with Bank of England notes.

Took the Money, But Not the Bride.

But Georges was ill-advised. He was not acquainted with the laws of modern Greece, had not even learned that slavery was no longer permitted there, and so, when he attempted to cross the frontier with the pearl of the Turk's harem as his slave, he was arrested. The lady was sent to an institution. Here his egotism asserted itself. He attempted to commit suicide, and was removed to a hospital One day Queen Olga visited his ward. He told her his story, fascinated her by the tale of his romantic flight from Constantinople. She interceded for him with the authorities, provided him with money, and was about to see that he married his abducted inamorata under the Greek law, when he again showed his ingratitude. He took the money but declined the bride, and returned to his father's house in Roumania. His Turkish and Grecian experiences, however, were not calculated to train him for a quiet life. He slipped on board a grain steamer at Braila, bound for Marseilles, and thence, like his illustrious predecessor in adventures, the Venetian, made his way to Paris.

He saw that he lacked one thing to insure his capture of the beautiful city. He lacked capital. He began in quite a modest way by stealthily picking up a few rare volumes along the Quai de la Seine, extracted a few jewels from the shops in the Champs de Mars, and then blossomed out in costly raiment, with a fashionable villa at Versailles and a hôtel in the Champs Elysées. He drove in his own carriage in the Bois de Boulogne, and backed his own horses at Longchamp. He was then nineteen years of age, a fine figure, with exquisite grace in manner and conversation, tall, dark, and very handsome. Nevertheless he aroused suspicion. His success made him careless. In attempting to rob a diamond merchant of both wife and brilliants, he was caught red-handed and sentenced to four years at Galliean prison. In prison he perfected his French and learned English. On his release he went to London.

Monte Carlo Next Saw Him.

"London," he writes in his memoirs, "is a disappointment to the man of spirit. The ladies are ugly, they lack vivacity and charm, and the men are stingy, with one hand on their pocketbooks and the other on the wrists of their wives."

It was in March. The Casino was thronged with visitors, and for three weeks the modern Casanova played for two hours a day at roulette, and by sheer luck and patience won $10,000. Then Monte Carlo bored him. The Old World no longer attracted him, so he set out to conquer the New.

Taking his pseudonym from Walpole's famous novel, he called himself the Duke of Otranto, landed in Canada, found it "crude and uninteresting," and made his way to San Francisco, where he taught the proprietors of local gaming establishments a thing or two about card shuffling. Here he posed as a nephew of the Spanish Ambassador in Washington. But he yearned for a larger, more sophisticated stage for his talents, and embarked for the East.

On his return trip he did not linger in San Francisco, but, making his way to Chicago, posed as a commission merchant, was introduced into the best society, and won large sums of money at poker. His departure from the Windy City was somewhat hurried. He had become engaged to the daughter of a millionaire. The millionaire was apprehensive and made impertinent inquiries as to his antecedents.

Once while traveling from Paris to Nice he found himself in the same compartment with the Countess Angelika Wilding von Königsbrück, who belonged to a most distinguished Saxon family, and who, with her mother, was seeking health on the Riviera. The women were charmed by the graceful and compelling manners of their traveling companion, who represented himself to be a Roumanian real estate owner. At Nice they stopped at the same hotel, and Manolescu, who complained that his remittances were slow in coming, borrowed heavily from the Countess, and succeeded in winning her love. The wedding was celebrated March 17, 1898, at Genoa. The ceremony was performed by the Archbishop in person, and attended by a notable gathering of personages. Mamma was safely sent back to Saxony, and then the couple, with the bride's dowry of $50,000, started off on their honeymoon. In March of the following year they were in Geneva, where a child was born just as the last sou of the dowry was spent. The Countess's family then assumed an unfriendly attitude, partly on account of the money and partly on account of the fact that the husband had found favor in the eyes of another lady, with whose brother he fought a duel. On the field of honor, however, as elsewhere, the indomitable hand of Casanova did not desert him. He put a bullet through his antagonist's shoulder and again fled to America.

In Philadelphia he stole $200,000 worth of jewelry and returned to Europe in time for the Paris Exposition. Here he took the title of Lahovary, and succeeded in separating several foreign visitors from their pocketbooks. Next he went to Berlin, where he won the heart of a wealthy American lady at the Hotel Bristol. She was not unprotected, however, and when her relatives arrived and asked for guarantees of his identity and respectability, he excused himself, slipped upstairs, stripped their bureaus of the jewels they had left carelessly about, and made his escape.

Run to Earth at Genoa.

By this time Manolescu's description had a prominent place before the eyes of the Chiefs of Police of all the cities of Europe. He was run to earth in Genoa, betrayed by one of the many women who had participated in his fickle affections, was extradited, and taken to Berlin for trial. The trial turned out to be a farce. This accomplished rascal, who spoke every language, and had mingled with persons of every rank, was also an accomplished actor. In this case he acted insanity. He succeeded so well that experts were deceived, and, instead of being sent to prison, he was carried off to the asylum near Hertzberg. There he behaved so well that he won the confidence of the authorities. One morning his guard was found gagged and bound, but Manolescu was gone.

He went to Leipzig incognito, and, taking lodgings in a quiet quarter, began to put the memoirs, which he had carefully written out in the form of a diary in various parts of the world, in shape. He found little difficulty in finding a publisher, who promised secrecy and advanced him $5,000 in royalties. In bidding the latter good-bye, Manolescu extracted from him a promise not to bring out his memoirs before the calling of his divorce case in Kempten April 5. "By that time," he laconically remarked, "I shall be on the Atlantic. If my book is successful, I shall call on you again. Be prepared to honor any drafts I may make on you. I leave Germany with great regret, for I leave behind me an angelic wife and a pearl of a child. But necessity knows no law, and I must depart."

On April 10, in the little Bavarian town of Kempten, the Countess Angelika Wilding von Königsbrück secured her divorce.

Gymnastics in the Paris Fire Department.

Agility Sought First of All by the Drill Instructors—Wonderful Feats Achieved.

FROM close observation, it is safe to say that the corps d'elite of the Continental Fire Departments is the regiment of Sapeurs-Pompiers of Paris. For military purposes it is under the control of the Governor of Paris; for technical purposes under the Prefect of Police. It is not an easy matter to become a Paris fireman. A man must have served as a soldier, his record must be especially good, and he must possess some peculiar fitness for the service. The training is thorough. There are six hours a day of actual instruction, two hours of which are devoted to gymnastics under a professor to fit the men for live-saving duties.

Agility is considered in France to be one of the most valuable qualifications of a fireman—agility which will enable him to scale walls, to creep along gutters, to swing from window sills. Therefore the firemen of the great cities of France spend much time in their gymnasiums, drilling with parallel bars, flying rings, trapezes, and other apparatus, and also in the simple calisthenics that are familiar in schools. Physical training is carried to a high degree of excellence, and every distinguished visitor to Paris is invited to witness a gymnastic exhibition by the firemen.

New York Firemen Might Smile.

Some of these exercises would cause a New York fireman to smile, yet any expert in physical culture will testify to their value in making the joints supple, the muscles firm and hard, the chest broad, the movements quick, and in making the whole man stronger and healthier. To see a battalion of firemen lying flat on their backs and at the word of command raising and lowering their bodies from their hands makes one wonder what this seemingly puerile exercise has to do with putting out fires. The drill master will tell you that it strengthens the arms, wrists, shoulders, and chests, and makes the men more fit for deeds that demand agility and strength, such as rescuing women and children from upper windows.

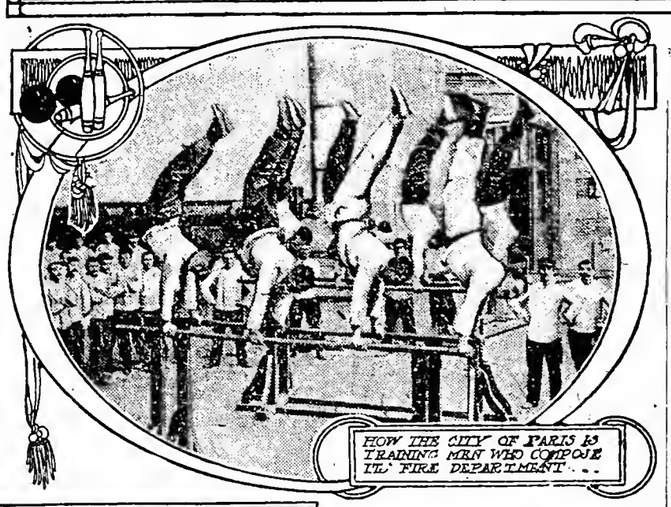
The gymnasium is the favorite place of amusement of Sapeurs-Pompiers, and they perform some really amazing feats of strength and dexterity, such as walking on their hands and doing the "grand circle" on the high horizontal bar. The Paris life savers have a drill which is exclusively and originally their own. A round horizontal bar about forty feet long and twelve inches in diameter is placed upon two twelve-foot upright posts. The men run along the bar, often balancing themselves on one foot, but rarely reach the end. In falling they catch hold of the bar, turn a somersault, and swing themselves gracefully to the ground. This exercise is to teach them to steady themselves, or to carry a person along the top of a swaying or falling wall.

Another of their feats is performed by two men swinging one on a trapeze, the other on the flying rings. After obtaining the necessary momentum they let go, pass each other in the air, catch the trapeze or the rings, make a quick turn, and repass each other in midair, all in one movement, as it were.

These men are wonderful as wall scalers; they climb with their hands, feet, knees, almost with their eyelashes, up a piece of wall built like that of a frame house. Ability to go up, or down, an almost smooth wall with a scaling ladder may prove invaluable to any of these men at any time, though of course they have scaling ladders and all the other paraphernalia of a fireman's work for use in ordinary cases.

Value of the Exercises.

It is, however, in the emergencies, in the unforeseen occasions, in which extraordinary measures must be taken, and taken instantly, that these gymnastic lessons stand a fireman in good stead. Such an occasion, for instance, as suddenly finding himself on the top story of a building with all the staircases burned away, and no time to wait for a ladder to be raised. Perhaps a woman, or a child, is crying for him to help; and then it is the man who can take a living burden in his arms and climb down the wall like a squirrel, who will be hailed as a hero.



A Profitable Deduction

THEY were two. Let us call them Sherlock Holmes and Dr. Watson. The names are not only appropriate but they lend dignity to the story.

Having found all the seats at a certain Broadway theatre sold, with the exception of two in a box, they had snapped these up, only to find them deep in the rear behind a very fat gentleman and a lady who had no intention of removing her immense hat.

Watson resigned himself to despair, but the eagle eye of Holmes roamed over the theatre.

"Watson," he said presently, "do you see that stage box just opposite us?"

"The one with the two young men in it?" asked Watson.

"Yes. Listen, Watson. A moment or two ago that box was unoccupied. The two youths now in it are merely the overflow from that large party in the contiguous box. In other words, they have no business where they are. Somebody else reserved that stage box and has not shown up. You and I, Watson, are very dissatisfied where we are. Do you follow me, my dear Watson?"

"No," said Watson, with characteristic promptness.

"During the intermission, Watson, those two youths will go out. You and I will go to yonder stage box and sit there. The youths will return. Seeing us in the box, they will take us for the people who have reserved it. They will retire ignominously to the overcrowded box whence they overflowed. My bump of induction tells me that whoever really reserved yon stage box will not show up to-night. Consequently you and I, Watson, will enjoy the rest of the performance from two of the best seats in the house, instead of from two of the worst."

"But—" objected Watson.

"Come!" commanded Holmes.

They went over and sat in the stage box. The two youths, returning, ventured not to disturb the newcomers leaning nonchalantly on the railing with all the confidence of rightful ownership. They subsided into the overcrowded box where they belonged. And everything worked as smoothly as if this were one of the inventions of the ingenious Sir Arthur Conan Doyle instead of a mere humble true story.

NEW WONDERS THIS SEASON AT CONEY ISLAND

Beatific Heavenly Visions and Gruesome Scenes in Hell to be Luna Park's Latest Novelty—The Great Shipwreck and Other Attractions.

THE wonders of Coney Island have been retouched, and new wonders even have been added. The inventors of Dreamland have been dreaming persistently all Winter, with the result that they have a number of new spectacles to offer. Frederic Thompson, in spite of his excursion into theatrical management with the production of "Brewster's Millions," has never for a moment forgotten his love for the Luna Park, which has proved such a gold mine for him. He has been inventing a quantity of new spectacles and illusions.

The Coney Island of a few years ago seems almost a myth. The belief that the "limit" had been reached before has only given the managers an excuse to push the "limit" a little further. The income of vast sums of money permits these same managers to expend yet more vast sums each year on their shows. And the rivalry between Dreamland and Luna Park is ample assurance that many a day will pass before the public will run short of novelties where the breezes blow.

This Summer there will be just two dozen leading attractions at Luna Park. They are the "Trip to the Moon," the "Mountain Torrent," the "Moving Picture Theatre," the "Parisian Café," "The Dragon's Gorge," the "Mollycoddle," "The Days of '49," "The Kansas Cyclone," "Marino," the "Laughing Gallery," the "Scenic Railway," the "Chutes," the "Great Shipwreck," "The Tickler," the "Red Mill," the "Autodrome," "Niagara Falls by Wire," "Night and Morning," the "Helter Skelter," the "Brownie Theatre," the "Japanese Garden," the "Free Circus," the "Musical Flower Garden," and "The Ostrich Farm."

"The real big feature of the revised Luna Park," Mr. Thompson explained, "is going to be what I have named 'Night and Morning; or, A Journey Through Heaven and Hell.' The idea in itself is, of course, not new, but the manner in which it has been worked up is entirely original and is expected to make it a 'thriller.' It shows you the complete journey to Hades and Paradise, and is full of surprises. It ought to be—for it cost no less than $50,000!

Through Heaven and Hell.

"The first room into which the people enter is like a big coffin with a glass top and the lid off. You look up through the roof and see the graveyard flowers and the weeping willows and other such atmospheric things. When everything is ready the coffin is lowered into the ground. It shivers and shakes, and when it tips up on end you hear a voice above give a warning to be careful. Then the lid is closed and you hear the thud of the dirt.

"The man who is conducting the party now announces that they must have a spirit to guide them. A subject is put into a small coffin, and in an instant he is transformed into a skeleton. Then a real skeleton appears and delivers a solemn lecture in which he tells the people that they must 'leave all hope on the outside'—a gentle perversion of the old 'abandon hope all ye who enter here.' People go round and offer to sell fans for $1.50 apiece and ice for 50 cents a chunk.

Now there is a great clanking of chains and the side of the coffin comes out and the visitors pass down into the mysterious caverns. First they see a twentieth century idea of Hell, with monopolists frying in pans and janitors fastened to hot radiators. There is plenty of room for all sorts of exhibitions, for the dimensions of the building are 100 by 300 feet. After the modern Hell the people come to the Chamber of Skeletons. Though these skeletons haven't a stitch of clothes on them, they smoke cigarettes most unconcernedly all the time just like live men. Some of them will call you by name and if you want to talk to them they will obligingly 'kid' you back. They will sing for you and they are particularly anxious to shake hands.

"Next you come to the panorama of Hell, where you see a vision of all the condemned spirits being washed down by the River of Death. Now comes the big change—and the return to morning. The doors open and you find yourself in a large ordinary room, with cathedral-like windows through which you look outside and see the graveyard which looms up with a weird effect. Like a great mist you see the spirits rising from the graves and ascending to Heaven. There is thunder and lightning and the music of an organ. The flashes of lightning form a cross.

The Transformation Scene.

"The great transformation now takes place. The whole graveyard floats off into space with the single exception of an immense cross, where the form of a young girl is seen clinging to the Rock of Ages. Fountains foam with all their prismatic colors, and the air is filled with troops of circling angels. The room itself vanishes and you find yourself in a bower of flowers under the blue sky. At the climax an angel comes down with a halo which she places on the head of the girl who is still clinging to the cross. Then all that vanishes, too, and you are within four blank walls once more."

Continuing to describe the new features Mr. Thompson said: "'The Mollycoddle' is a secret meant to mystify. The central feature is a boat in which a number of people will be seated and this boat is apparently going to collide first with one side and then with another side of the triangle in which it is placed. It is a contrivance of mirrors—so arranged that if you hold up your hand you will see thousands and thousands of other hands. In fact, the reflections mount up into the millions and the effect is described as bewildering. Why did we call it the 'Mollycoddle'? Because—we had to have a name for it. That's the only reason and that is reason enough for any showman.

"'The Days of '49' is a presentation of all the features from all the dime novels. It is promised that everything that ever happened to a 'Dare Devil Dick' or a 'Nick Carter' is going to happen there, and is going to happen so fast that Dick and Nick would be struck dumb with astonishment if they could see it.

"'The Kansas Cyclone' is to be a scenic panorama of the same general type as the old 'Johnstown Flood.' The town will be shown before and after the catastrophe and the cyclone itself and the destruction it brings.

"'The Great Shipwreck' will show a fishing village in Winter, with angry sea rolling up to the shore. There will be a little sketch leading up to the action of the spectacle. Then darkness approaches, and a fearful storm comes up with the night. You see a rocket fired at sea—and then you know there is a ship in distress. The entire scene is changed in the space of a minute and a half. A lifeboat puts out from shore and makes for the ship in distress. This ship is not a scenic illusion at all. It is a full-sized vessel and is making straight for the rocks. It hits the rocks and begins to break up. The rescue is finally effected by the use of the buoy. Then the ship goes to pieces and vanishes.

The attractions at Dreamland have not yet been announced in quite such detail as Mr. Thompson described his attractions at Coney Island. The great special addition to "The End of the World" spectacle, however, is now almost complete. It is entitled "The Orient," and is the invention of William Ellis, who is responsible for "The End of the World" and many other spectacular efforts. In the language of the press representative: "A picture of the time when Belshazzar reigned from the Euxine Sea to the Persian Gulf and when tribute was brought to him from nearly all the lands of the East will be seen within the sound of the rustling trolley cars of to-day. The picture chosen to portray the glories of ancient civilization is the Feast of Belshazzar."

The Feast of Belshazzar.

The scene is supposed to transpire at the end of the reign of Belshazzar, when Darius and his Medes were already lying in wait outside the walls of the doomed city. On a great stage, larger than most of the city theatres, will be shown the throne room of the Babylonian monarchs in all the luxury of a degenerate Oriental court. The throne itself stands high on a dais of onyx and chalcedony on one side of the chamber. Slaves of all nations are to be seen waving fans of peacock plumes, while other slaves from the East and robed in Oriental garments serve the King and his Generals with wine from golden flagons. Poets are reciting the deeds of Babylonian warriors and singers and dancing girls minister to the pleasure of the court. About the King are his courtiers and his counsellors, old men with flowing robes and beards. The soldiers all glitter in brazen armor.

The first picture depicts the height of the revelry of this dissolute court. While the dancing girls are performing the dance of the seven veils—already so famous on Broadway—and the priests are intoning an invocation to the idol and the maidens are singing to Astarte, the Goddess of Beauty, a sudden flash of lightning comes out of the clear sky. Then through the darkness an arm appears, luminous and awesome, against the wall before the King. Slowly the hand traces in fire the words of the Bible—Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin. Then, when the hand disappears, the words remain shining in the gloom. The room trembles in a thunderclap and all is light once more.

Daniel appears before the King and interprets the meaning of the fatal and mysterious words. Again the revelry proceeds. In the very midst of it the picture changes; the hangings are drawn from one side of the room and the hills and plains without the city are seen bathed in moonlight.

Scenes of Broil and Battle.

Over the hills and the plains come the hordes of Darius the Mede. They have diverted the course of the river above the city and up the dry river bed they march to the city, leaving death and destruction in their wake. The King and his guests, drunken and unawares, are vanquished. The slaves and girls are carried off by the invading soldiers. Belshazzar himself is slain by Darius, who entere the throne room in his chariot.

The scene has changed from one of boisterous merriment to one of hopeless ravage. As the attacking cohorts finish their work of destruction, the ancient city, still bathed in moonlight, is seen in ruins with the Medes in complete possession of the chaos.

All the various countries of the East will contribute to the entertainment of the visitors of "The Orient," the name Mr. Ellis has selected for the inclosure where the Feast of Belshazzar is to be enacted. In another building will be seen an Oriental circus, and among its features is promised a troupe of jesters from the palace of the Gaekwar of Baroda, who was a visitor to Dreamland last year and who has since then been in communication with Mr. Ellis.

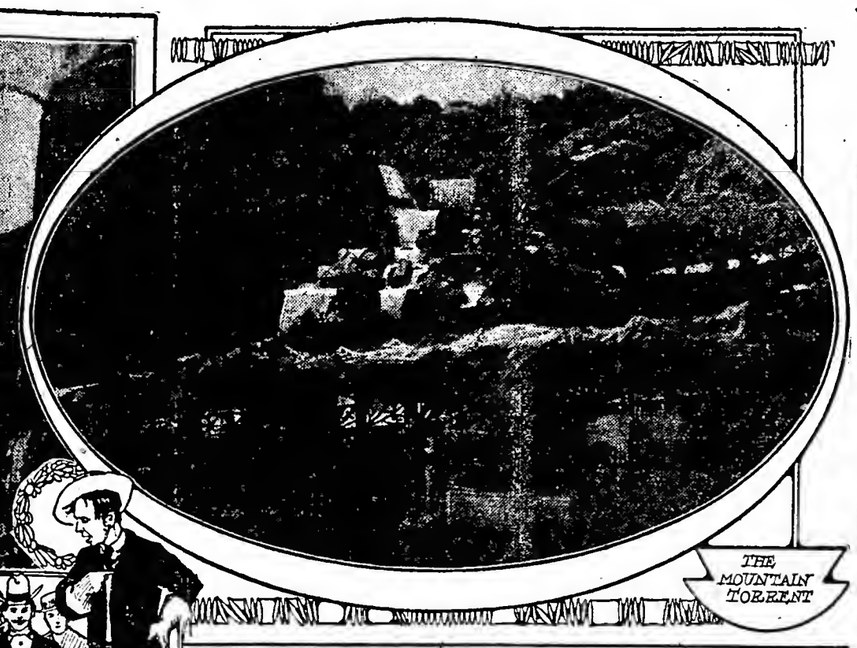
The Royal Court, which is in the midst of the buildings—all of Babylonian architecture—will provide an entertainment in keeping with the general schemo of the place. Whirling dervishes and acrobats will make sport for the visitors waiting for the performance in the auditorium, and a number of Moroceo bandits, guaranteed members of Rais Uli's band, will be on hand.

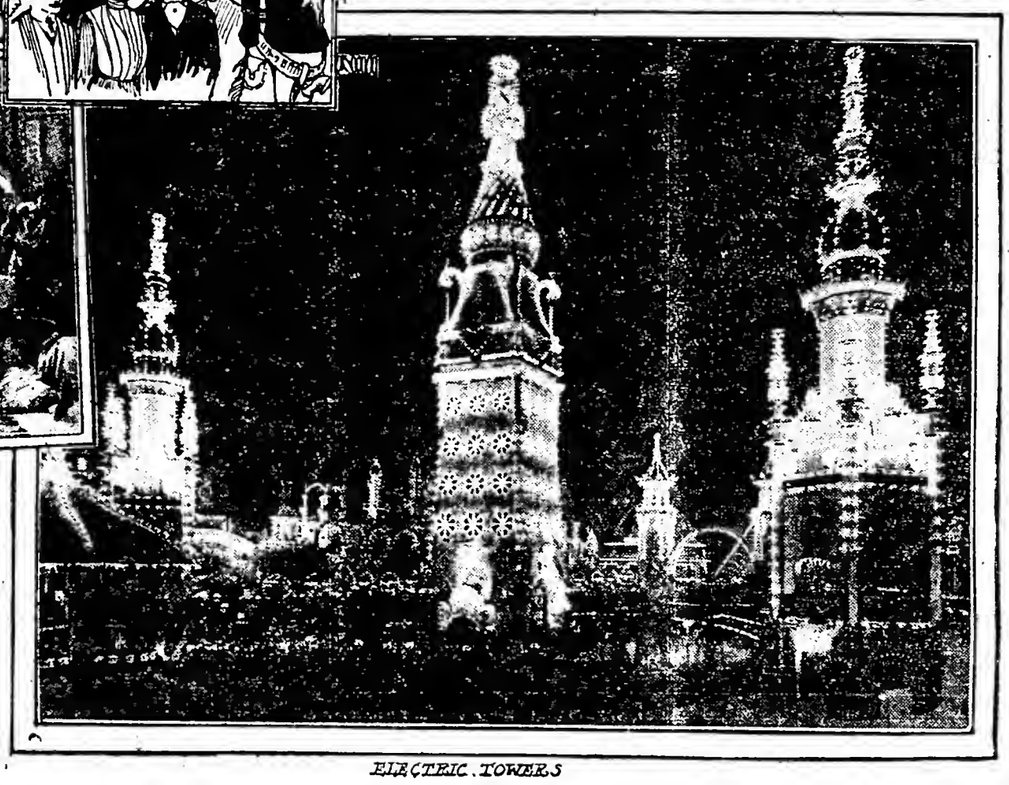
Special attention has been given to the Great Wall and its gate, leading to the Royal Court and the Feast of Belshazzar. The management claims that this is the largest wall ever constructed of staff. Its length is over 200 feet.

Other Spectacles.

The "End of the World" spectacle, which was completed last year, has been so enlarged that nearly one hundred persons will be on the stage at each performance. The Dance Hall and the Chutes are retained and there is a grove known as "The Trojan"—the base of the Electric Tower. "Venice" has been added to and rechristened "The Bay of Naples"; in fact, it is essentially new. Another entertainment, entitled "The New Arabian Nights," will contain seven illusions—one for each day of the week—all founded on mythological stories invented by Roltair, the inventor of "Creation." This latter spectacle will be retained with the addition of a second entertainment, entitled "The Awakening," showing Moses when he receives the Commandments on Sinai. "Touring the Yellowstone" and the Scenic Railway will also be in operation, and the baby incubators have not been forgotten.

It is needless to add that Boston will be in evidence with a new animal show.





ELECTRIC TOWERS

Glories of Ancient Civilization with Stirring Bible Pictures to be Revealed at Dreamland—The Feast of Belshazzar in a Lavish Spectacle.

Getting a Perspective on the Coming Actors' Fund Fair

Metropolitan Opera House Transformed Into Miniature Stratford-on-Avon—President Roosevelt to Press the Button as a Signal for Open Purses.

AT 8 o'clock on the evening of Monday, May 6, President Roosevelt, in his executive library at Washington, will press an electric button which signals the opening of the Actors' Fund Fair at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. Afternoon and evening during the entire week the auditorium will be converted into a busy and brilliant bazaar.

The object is to replenish the treasury of the Actors' Fund, which annually disburses some $40,000, an amount considerably in excess of its income. The Actors' Fund makes public appeal with every claim to generous consideration. If a private or public charity is to be assisted the actors are usually the first called upon and the first to respond. One year ago they were playing all over America to raise great sums for the San Francisco sufferers. Without the actors it would be impossible to organize benefits. Now the profession makes a National appeal that it may relieve its own afflicted members.

The Actors' Fund Fair will be the first of its kind in fifteen years. Over one thousand women of various organizations, some in no way affiliated with the stage, have combined as members of active committees. Generous response has been made in the way of cash contributions and generous donations. There will be no lack of goods and novelties, practical and artistic, with which to equip this great exposition universal.

The decorative scheme, devised by Edward G. Unitt of the Lyceum Theatre involves the reproduction, upon the main floor of the village of Stratford-on-Avon—or rather, its principal thoroughfare, lined with historic buildings—the Shakespeare house, Anne Hathaway's cottage, the Guildhall, and dozens of quaint Warwickshire structures, all fitted up as booths for the sale of antiques, curios, souvenirs and up-to-date novelties never dreamed of in Will Shakespeare's time. At the end of the street the old Stratford Church nestles in luxuriant foliage upon the bank of the sluggish Avon. Not even this immense floor space will be sufficient to accommodate all attractions. The spacious ante-rooms and club rooms upon the second tier will be utilized for booths and entertainment halls.

Scores of actors and actresses, including many famous stars, will work earnestly in various fields of activity. The Professional Woman's League will have an immense booth in the Guildhall, presided over by Susanne L. Westford, Mrs. Ida C. Nahm, and many others. Anne Hathaway's cottage will be devoted to the Twelfth Night Club's collection of souvenirs of famous players and authors—a sleeve from the gown of Adelaide Neilson, most beautiful of Juliets; relics of Booth, Barrett, McCullough, and Jefferson; autographs of Charles Reade, Dion Boucicault, Robert G. Ingersoll, Ristori, and Fanny Davenport; jewels worn by Charlotte Cushman, Laura Keene and other stars of the long ago; a button from E. L. Davenport's coat; a hoot of Lester Wallack's; Sir Henry Irving's watch, and dozens of others. Souvenir cups and saucers are donated by present time stars. The Players will fit up the Shakespeare house as a gallery for the sale of nearly $40,000 worth of donated paintings by the modern artists. The Actors' Church Alliance, of which Edyth Totten McGrath is President, will have a display of useful and artistic wares to which its chapters all over America have been contributing since last November. The Century Theatre Club will have Mark Twain, George Ade, Charles Klein, Channing Pollock, Paul Armstrong, and other popular playwrights selling their own works and autographs. Bonci the tenor signs the fly leaves of 250 copies of his life story. David Warfield has autographed one thousand of his photographs.

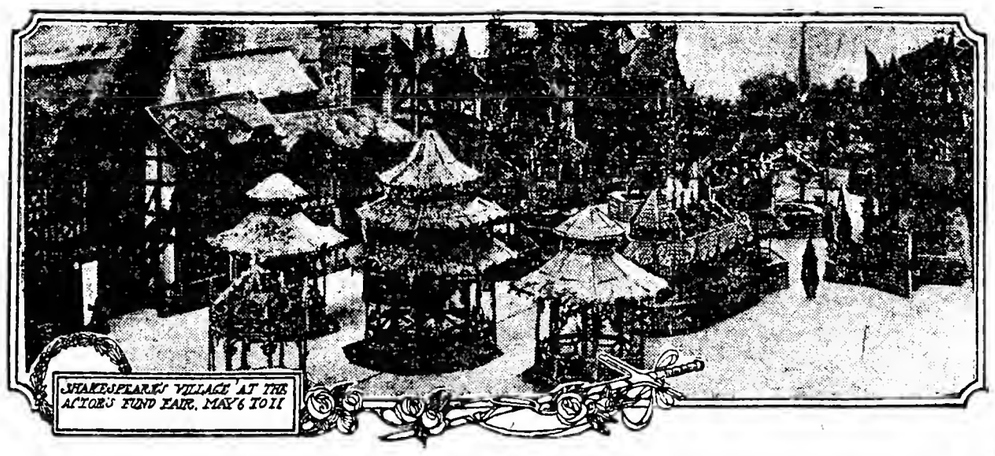
Anna Held has a booth and sells chances on her $2,000 oil portrait; Klaw & Erlanger, "The Road to Yesterday"; Wallack's Theatre, the Lyceum, Cohan and Harris, and others have fine exhibits. The Hippodrome sends its Indians to sell native wares. There will be an immense grocery store with a score of actress sales ladies. Mrs. George M. Baxter displays the latest Parisian novelties in the Entende Cordiale booth; Cathrine Countiss and a dozen girls of the Professional Woman's League have a racing wheel, operated by famous women stars. Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish and a distinguished list of assistants represent society at the flower booth. Mrs. James Speyer and others will conduct the candy booth. Sydney Cowell has a $1,500 album autographed by great stars who are dead. Alice Fischer expects to realize as much more from the parchment cook book in which men and women stars of the present have written their favorite recipes. Newspaper cartoonists will do lightning sketches while you wait. Rosa Rand has a sewing machine department with pretty demonstrators. Emily Rigl presides over "The Smokery," and Mrs. Claude Hagen over the dolls' house. Marshall P. Wilder and his little maids, in costume, will be in the Japanese tea garden. The Actors' Society will have an independent tea booth. The diamond star voted to Georgia Cayvan as the most popular actress of 1892 will be voted to the stage favorite of 1907. A $10,000 diamond necklace is among the many valuables to be sold by chance.

The donations include everything from twenty-five Long Island building lots to a penwiper; from an automobile to a baby carriage, from a naptha launch to a toy sailboat. The value runs into thousands of dollars; the exhibitors and helpers into a list of well-known names much too long to print. Many business houses will fit up booths, demonstrate novelties and donate their sales.

John Drew will be at a toggery. Ethel Barrymore has a corner filled with souvenirs of the famous Drews and Barrymores. Douglas Fairbanks sells soap busts of Ethel Barrymore. David Belasco sends all his stars. Hamilton Revelle takes amateur photographs, and Robert Lorraine autograph books of Bernard Shaw dramas. Grace George, Blanche Bates, Hattie Williams, Mrs. Fiske, Lillian Russell, Viola Allen, Maude Adams, Rose Stahl, Minnie Dupree, Amelia Bingham, Frances Starr, Margaret Illington, Maxine Elliott, Elsie Janis, and all the famous women stars will do something. Madame Modjeska will have her own booth. The list is almost endless.

The Lambs will be the jolly hosts of an ancient Stratford Inn, clinking glasses and singing rollicking old English songs. The Green Room Club offers a big side show, with managers and actors as burlesque freaks and lecturers. The vaudeville comedy club provides headliners for hourly vaudeville shows. The White Rats make a big display in their own booth. The hall of the music publishers will present Vesta Victoria, Alice Lloyd and other famous singers as demonstrators of the latest dittiee. There will be Telharmonic recitals, and concerts afternoon and evening by the most famous military bands and orchestras, including Victor Herbert's, Bayne's Sixty-ninth, the Seventh, Fourteenth, Twenty-second, and Seventy-first Regiment, and Old Guard Bands, the orchestras of Manuel Klein and Maurice Levi, each 75 strong, and Saenger's Symphony Orchestra of 60 pieces. The Opera House is given by Mr. Conried rent free. The Musical Union suspends its rule and allows members to play without compensation. Scene painters and stage mechanics donate their services. The scheme has been to provide a fair of colossal dimensions with the smallest possible expenditure and the greatest possible resultant profit.

Out of chaos a few weeks ago the projectors of this great charity enterprise have gathered up slender threads of detail and twined them into an enormous cable of practical results. Credit for untiring effort must be given to Daniel Frohman, President of the Actors' Fund, and the Fair Committee, which includes Charles Burnham, Joseph Brooks, Joseph R. Grismer, and Clay M. Greene. A. L. Erlanger is Chairman of the Subscription Committee. The Director General is Milton Roblee. E. D. Price of the Inter-State Amusement Company is Manager of the department of promotion. The Friars, a club of 140 theatrical press agents, will publish a daily paper during the fair. Mrs. A. M. Palmer, to whom the Actors' Fund Fair of fifteen years ago owed much of its success, has been a tower of strength as Chairman of the Women's Executive Committee. Nearly one thousand ladies of various organizations have co-operated loyally.



A DRAMATIC TRACT.

Miss Robins's "Votes For Women" Acted in London.

ELIZABETH ROBINS, who used to act and was, indeed, one of the first women to act Hedda Gabler in New York, who then became more or less noted as a novelist, now appears as the author of "Votes for Women," described as "a dramatic tract in three acts," and produced for the first time at the Court Theatre.

The Hon. Geoffrey Stonor, a rising politician and probable Cabinet Minister, has just become engaged to Beatrice Dunbarton, a charming girl nearly twenty years his junior. At Wynnstay House, situated in Hertfordshire, is assembled a number of the leaders of the Suffragist Party, chief among them being Vida Levering, whose views, unlike those of some of her more timid sisters, are of the most advanced nature. Hither come Geoffrey and Vida, the latter eager to confide the tale of her happiness to the sympathetic ears of Lady Wynnstay. Presently Geoffrey finds himself face to face with Vida; there is a glance of mutual recognition, and the audience, already in the secret of the woman's history, realizes at once that he is the man to whom she had ten years previously intrusted her fate. Upon this foundation the curtain falls. Nor is the thread of the story to be resumed until the third and final act has begun. Here the battle between the two women, as between Geoffrey and Beatrice, has to be fought out. Beatrice, young, ignorant, and innocent of evil as she is, has grasped much of the truth, and nothing now will satisfy her but that her lover shall promise to marry Vida. Not even when she learns that Geoffrey was the deserted, not the deserter, will she abandon the position she has taken up; the wrong must be righted, two people, from whose hearts all feeling of love or devotion has long been banished, must link their fates together in order to satisfy the demands of the moral code. Luckily for their peace of mind, both recognize the futility of such a measure, and refuse to take a step which could only insure to them greater misery than before.

Yet Geoffrey must pay the debt he owes to all women by reason of his injustice to one. And that can alone be done by his promise to espouse the cause of the sisterhood even if he have to make a Cabinet question of his change of attitude! It is in this way that Miss Robins solves the problem.

W. J. LOCKE'S NEW PLAY.

W. J. LOCKE'S new play, "The Palace of Puck," which is now being given at the Haymarket, appears at this distance to be a pleasant rendering in fantastic guise of a familiar theme. In an extended review of it in The London Telegraph, Puck's line, "What fools these mortals be!" is quoted as its keynote.

Christopher Polmore, a Colonial broker, may be the stereotyped "something in the City," with strong views as to what is decorous or not, and with a constant reiteration of the words "I disapprove," applied to anything beyond the narrow scope of Mincing Lane on the one side and suburbia on the other. Nora, his wife, may also be a pattern of domestic virtue, living an exceedingly narrow life, with a little soul soon choked by petty cares. But once transport them to the Palace of Puck; let them break down in their motor journey outside a chateau in France belonging to the eccentric gentleman, Mr. Widgery Blake, and you shall see what a change will occur! At first they are frigid and uncomfortable, then in a week they begin to relax, and at the end of their stay they are not only reconciled to the strange life led in Mr. Blake's chateau, but learn certain useful lessons about their relations to one another, and pass out of our ken after the fall of the last curtain as real human beings, and no longer lay figures stuffed with moral maxims. As to Mr. Blake's chateau, the Palace of Puck, we know the model after which it is drawn. We think of "The Monks of Thelema," we think of the experiments at Brook Farm described by Hawthorne in his "Blythdale Romance," and of all the other free and joyous exhibitions of the old text, "Fay ce que voudras." Most of these establishments, it must be sorrowfully admitted, were failures. The Palace of Puck is a striking success.

NOW that the warm weather is approaching and the theatrical season is coming to a close the stock companies of the city have suddenly sprung into prominence. An entirely new production is to be made to-morrow by the Keith & Proctor stock company at the Harlem Opera House, and a production of another play, which was meant to come into New York but never reached the city, is to be made by the same management through the medium of the company at the Fifth Avenue. The first of these productions—which is really a new production and so something of an event in the current chronicles of our local stock companies—is a modern political and financial play, entitled "The Undertow," by Eugene Walter. The play at the Fifth Avenue is "The Jungle," the dramatization by Margaret Mayo of Upton Sinclair's sensational novel of the Chicago Stock Yards.

The only opening at one of the high-priced Broadway Theatres will be that of "Before and After," at the Astor on Thursday evening. This revival is meant to inaugurate a regular yearly series of Leo Ditrichstein farces, for which the management has arranged with the author-actor. George M. Cohan, putting aside "George Washington, Jr.," is going to appear himself in the revival of "Little Johnny Jones," which will open to-morrow at the Academy and is scheduled for a run of two weeks. Otherwise—all is quiet along the Rialto.

"Before and After," which Leo Ditrichstein wrote, and in which he appeared last year at the Manhattan Theatre, is to open a season of comedy at the Astor Theatre on Thursday night. Mr. Ditrichstein has contracted to furnish the Astor not only with revivals of his old pieces, but with a yearly supply of new comedies for an annual season of light productions. "Before and After" had a run of more than 150 performances last season at the Manhattan.

As many people will remember, the story of the farce concerns one Dr. Page, who ridicules his fellow-practitioner, Dr. Latham, because the latter claims to have discovered a powder that makes the ugliest woman look like a Venus to the man who has partaken of it. Of course, Dr. Page gets a drink of some of this mysterious drug, and, being under the influence, is so indiscreet as to kiss the wife of an excitable French Colonel. This Frenchman demands either a duel or an introduction to Mrs. Page, with whom he hopes to take his revenge. Page finds an actress friend, introduces her to the Colonel as his wife, appears with her at Saratoga—and events tumble over one another headlong.

Leo Ditrichstein will himself appear as Dr. Page. Other members of the cast are Charles Dickson, R. C. Herz, Henry Donnelly, F. Newton Lindo, Charles Rowan, John Arthur, Julia Taylor, Kenyon Elshop, Georgea Lawrence, Belle Bauve, and Mabel Findley.

Beginning to-morrow evening at the Academy of Music, George M. Cohan will begin an engagement of two weeks in "Little Johnny Jones," making his final appearances as the American jockey. The cast will be nearly the same as when this musical offering was seen on Broadway. Among the important members of the company are Sam J. Ryan, Tom Lewis, Jack Raffael, Frank Moatgomery, William H. Meehan, James Keene, Hazel Lowery, Lottie Medley, Ida Mantell, Stella Tracey, and Adele Rafter.

The dramatization of Upton Sinclair's novel "The Jungle" will be seen for the first time in New York to-morrow afternoon at Keith & Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre, with members of the regular stock company in leading rôles. The novel, which is familiar to practically all the reading public, and especially to all interested in the questions of Socialism, was dramatized last Autumn by Margaret Mayo, and this version, together with all the scenic equipment of the traveling company, is to be seen at the Fifth Avenue.

The principal scenes of the drama are laid in Chicago's "Packingtown," and it tells the story of the battle of the weak against the strong—the rich against the poor—as that battle appears to an ardent Socialist. The play differs from the book in that the romance of Ona and Jurgis reaches a more pleasant conclusion in the dramatic version, ending on a little Illinois farm—far from the purgatory of "Packingtown." Cecil Owen will appear as Jurgis, and Henriette Browne as Ona. Regular members of the stock company will fill the other rôles.

"The Undertow," which is to have its first production on any stage at the Keith & Proctor Harlem Opera House by the stock company, to-morrow afternoon, is the work of Eugene Walter, and was originally accepted for production by Cohan & Harris. The play deals with politics and the question of a street railway franchise. The hero is Dick Wells, a former reporter, who has taken charge of the manoeuvres of the Independent Party. The railroad gets the franchise in spite of his efforts, and he is publicly disgraced, being led into dissipation by the capitalists and suspected by the woman with whom he is in love. When he seems to be at the very bottom of the pile, the capitalists offer him every inducement to abandon his principles and become a man of affairs. His honor is left, however, and he refuses. The girl in the story overhears his declaration of independence, and again believes in him. They leave together to begin anew the battle for what they believe to be truth and justice.

PLAYS THAT HOLD.

Dramatic offerings that remain unchanged are Edward Abeles in "Brewster's Millions" at the Hudson, Rose Stahl in "The Chorus Lady" at the Hackett, Eleanor Robson in "Salomy Jane," with Wednesday matinees of "Merely Mary Ann" at the Liberty; Frances Starr in "The Rose of the Rancho" at the Belasco, Ethel Barrymore in "His Excellency the Governor" at the Empire, William Collier in "Caught in the Rain" at the Garrick, "The Man of the Hour" at the Savoy, Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin in "The Great Divide" at the Princess, and Carlotta Nilsson in "The Three of Us" at the Madison Square.

This is the third week of Arnold Daly in "The Boys of Company B" at the Lyceum, and also of Alla Nazimova in "Comtesse Coquette" at the Bijou. This is the second week of Grace George in "Divorcons" at Wallack's, of Cyril Scott in the return engagement of "The Prince Chap" at the Majestic, and of Minnie Dupree in the engagement of "The Road to Yesterday" at the Lyric Theatre.

MUSICAL ATTRACTIONS.

Musical attractions that still hold their own on Broadway are Montgomery and Stone in "The Red Mill" at the Knickerbocker, Eddie Foy in "The Orchid" at the Herald Square, Anna Held in "The Parisian Model" at the Broadway, and Louis Mann in "The White Hen" at the Casino. This is the final week of Frank Moulan in "The Grand Mogul" at the New Amsterdam.

AT OTHER THEATRES.

The Morris stock company at the Lincoln Square Theatre will continue to present "The Lost Paradise" for a second week.

"The Hypocrites," by Henry Arthur Jones, with the cast recently seen at the Hudson Theatre, is to be the offering at the Grand Opera House.

"The Millionaire Detective" puts in an appearance at the Fourteenth Street.

Joseph Santley in "Billy the Kid" comes to the American.

"When the World Sleeps"—is the title of the production at the Third Avenue.

Charles T. Aldrich appears at the Thalia in "Secret Service Sam."

Billy S. Clifford in "A Jolly Baron" is the attraction at the Yorkville.

James O'Neil in "Monte Cristo" comes to the West End.

"Me, Him, and I" is now to be seen at the Metropolis.

"Women Who Dare" is the startling title of the offering at the New Star.

VAUDEVILLE.

William J. Kelly continues as the dramatic headliner at Keith & Proctor's 125th Street Theatre, and will be seen this week in a new one-act play of Western life entitled "The Marshal," written by Thomas H. Davies. Marshall P. Wilder is the vaudeville star, and among the other performers are Charles H. Burke and Maida Dupree, Rafferty's dobs, Carlin and Otto, Anna Laughlin, and Donald and Carson in "Alec McLean's Dream."

Junie McCree and Tom Nawn are the headliners this week at Keith & Proctor's Union Square, presenting respectively "The Dope Fiend" and "Pat and the Genii." A. O. Duncan, the Dillon brothers, Collins and Hart, the Knight brothers, and Marion Sawtelle and Nettie Vesta are on the programme.

Maggie Cline will be the leading attraction this week at Keith & Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre, and will sing genuine Irish songs. McMahon's Pullman Porter Maids are the extra feature. Among others will be Clifton Crawford, Wessley's Juggling Troupe, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Truesdale, and Dorsch and Russell.

Valerka Suratt and William Goulud will do their Gibson Girl sketch this week at Keith & Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre, and Winsor McCay will draw some of his famous cartoon pictures. The Four Nelson Comiques, Albertine Melich and her trained parrots, the Wilson Brothers, and Lucie and Viate will appear.

Among the performers this week at Keith & Proctor's Jersey City Theatre will be George B. Reno, John Hymans and Lelia McIntyre, Elmer Tenley, and Little Bo-Peep.

Alice Lloyd, the English singing comedienne, will head the bill this week at Hammerstein's Victoria, and this will be her final week at the theatre. Among others on the programme will be Edward Connolly in George Ade's "Marse Covington," Sydney Deane in "Christmas on the Island," the Six Peerless Mowatts, and Harry Corson Clarke & Co. in a sketch.

Elsie Janis, who has just closed her season in "The Vanderbilt Cup," will re-enter vaudeville at the Colonial Theatre on Monday in a new singing specialty. A second important feature will be the "Rain Deers," a spectacular singing and dancing act. The Bagessons, Walter C. Kelly, and Ed. Raynard will also appear.

Eva Tanguay will be the principal feature at the Alhambra, rendering a number of new character songs. Wilfred Clarke and his company will present "What Will Happen Next." Among others will be Herzog's Trained Horses, Vasco, the "Mad Musician"; Hawthorne and Burt, and Mayme Remington.

The "Greater New York Stars" have alighted at Hurtig & Seamon's Music Hall.

"Wine, Women and Song," with Bonita as the star, continues with unabated popularity at the Circle.

The "Trans-Atlantics" come to shore at the Murray Hill.

The "Yankee Doodle Girls" are the attraction at the Gotham.

The "Rialto Rounders" are to be found at the Dewey.

The special feature at Huber's Fourteenth Street Museum will be James Mandy, the Iron Skull Man, who likes to have paving blocks broken on his cranium. In the theatre J. M. Moore's Minstrels will hold forth.

Huber's Casino, at Jerome Avenue and 162d Street, will celebrate its Spring opening to-day with a regular vaudeville bill.

Two new pictures are shown on the cinematograph at the Eden Musee. Earl Kapossy's Royal Hungarian Band continues to draw large audiences with afternoon and evening concerts.

SUNDAY CONCERTS.

Sunday concerts with good programmes are offered to-day at the various Keith & Proctor houses, Hammerstein's Victoria, the Alhambra, and the Colonial. All the burlesque theatres offer Sunday bills, as do also the West End, the Metropolis, the Thalia, the Yorkville, the Grand Opera House, the New Star, and the Third Avenue.

Ted Marks's concerts this afternoon and evening at the American Theatre will include numbers by such vaudeville performers as Sylviany, Marion and Pearl, the Clarence Sisters, Allen and Dale, Bert Marion and Sabelle Deane, and Minnie Harrison. There will be only one more concert this season.

HIPPODROME.

"Pioneer Days" and "Neptune's Daughter" continue to draw large audiences to the Hippodrome, where Indians and mermaids are still in high feather. Constant changes are being made in the circus attractions in the arena.

IRVING PLACE THEATRE.

Mr. Willi Thaller will make his final appearance this season in the Irving Place Theatre on Monday evening in "Educated People." Miss Hedwig von Ostermann will be the recipient of a testimonial on Tuesday evening, when the first performance hero of Hermann Sudermann's drama "Das Blumenboot" ("The Flower Boat") will be presented. The cast employs all the actors of Mr. Conried's German company, including Miss Hedwig von Ostermann as Thea. "Das Blumenboot" will be given at all the remaining performances, with the exception of Friday evening, which will be devoted to a performance of "Uriel Acosta" as a testimonial to Herr Wiads.

Most boys look forward to the time when they will be old enough to do as they please, and then when the time comes they go off and get married, so their dream is never realized.

BROOKLYN AMUSEMENTS.

Joe Weber and a company of well-known stage favorites will be at the Shubert Park in the "Dream City" and "The Magic Knight." The twin work is one of the cleverest that Victor Herbert and Edgar Smith have furnished Mr. Weber. In the supporting company are Lillian Blauvelt, Cecelia Loftus, Otis Harlan, William Hodge, Maurice Farkoa, Lillian Lee, and W. L. Romaine.

Puccini's grand opera of Japan, "Madame Butterfly," by the Savage English Grand Opera Company, will have its first Brooklyn production this week at the New Montauk. Since it was seen in Manhattan, the production has made a tour of the largest cities of the country, and was greeted everywhere by crowded houses. This will be the final production of "Madame Butterfly" this season.

"The Bishop's Carriage," dramatized from Mariam Michaelson's novel of the same name, comes to the Broadway. Jessie Busley in the leading role will have the part of the girl Raffles.

Jessie Bonstelle in "Sunday," a play of Western mining life, which will be at the Majestic for a week, will have the role in which Miss Ethel Barrymore formerly appeared. The story tells of a young orphaned girl left to the cars of rough miners, who bring her up.

At Hyde & Behman's the headliners will be Julius Stegger, who will appear in a one-act play, "The Fifth Commandment." Others on the bill are Simon and Gardner, Jack Wilson and Company, the Empire Four, Les Arlbes, the Dainty Four, Lillian Tyce, and the Holdsworths.

At Keeney's, Harry Tate's English Comedy Company heads this week's bill. They will present a sketch on the auto craze called "Motoring."

Houdini, "The Handcuff King," will be the feature of the week at the Orpheum. He will permit himself to be locked in a cell and will then make his escape by opening several locks.

"Custer's Last Fight," Hal Reid's latest melodrama, will be the attraction at the Folly.

James J. Corbett, the former champion pugilist, will be seen at the Grand Opera House in his comedy drama, "The Burglar and the Lady." Dore Davidson is his leading woman.

"The Hired Girl's Millions," a new farce in which the Russell Brothers are featured, comes to Blaney's.

"The Gay Morning Glories," burlesquers, are billed for the Star. Vaudeville acts are announced as a feature of the performance.

"The Lid Lifters" will hold its boards at the Gayety.

Lola Cotton in a new mystifying act will head the bill at the Novelty.

"The Conqueror" will be the offering of Payton's Lee Avenue Stock Company this week.

"Chimmie Fadden" will be given by the Spooner Stock Company at the Bijou.

"The Futurity Winner" will be the topliner at the Gotham.

"The Avenger" will be at Philips Lyceum.

"The High School Girls," burlesquers, will be at the Imperial.

The attraction at the Columbia will be "The Queen of the Highbinders."

GOSSIP OF THE RIALTO.

Eleanor Robson will to-morrow begin the last four weeks of her season at the Liberty Theatre. The final performance of "Salomy Jane" will take place on Saturday, May 18, and the last presentation of "Merely Mary Ann" at the matinee of Wednesday, May 15.

The first of the new series of vaudeville plays to be presented by Gustave Frohman will be "The Music Lesson," with Harold Heaton as the star. The play is the work of Louis De Coucy, author of "Lizette."

The run of "The Three of Us" at the Madison Squre Theatre will be ended on Saturday night, after having been presented 227 times. This is the longest run of any play at the Madison Square since the days of the Hoyt farces. The company will have a rest of one week before going to Brooklyn, then to Boston, and then to Chicago for an indefinite run. This same play will be the opening attraction for a few weeks at the Madison Square Theatre next season.

John McKenzie, Treasurer of the Lincoln Squsre Theatre, is to receive a benefit at that theatre to-night. A number of vaudeville performers have volunteered their services.

The 250th performance of the present attractions at the Hippodrome will be offered on Tuesday night, April 23. Meanwhile, the press agent has been making some calculations. He calculates that the old stage coach which is held up by the Indians in "Pioneer Days" has been the centre of explosion of about two tons of powder since the spectacle was first presented.

When Robert Mantell appears in Shakespearean repertoire at the New Amsterdam Theatre, following the engagement of "The Grand Mogul," and opening on Monday, April 29, his first performance will be as Brutus in "Julius Caesar." That tragedy will be repeated on Tuesday and Wednesday nights and on Saturday afternoon. "Richard III." on Thursday and Friday nights, and "Macbeth" on Saturday night will be the other tragedies of the first week. The Wednesday matinee will be devoted to "The Merchant of Venice," and will begin at 2:45, that teachers from the City High Schools may be able to witness the play from the beginning.

"King Lear," "Richelieu," and "Othello," with Mr. Mantell as Iago, will be the productions for the second week.

To-night at the Lyceum Theatre and to-morrow afternoon in the same auditorium Burton Holmes will deliver the last of his double series of illustrated travel talks. His final subject will be "Vesuvius-Naples." The lecture is really a composite of two individual lectures offered here last Autumn.

The facade of David Belasco's new Stuyvesant Theatre on Forty-fourth Street has been completed and the structure is now more than half roofed in. Workmen are making ready for the interior finish, after which the decorators will begin their part of the labor.

Thompson & Dundy will inaugurate the Coney Island season with the opening of Luna Park on Saturday, May 11. A force of 1,200 men is now employed getting the park into condition for its fifth season.

Olga Nethersole will not appear in New York this season, owing to the length of her Pacific tour, which she is now closing. Arrangements for her appearance in London at the Lyric Theatre next September have been canceled in order that she may return to the Pacific slope at the first possible moment. After engagements in Washington, Philadelphia, and Boston Miss Nethersole will close her season on May 18, and sail immediately for Paris, where she is to appear in June under the management of G. Astruc & Co. The actress will take her entire company to Paris, and will appear there in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," "Camille," "Carmen," "Adrienne Lecouvreur," "Sapho," "The Labyrinth," and "The Awakening."

Miss Nethersole will return to New York in August and will open her preliminary Western tour in Omaha on Labor Day. She will then go directly to San Francisco. Her regular season will begin in Chicago about Thanksgiving. She will be seen in New York early in 1908 at the Astor Theatre in Paul Hervieu's new play, "The Awakening."

A Little Chat With Grace George

The Convent as a School for Actresses—How "Divorcons" Is Like "The Lady from the Sea"—Acting and the Idle Life.

GRACE GEORGE had scarcely entered her room in the behind-the-scenes of Wallack's Theatre before the reporter was introduced. She still wore the charming white dress in which she plays the final act of "Divorcons." She still wore the same smile, alert and piquant; for, though it would not be polite to describe it as the "smile that won't come off," it is verily a smile that does not have to be assumed.

"I don't suppose I'm in any more of a hurry than you are," said Miss George, with one of those smiles that made one wish she were in no hurry at all. Then she seated herself and blithely prepared for the ordeal, as if she knew that it would not really be much of an ordeal after all.

"Why did I elect to do 'The Lady from the Sea' of all the Ibsen plays?" asked Miss George, repeating the question that had just been put to her. "Well, the truth is that, when I first read it five years ago, I liked it more as a story than all the other Ibsen dramas. The central character seemed more interesting to me than Hedda or Nora, or any of the other characters that have been much more frequently presented. It didn't seem difficult then. But now—now, after we have been rehearsing it and preparing for the special matinées we are going to give here in connection with 'Divorcons' it seems a very much bigger undertaking indeed. Of course it does!

"I don't know that I would call 'The Lady from the Sea' a symbolic play. It seems to me symbolic only in as much as men and women—the men as much as the women—want the things they can't have. This is just like Cyprienne in 'Divorcons.' She wants her lover as long as she thinks she can't have him. And when the way is apparently all clear—she doesn't want him at all! Some of the lines of the character in 'The Lady from the Sea' even suggest lines from the old Sardou comedy. As soon as the Ibsen heroine finds she can go, the desire to go loses its charm. When she is left to choose, the sea loses its fascination!

"I don't know exactly why I chose 'Divorcons' either, except that I liked it and wanted to do it some time ago. I saw Rejane do it five years ago in Paris, and I saw the last act in English once when Mrs. Fiske did it some years ago at a benefit performance. Last year, when I was on the road, I translated it, and even went so far as to put it into rehearsal. But some of the actors rebelled, because they didn't think the rôles were suited to them, and, as I was doing two other plays anyhow, I simply let the matter drop.

"I'm French in a way myself, you know—that is, I'm not really French at all, but just kind of French, as all convent girls are. I went to the convent of Notre Dame. Where is it? It's at Fort Lee!

"I've played other French rôles. For instance, I played Frou-Frou, and then I played the part of Kitty Ashe. She wasn't precisely French, either, but she was a convent girl—and I've just explained what that means.

"I don't see how it is the least strange that so many actresses should come from the convents. They are really a kind of training schools for the stage—in a way. Ever so many actresses have come from my own convent, and one of them, Miss Cutting, is with me in this company right now. In the convents they pay more attention to the stage than in other schools and as much as in the colleges.

"In the convent we had what they called monthly 'rehearsals,' when every girl played the piano or spoke a piece or gave a little play. More than that, we had to write our own plays! In the higher classes the girls gave allegorical plays about the virtues and vices and the wise and foolish virgins and such subjects. During my graduation year I wrote a play—a drama. And it was all in verse! I shan't ever be likely to forget that—because they kept me in a room for three days to make me do it! As I have said, it was all in verse and most of it was atrocious. It was stolen and cribbed from just everywhere you could imagine!"

"It was all in honor of a dear old Bishop," she continued, with a loving and almost reverent transformation of tone and expression. "The dear old man sat there and listened with patience. Now—he is dead."

The actress paused for a moment and then reverted to the subject of "Divorcons." "The version that we are doing is almost an exact translation," she continued. "Of course we had to leave out one or two delicious things that would never have done in English. I don't think that the play as we are doing it is really an adaptation. One might say that it has been 'Englished' by Miss Mayo, who had the tact to appreciate that Sardou had made a masterpiece and did not wish to change it.

"The version of 'The Lady from the Sea' that I am going to use is practically the translation of Clara Bell instead of the William Archer translation. I think that the Clara Bell translation is more poetic. All through the swing of the verse is prettier and the language is more euphonious. Especially I think this is true of the lines of the leading female part from which the piece takes its name—the part of Ellida. I suppose that the Archer translation may possibly be the stronger, but it does not seem to me so beautiful. It must be just the difference between the work of a man and a woman, and in this instance it seems to me that the work of the women is more fitting than that of the man."

To prove that this judgment had not been reached without study Miss George quoted parallel lines from the two translations.

Of her future plans Miss George said: "I want to get a repertoire and get away from the one-piece idea. Next season I mean to do 'Clothes,' 'Divorcons,' and 'The Lady from the Sea'—perhaps all of them in a week. I hate to do just one piece—and I think it is an idle life. I think it is really and truly an idle life just to get up and go to the theatre every night and do the same play time after time without having anything in preparation to be working on. The only new piece that I now have in mind for next season is 'The Death of Tintagiles,' by Maeterlinck. I am going to produce that, and it will be part of the répertoire, too. I am not trying to do a lot of classic or exceptional pieces. I simply want a good variety to play and to choose from."

As the intruder was about to take his departure Miss George made a request.

"Please don't treat me frivolously," she said. "If you do I shall denounce you from the stage."

And the man promised.

TO BENEFIT VETERAN ACTOR.

Franz Kierschner, for nine years connected with the Irving Place Theatre as stage director and actor, and now 74 years of age, will be tendered a benefit performance at the Academy of Music this evening. The testimonial has been arranged under the patronage of his friends, and the performers will be Lina Abarbanell, Leona Bergere, Anna Braza Franko, Elsa Fisher, Rita Kissin, Etelka de Vina, Rudolf Horsky, Oscar Krueger, Gustav von Seiffertitz, and Leopold Winkler. At this benefit Mr. Kierschner will make his farewell appearance on any stage.

Financial difficulties caused him to give up his life position in Vienna and come to New York in 1874, when he made his début as stage manager and actor at the old Germania Theatre—now Tony Pastor's. He played in San Francisco, and managed the German Theatre in Milwaukee during the season of 1877-1878. He returned to Europe and, when stage director in Breslau, advised Herr Conried to go to New York. He then returned to New York himself, and was seen at the Germania and later at the Thalia. More recently he joined the company at the Irving Place. He celebrated his fiftieth jubilee as a dramatic artist on April 3, 1900.

THE SCROLL OF FAME

Bears no name more illustrious than those of men who have devoted their lives to the advancement of mankind. What nobler mission could there be than to give education, pleasure and amusement to one's fellow man? To have given to the world an original, ingenious, historic and elevating entertainment is quite enough to command lasting fame for the originatur, founder and perpetuator of

AND

Congress of Rough Riders of the World

Col. Wm. F. Cody ("Buffalo Bill") Ex-Chief of Scouts, U. S. Army, pioneer, plainsman, hunter, guide and Indian fighter, has become famed across two hemispheres through exhibiting his historic exposition of early days in the Western wilds. For twenty-five years he has been before the public of two continents, heading his distinctive, bold and dashing galaxy of equestrian experts, always presenting an entertainment at once

HISTORIC AND GENUINE

Instructive in character, strongly marked in educational qualities, and typical of all that is uplifting and noble in man's rightful heritage of vigor, strength and healthy development. There is no sham or subterfuge about his exhibition; it is absolutely original, authentic and true to nature. Its predominating characteristic is genuineness, and everything presented is Realism itself. Every horseman is the hero he represents; the art he employs is the lesson of a lifetime. The garb he wears is the uniform of the nation or tribe which he represents. The very bridle that curbs the neck of a prancing steed is of the regulation make and pattern and will stand the closest scrutiny.

BUFFALO BILL STANDS ALONE

in a class unto himself, for in his class there is but ONE, and that one is Col. Wm. F. Cody. He is the last of the greater scouts, the last of the plainsmen-warriors who redeemed the western wilds for the onward march of commerce and civilization. His great exhibition is a truthful representation of those days when history was made from sunrise to sunset; when brave deeds were multiplied by the arithmetic of privation, and valor-cloaked horsemen rode in the saddle of undying fame. SOCIETY HOME AND ABROAD

MRS. GEORGE MESSEROY

THE delayed Spring has had the effect of prolonging the Winter amusements, and although the opera is over the playhouses are crowded, there are many dinners, and bridge rules as much of a tyrant as ever.

The first signs of the time of roses and cherry blossoms are visible, however, and each morning Central Park sees the driving of members of the Ladies' Four-in-Hand Club, which is getting ready for the parade on May 2. Tuxedo cottages are filling up, and the colony at Hempstead has returned from Aiken and settled for May and June on Long Island.

Last week saw the last dance of the season, and the weddings have been notable and interesting. There has seldom been a more characteristic gathering of the fashionable element in society than at the nuptials of Miss Natica Rives and Williams P. Burden on Wednesday at Grace Church. According to a fair critic, "Everybody was somebody." The Spring has not had a fairer bride. The reception at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Rives was a beautiful affair, attended by the Newport colony, and the representatives of families who for generations have been the ultra-fashionable set in New York society. There were sensational stories published about the crowd on Broadway and the mobs at the church door, but there was not a word of truth in them. In such a crowded district and on such a narrow thoroughfare it is only natural that at that hour there should be crowds in the street, and that some of the women stood by Grace Church gate to get a glimpse of the bride. But this happens at every wedding in town, even where the church is in the residential quarter.

The programme for this week will contain more weddings, but not near as many as have taken place in the first three weeks after Easter. There are yet some charitable entertainments, and May will see the opening of the racing season at Belmont Park.

The representation of "Bombs and Balloons" at the Carnegie Lyceum, with a star cast of fashionable girls, was another notable event of the week. Several of the cast, playing male characters, assumed masculine apparel with much grace. Miss Grace Hollingsworth's sparkling music was an instant success.

The last performances of opera have been given, and until the end much interest was evinced in the Manhattan by fashionable society. Both Mr. Conried and Mr. Hammerstein contemplate early openings next Winter, and the social season will begin in November and be much longer than that of this year.

Thursday's ships took out large numbers of passengers, among them many notable in New York society. May and June are the months for London and Paris. In the former city there will be a large American colony. Added to the number of house holders will be Mrs. Theodore Shonts and the Misses Shonts, who were presented last season. The Shontses will have a New York house next season.

The new Colony Club seems to be the centre of entertaining in town. There is hardly a day that luncheons and small affairs of all kinds are not given there, although many of them, those not restricted to the visitors' rooms, are purely feminine affairs.

At the St. Nicholas Rink the devotees of tennis have assembled for the series of indoor games arranged by Mrs. Barger-Wallach and Miss Nora Iselin.

Some Engagements of the Week.

The engagement of Miss Marjorie Dodd, only daughter of the late Samuel C. T. Dodd, and Henry Noble MacCracken, third son of Chancellor Henry M. MacCracken and Mrs. MacCracken, has been announced. Miss Dodd is in deep mourning for her parents. The wedding will take place on June 12. Mr. MacCracken is a brother of John Henry MacCracken and of George G. MacCracken, whose marriage to Miss Martha J. Hall, daughter of Mrs. John H. Hall, will take place at the Fifth Avenue home of the latter on April 29.

The engagement of Henry Wharton Shoemaker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Shoemaker, to Miss Beatrice Barclay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Barclay of Western Pennsylvania, was announced in Friday's TIMES.

The engagement of Miss Elsie Bertron Shaw, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Francis Shaw, to Henry James Hemmens, a lawyer, with offices at 54 Wall Street, was announced yesterday.

Announcement was also made in these columns yesterday of the engagement of Miss Lillian Pendleton Burdett, daughter of Mrs. James S. Burdett, to Nathaniel Cary Halstead of Washington Avenue, Brooklyn.

Notable Ocean Travelers.

On Thursday several ships left New York bound for Europe. Among the passengers were many people of note who have just arranged their Spring and Summer plans.

Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and Miss Jean Reid were among the travelers. Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and Miss Reid, who have been in this country since early Winter, are to join Ambassador Reid in London. They have a busy season before them, as there are many Americans to be presented, and some large entertainments to be given. The illness of D. O. Mills has been the cause of postponing Mrs. Whitelaw Reid's return, and Miss Reid waited for the Barnes-Barney wedding, at which she was a bridesmaid.

Mrs. Ogden Mills and the Misses Mills have planned to sail at the end of the month. They are to be on the Continent a short time, and then they will visit London, and be entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Burns, among others. Mrs. Burns is Mrs. Mills's niece and a bride of the year. The Burnses have just moved into a splendid London house.

Mrs. John Jacob Astor and her little daughter also sailed on Thursday. Mrs. Astor has planned to pass a part of the Summer in London, and is to do some general country house visiting. Col. Astor will join her later. It is doubtful if Mrs. John Jacob Astor will be at Newport except for a brief period next Summer. She is a great favorite abroad, and now that her intimate friend, the former Mrs. Nannie Shaw, is Mrs. Waldorf Astor, and the famous feud between the two branches of the Astor family has been put aside, Mrs. John Jacob will be one of the guests at many of the Cliveden entertainments. She will no doubt be there at the arranged visit of King Edward, which is to take place some time in May or June.

Mrs. Fred Pearson and Miss Josephine Pearson sailed with Mr. and Mrs. Charles May Oelrichs and Miss Oelrichs, who are to be abroad for some time. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Martin are now in Paris awaiting them.

Mrs. William Alexander and Miss Frances Alexander went abroad on the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, on which were also booked Mrs. Reeve Merritt, a cousin of President Roosevelt; Mr. and Mrs. John Innes Kane, Miss Margaret Choate, David Wolfe Bishop, F. Gallatin, and Mr. and Mrs. Louis K. Hyde. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Borden were on board. They are on their wedding trip. On the Cedric were Mr. and Mrs. Courtlandt Dixon Barnes, (Miss Barney) Gardner Cassatt, and the Misses Cassatt, Arthur B. Randolph, Schuyler Parsons, and Miss Louise Conde.

The Misses Chanler and Mr. and Mrs. William C. Spencer were on La Savoie.

Homeward Bound.

Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Brooks arrived on the Carmania on Wednesday. While abroad they visited Mr. and Mrs. Waldorf Astor. Mrs. Astor is Mrs. Brooks's sister. Another sister is Miss Langhorne, whose rumored engagement to Prince Francis of Teck, brother of the Princess of Wales, has been denied. Prince Francis has been visiting the Von Andres at Cannes.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Pierrepont Edwards also arrived by the Carmania, and on the Republic was Maitland Armstrong.

Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Drexel are expected in New York within a fortnight. They come here to meet Mrs Drexel's sister, Mrs. James Henry Smith, who is returning from the Orient with the body of her husband. The funeral of Mr. Smith may take place in New York, where he had so many friends and where he had made his home. Mr. and Mrs. Drexel will return to London. Miss Drexel may make her début later on in the season, and she will be chaperoned by one or more of Mrs. Drexel's English friends. It is not yet decided whether Lady Cooper, Mr. Smith's only living blood relative, will accompany Mrs. Drexel on her visit to New York. At last accounts, the Duke and Duchess of Manchester were with Mrs. Smith, as was also her daughter, Miss Anita Stewart. They are expected to arrive on May 3.

Weddings of the Week.

There are not many weddings scheduled for this week. The list of the attendants has already appeared in THE TIMES. The weather, which is becoming more and more Springlike, favors country nuptials.

Miss Margaret Carmichael Roper, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Roper, will marry Walter Cook, Jr., at Christ Church, Pelham Manor, on Tuesday. The church is limited in capacity, and there will be a reception only for the family and a few friends after the ceremony. Miss Jessie M. Stevens will be the maid of honor, and the matron of honor will be Mrs. Witherbee Black of Pelham Manor. There are three bridesmaids, the Misses Harriet M. Stevens, Ethel Wood, and Marie Haydock. Dr. Edward Cook will be best man, and the ushers Langdon Roper, Herbert Lawton Coffin, Arthur F. Gotthold, and William P. Sayre.

At St. James's Protestant Church in town on the same day, Miss Constance Burlingame, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Livingston Burlingame, will be married to Tracy Hoppin. Miss Mary Dows will be the maid of honor. There will be a large church wedding, but a small reception.

The marriage of Miss Edna Woolworth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin W. Woolworth, and Franklyn Laws Hutton of this city, will take place at the Church of the Heavenly Rest on Thursday. Miss Woolworth has chosen her unmarried sister, Miss Jessie Woolworth, as maid of honor, and her married sister, Mrs. Charles E. F. McCann as matron of honor. Edward P. Hutton is to be best man.

On the following day, April 26, Miss Grace Fargo, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Fargo, will be married to Daniel Chauncey, Jr., of Brooklyn. Miss Clara Fargo, a sister, will be maid of honor, and among the bridesmaids will be Miss Olive Schley, Miss Kate de Forest Prentice, Miss Madeline Chauncey, and Miss Helen Judson. Rene La Montagne, Jr., will be best man. The ceremony will take place at St. Thomas's Church. It will be followed by a reception at the residence of the bride's parents.

At Greystone-on-the-Hudson, the former home of the late Samuel J. Tilden, there will be a large wedding on Saturday. This will be the first matrimonial event celebrated in the famous mansion for many years. Just now, in the first blush of Spring, the grounds and lawns are things of beauty, and should the weather prove propitious it will be one of the most beautiful weddings of the season. The bride will be Miss Irene Untermyer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Untermyer, and the bridegroom Louis Putnam Myers. Special trains will take the guests to the reception, which is to follow the ceremony at 3 in the afternoon.

In several of the recent delightful books on Washington society in the first half of the last century there are descriptions of the visit of Miss Harriet Martineau to that city. Miss Martineau, one of the most brilliant writers and women of her day, was a distant relative of Cyril Martineau, who will marry Miss Muriel Delano Robbins, daughter of Mrs. Price Collier, at Tuxedo on June 1. Mr. Martineau has taken a house in London: Miss Robbins was presented at Court last year. Her stepfather, Price Collier, and Mrs. Collier have spent several seasons in the English and Irish hunting districts.

Newport and Other Summer Plans.

It is still undecided as to whether the Breakers will be opened this Summer. Mrs. Vanderbilt and Miss Gladys Vanderbilt, and Mrs. Elliott Shepard were in San Francisco last Monday. They intend to spend a month on the Pacific Coast and then return to town, and are booked to sail for Europe in the latter part of May.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt are making extensive additions to their farm near Newport. The former servants' quarters are to be turned, with alterations, into an additional guests' house. Alfred Vanderbilt is to return to America in the latter part of June. At Newport he will entertain some of his foreign friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. C. Taylor will come back to Newport in late June. They are now arranging for a Spring cruise on the Wanderer. This yacht has been put in commission recently and has sailed for the other side.

Mrs. Pembroke Jones came North last week, and went to Newport on Monday to look after the plans on her new home. She was in New York at the end of the week. Miss Sadie Jones remained in the South, on the plantation. It is doubtful whether the Havemeyer villa will be ready for Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones this season, but they will be at Newport.

From abroad, it is learned that Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Dyer and Miss Laura Swan are in Paris, en route slowly for home. They are to be at Newport as usual this Summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt will be in Newport late in the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Goelet will occupy Ochre Court.

Belcourt is still in the hands of architects and builders and carpenters for extensive alterations. Mrs. Belmont is with her daughter, the Duchess of Marlborough, and will not return to this country till the late Summer. Mr. Belmont will soon sail to join her.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Hoffman are making extensive alterations to Armsea Hall, formerly the Vinton Greene villa.

Mrs. Ogilvie Haig is expected at Newport for the Summer. She will be at Beechwood with her mother, Mrs. Astor. Col. Astor will also be at Newport for a part of the season. Miss Van Alen, who has just joined her father in England, does not intend coming over. J. J. Van Alen will make his annual visit next month, and Mr. and Mrs. Laurens Van Alen have stated their intention of coming to Newport.

Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt are to arrive at their farm at Oakland the second week in May for the season.

Mrs. Frederick Pearson, who with the Misses Pearson sailed last week, have gone to Carlsbad, but are to return, after a short visit to Paris, for the Newport season.

Miss Leary will occupy her new home. Her friend, Mrs. Yznaga, mother of Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester, is at present visiting Mrs. Henry Preston in New Orleans.

Mr. and Mrs. George Rose, who have been in the South this Winter, will go to Newport for the Summer. They are at present at their country seat near Hempstead.

Mr. and Mrs. William Sheehan, who are traveling abroad, will return to their Long Island home in May, and will pass July and August at Bar Harbor.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Moller, Miss Moller, and Edwin Clarence Moller sail at the end of May for England.

Columbus O'D. Iselin has gone abroad for a short trip. Col. and Mrs. De Lancey Astor Kane have returned to this country, and settled at Newport for the rest of the season.

Miss Isabelle May, who goes abroad with Miss Lister Kaye and the Duke of Newcastle for an English visit, will afterward go to Paris to be with the Countess d'Andigny.

Mr. and Mrs. John R. Drexel, who have been in Spain, and who were at Biarritz at the time of the visit of King Edward, will not be in Newport this Summer. Mr. and Mrs. Drexel have had much attention shown them in Spain by the Princess Beatrice, whose son they entertained when he was in New York with his uncle, Prince Louis of Battenberg, two years ago. The John Drexels are to be in London this Summer. They will afterward go to the Continent.

Mr. and Mrs. Townsend Burden and Miss Burden are to make a short visit to Europe next month. They will be at Newport in July.

Mrs. Oliver S. Carter and Miss Suzanne Livingston Greene will spend the Summer at Bar Harbor.

Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish will remain in town until after the wedding of her daughter, Miss Marian Fish, in June. The Crossways will be opened in July.

Mrs. Kernochan will spend the Summer at Newport. She will be there the first week in July.

Mr. and Mrs Lanfear Norrie will be at Newport this Summer, for the first time in two years. Mrs. Norrie was in mourning last year for her father, the late Henry Barbey. Mrs. and Miss Barbey will spend the Summer abroad.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Livingston Beeckman will open Land's End in July.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Carter are at present at their country seat in England.

Mrs. Charles H. Baldwin will be at Snug Harbor in June. Miss Deacon will be her guest this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Courtlandt F. Bishop have sailed for Europe. They will go on a long motor trip this Summer.

Miss Mary Livingston Willard will sail on Thursday for England. Miss Willard will be in London during the season.

The wedding of Thomas Jewitt Hallowell of New York and Miss Marion Slocum Ricketson will take place on June 15, at Grace Church, New Bedford.

Louis S. Brugière an his mother, Mrs. Brugière, will occupy their new villa, which was completed last year.

Spring Festivals.

The Horse Show at the Country Club of Lakewood will take place on May 2 and 3. On the committee are George J., Frank, and Edwin Gould, Clifford V., George T., and W. Gould Brokaw, Howard Willetts, and Charles Pfizer.

Necrology.

The funeral of Mrs. Alexander H. Stevens took place on Friday at the Church of the Ascension. Mrs. Stevens was the grandmother of Miss Elizabeth Winthrop Stevens and the widow of Dr. Alexander H. Stevens.

Mrs. J. Salisbury Breese, who died on Tuesday, was the mother of James L. Breese and Mrs. Norrie, who was Miss Eloise Breese, and the grandmother of Lady Willoughby de Eresby. She was a Miss Lawrence.

Mrs. Hungerford, mother of Mrs. John Mackay, and grandmother of Clarence Mackay and the Princess Colonna, died in Rome. Besides Mrs. John W. Mackay, she leaves another daughter, the Countess Telfener.

Personal and Otherwise

MRS. ROBERT CUTTING LAWRENCE, whose picture appears in the pictorial section, was Miss Marguerite Loew, and her marriage occurred on April 11. Mrs. Lawrence came out about three years ago, and has been one of the most genuinely popular girls in both the older and younger sets in society, because of her thoroughly sweet and unaffected character and disposition. The Misses Angelica and Mabel Gerry, who almost never accept invitations to be members of bridal parties, were numbered among Miss Loew's bridesmaids, but Miss Mabel Gerry being confined to her home by an unromantic attack of measles was quarantined and unable to be present.

Miss Olga Kobbé, whose engagement to Herman Livingston, Jr., was announced two weeks ago, is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kobbé. Miss Kobbé made her début a couple of years ago, and has gone out a great deal in society. She is a cousin of Mrs. Raymond D. Little, and also of the Misses Hildegarde Kobbé and of the Kobbés of Staten Island, New York, and Pasadena, Cal. She is a pronounced brunette and is quite a belle. Her parents gave a dance for her the Winter she came out, and many smaller entertainments were also given for her.

Mr. Livingston is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Livingston of Oak Hill-on-the-Hudson, and a grandson of Mrs. Herman T. Livingston of Washington Square North, with whom he spent some time the Winter after he left college. He has a younger brother, Henry H. Livingston, who is a student at Yale. Mr. Livingston was graduated from Williams College in 1905.

Miss E. Lucy Washburn is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Tucker Washburn. Her engagement to Sidney Beardsley Wood, formerly of Bridgeport, Conn., but now of New York, and whose business interests are in Mexico, was announced in March. She is to marry Mr. Wood on June 8, and will have her cousin, Mrs. Joseph S. Ulman, formerly Miss Pauline Cory, as her matron of honor.

Miss Washburn is tall and slight with light golden-brown hair and large blue eyes. She is very musical, an excellent pianiste, and is also fond of outdoor sports, being especially devoted to tennis. She has traveled abroad, but usually spends most of her Summers with her parents at their country place at Black Rock, Conn.

Miss Elizabeth Sherley, whose picture appears in the pictorial section, is a Louisville, Ky., girl, who sailed some days ago, and who is to be the guest abroad of Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, Mrs. George Law and others. She was at Newport last Summer for a time, and also appeared at the Horse Show here last November. She is a striking type, quite handsome, and has made quite a hit with some well-known people at Newport.

The Whitelaw Reid Town House.

The town house of Ambassador Reid is partially illustrated in the pictorial section. The house itself is one of a group of four that inclose on three sides a square of greensward, with an asphalted driveway, occupying the block between Fiftieth and Fifty-first Streets on the east side of Madison Avenue. Henry Villard when at the height of his prosperity started the building with the intent of having the whole block, or that end of it, for his own private residence. Most of his fortune went while it was building, and the plans were altered and four houses instead of one were made of it. It is admirably adapted for large entertainments such as the Reids were wont to give several times during the Winter season, although the largest and most beautiful place is their country home, Ophir Hall.

Guests for large evening entertainments found at the top of the broad stair leading from the entrance steps to the inner and main hall a small door at the left opening into the lift, which car took them to the second floor, where they doffed their wraps in the dressing rooms and then descended by a wide, winding marble stairway to the main floor, where Mrs. Reid stood near the foot of the stairway to receive her guests. The wide double doors are kept closed, so that no draughts can enter. The outside steps were always lined at the sides by small boxwood trees.

The main hall is quite wonderful in its mosaic work, which is extremely elaborate and very fine. The ceilings are arched and groined, their decorations also in mosaic.

At the right of this long hall is the drawing room or salon extending across the entire side of the house on Madison Avenue. This is used as a ballroom when dances are given. A window at the south end is removed and a temporary balcony is built on from the outside, and in this the musicians sit, screened from view by palms and flowers. This drawing room is of the period of Louis XVI., and has beautiful marble pillars. The walls are also partially of beautiful marble, with panels on all sides of woodland subjects, including also figures, by Boucher, some of them being the last work of that artist before his death.

The furniture is covered with delicate brocades, the frames being gilt. Rich rugs and handsome screens add further to its beauty. The general color scheme is in soft greens. The hangings are in dull crimson and pale pink brocade.

At the left hand, beyond the marble stairway, is the music room in cream and gold, mostly gold. The high arched ceiling is highly decorative and there are mural paintings at each end by La Farge. In the cream and gold gallery shown in the picture an orchestra plays for dancing when dances are given, so that there are practically two ballrooms. There is a grand piano, also in cream and gold, and other musical instruments. The furniture is also in cream and gold, and the walls are done in fine gold.

The dining room runs from the salon to and past the music room and has two entrances. It overlooks Fiftieth Street and is fully 50 feet long and a very handsome room, having a mantel and wall piece at the one end executed by St. Gaudens, and at the other, over a mantel, an exquisite painting by Edwin Abbey in rich colors. The St. Gaudens end of the room is illustrated.

Upstairs on the second floor there is a hall similar in size to the one below, and in the dining room supper was served at small tables during the cotillions. On this floor are Mrs. Reid's boudoir, her this floor are Mrs. Reid's boudoir and and library.

STATEMENT No 2

STOUT WOMAN'S ENDORSEMENT

400,000 SELF-REDUCING Nemo TRIPLE STRIP CORSETS

WERE WORN LAST YEAR.

This proves that a great army of women are already familiar with the wonderful results of this corset. It stands to reason that hundreds of thousands of women would never keep on wearing this corset if it had not exactly satisfied their individual needs.

In this statement we will give the reasons why the Nemo Self-Reducing Corset has accomplished such great results.

In the last statement we explained how the Nemo Self-Reducing Corset reduces the figure of the stout woman, how it is comfortable to wear and economical to buy, and how it gives health and style to the wearer.

The "Nemo Self-Reducing Idea" was invented by us nine years ago. It was embodied in the original Self-Reducing Corset, of which 2,000,000 pairs were sold in eight years. About a year ago we added four new patented features—

The Improved Self-Reducing Strap
The Relief Strap, The Graduated Front Steel
The Double Garter Attachment

—each one adding, in its own particular way, to the perfect result obtained by the New Nemo Self-Reducing Corset.

This Corset greatly improves the figure of the stout woman, and the change in the form is so apparent that her skirt has to be taken in over the abdomen three or four inches, when wearing the corset the first time. Dressmakers recommend it because it makes a satisfactory foundation for a well-fitting gown.

The patented features of the Nemo Self-Reducing Corset alone can accomplish such wonderful results.

The "Self-Reducing Relief Strap" reduces and supports the lower part of the abdomen and shapes the accumulated flesh below the corset into symmetrical lines. This strap is attached to the "Graduated Front Steel" and held down by the "Double Garter Attachment." It produces a feeling of great comfort and support, giving the form a perfect mould.

Celebrated physicians recommend the Nemo Self-Reducing Corset for women who are physically weak. It is considered a most effective substitute for abdominal bands, as it gives better support without being bulky.

Bridal Gowns and Spring Time Costumes

THE wedding gowns of the two last weeks have been superb. There have been many of them, and much originality and beauty have been exhibited in them, but the guests have been less fortunate, for the weather, with its blizzards, followed by regulation March weather and winds, has brought out an exhibition of furs rather than frocks the first of these two weeks, while the last week has been anything but suitable for the wearing of thin new gowns. Hence the guests in general, other than the near relatives, have gowned themselves according to weather conditions rather than with a view to showing their Spring frocks.

At Miss Neeser's wedding some days ago it was laughingly declared to be an exhibition day for rich furs rather than bridal finery, and it cannot be said that furs have been out of place the last week; many of the older women appeared in them, and many of the younger women shivered without them.

The week following Easter saw nothing but satin wedding robes. The last two weeks, however, brought out several exquisite chiffon and lace bridal gowns that were much better suited to the general type of their wearers than heavy satins, although it must be admitted that heavy satin suits certain brides better than more filmy stuffs.

Miss Mary Picton Stevens's chiffon robe was embroidered in pearls and chiffon roses; Miss Parker's was rich in lace, and Miss Natica Rives's was a cloud of chiffon, garlanded with wreathlike frills of filmy lace.

The use of pink ribbon and pink roses shading into mauve as accessories to white gowns and hats was a novelty at one wedding, and at Miss Barney's wedding the use of pale pink, yellow, and also green sweetpeas on the attendants' hats was another new touch.

Comparatively few jewels have been worn by this season's brides, although many splendid gems and tiaras have been among the wedding gifts.

In bridal bouquets, lilies of the valley, with perhaps a cluster of orchids added, have been the almost universal favorite. Miss Rives departed from this in the choice of her bouquet, and its shape was that of a long spray. Miss Marguerite Loew carried her name flower with valley lilies.

Pink flowers have generally been the choice for the bridesmaids, roses and sweetpeas being usually employed. Miss Barney, however, had white forsythia for her attendants, their gowns being pale green chiffon with white lace insertions.

Miss Rives's Chiffon Robe.

Miss Natica Rives, the daughter of Mrs. George Lockhart Rives, who married William S. P. Burden, a son of the late James Abercrombie Burden, Wednesday noon in Grace Church, wore one of the most graceful wedding gowns of the Spring. Her gown was clinging and rather full, the chiffon, over clinging white liberty satin, was arranged in deep tucks, between which point lace ruffles went around the skirt. The bodice was also arranged in soft folds crossed by bertha frills of point lace, and the yoke and sleeves were of point lace. The sleeves were short puffs of chiffon, frilled and covered by point lace. The veil was draped back and on top of her pompadour, the latter fluffy, dark, and soft, and was fastened with what appeared to be glittering sprays of diamonds in coronet fashion, and fell in soft folds in almost a cascade effect at the right side, while at the other it had more of the lines of a scarf. It came well below the waist line, but was not very long. The train was long, and was also of chiffon lace-trimmed. She carried a spray-shaped bouquet of white flowers.

Miss Rives's maid of honor and only attendant was Miss Evelyn Parsons, who was also in white chiffon cloth and satin topped by an immense yellow leghorn hat, having as its sole decoration an immense dull-blue ostrich plume that started at the left side, crossed the hat in a slightly slanting direction, and, tumbling off the side of the hat back of the right ear, nearly touched her shoulder. The base was so thickly feathered that nothing else was necessary to conceal the stem at its start. Miss Parsons carried a large bouquet of white lilacs and their foliage.

In detail her gown had a rather loose bodice in modified surplice effect. In the back the scarf sections forming the modified surplice front were carried down the centre back side by side, and the lower ends, smaller and narrower, formed two coat tails. These scarf sections were edged with folds of liberty satin some two inches broad. The sections going over the shoulders came out far enough to form sleeve caps for the lace undersleeves. These lace undersleeves were loose lace puffs reaching the elbows and were there gathered into a two-inch band of the soft satin.

The full skirt was gathered slightly about the hips and had between the knees to the floor three wide fold tucks of liberty satin and three or four of the chiffon, the lower tucks being slightly wider.

Mrs. George Lockbart Rives, the mother of the bride, wore a gray satin gown embroidered and having lace at the neck, and wore a small, oval toque. Mrs. James A. Burden, Sr., was in black chiffon, topped by a black hat, as she is in deep mourning.

Mrs. Clarence Mackay was in white and black, with a scarf-like wrap of black lace thrown about her shoulders and a large black picture hat.

Mrs. Arthur Scott Burden (Miss Cynthia Roche) was in mauve, a rosy shade of that color, in chiffon, and topped by a not very large hat showing rose mauve flowers and ribbons.

Mrs. James A. Burden, Jr., appeared in an Empire robe of gray chiffon embroidered in silver. The silver embroidered yoke was outlined with a straight band effect in silver embroidery. The straight bands, embroidered directly on the gown, went down the side back of the gown nearly to the hem. The robe trailed a little and had silver embroidery above the hem and the drooping elbow sleeves had flounce edges embroidered in silver. The robe had a Dutch or round neck edged with silver embroidery, and she wore a necklace of pearls and diamonds and a small plumed hat.

Mrs. Henry Worthington Bull was in a shaded mauve gown of chiffon, in modified ombre effect, lighter at the waistline and growing slightly deeper in tone as it neared the floor. The skirt was laid in deep wide tucks about the bottom and these extended to the knees, or even above them. The bodice was gathered at the waist line and had a lace yoke, and the elbow sleeves were small puffs. She wore an immense black picture hat trimmed with many sweeping black ostrich plumes and draped with a deep black veil of dotted Brussels net.

Miss Bliss in White Satin.

Miss Augusta Bliss, now Mrs. William Willis Reese, wore when she married Mr. Reese on Tuesday in Grace Church Chantry a rich satin princess robe severely plain in its outlines and having a moderately long slightly squared train. The robe had no draperies of any sort, but was fitted smoothly by seams and goring into a perfectly plain robe. The satin was unusually heavy. Although its outlines were so severely simple it was very handsome, for starting in the centre of the train at the extreme edge were fine vines like two tendrils embroidered in silver that went around the train and then on around the skirt proper till they reached the front breadth, where they ran up on each side to the yoke, slanting in at the waist line and then out again, and outlined a panel. The unlined yoke and collar were of exquisite point lace, and the lace seemed to extend over the satin below the yoke down the bodice in drooping effect over the satin, the yoke itself being rather wedge shaped than round. Point lace was also laid around the edge of the bodice and yoke. The sleeves were single puffs of satin coming to the elbow, with deep point lace flounces extending over the sleeves and below them.

The bridal veil was a magnificent piece of old family point that extended from the top of her head almost to the hem of the train in a long scarf effect. It was caught rather flatly to her low coiffure with orange blossoms. She carried a Prayer Book instead of flowers, and wore a short string of immense matched pearls, from which were suspended three much larger and very wonderful single pearls.

Her little girl attendant, her niece, the daughter of Walter Phelps Bliss, was in white costume topped by a large hat laden with pale blue plumes. A blue sash encircled her waist. She carried a basket of white flowers.

Miss Catherine A. Bliss, the bride's sister, wore a white moiré silk gown, made with a plain, sweeping skirt, and a little tight-fitting coat, having scarflike bretelles and a postillion of point lace, over which were drawn straight, narrow suspenders of white satin, beautifully embroidered in white.

The skirt was perfectly plain, flaring out gradually from the hips. About the bottom ran three half-inch stripes, three narrow bands, probably of satin, although they seemed woven horizontal satin stripes.

The little coat had the lace arranged in fold effect, widening out on the shoulders, and tapering down to the waist line at the back, and then flaring out again into the postillion back. The satin suspenders were about two inches wide and extended from the waist line to the shoulders and then down the front. There was, if I recall correctly, no girdle, the coat forming its own finish at the waist line. Miss Bliss wore a small, high black hat, with a black ostrich plume at the left side, and a wonderful string of matched pearls.

Mrs. George T. Bliss, the bride's mother, was in a pale gray panne velvet gown, embroidered in grays, and topped by a small gray toque, trimmed with gray osprey plumes.

Miss Goin's Blue Gown.

Miss Goin was seen at a recent wedding in a dull blue cloth gown braided in the finest sort of braid, applied directly to the cloth. The skirt was a clinging, circular affair, trailing a trifle in the back and more than touching at the front and sides. About the hem fine silk soutache braid in a slightly darker shade of blue was warped in fine coral pattern, and outlining a Greek key design.

The Eton coat was cut on square lines, and covered the underblouse entirely, as it also did in the front by closing. This little jacket with its square back was bordered with the fine braid in design similar to that on the skirt, the Grecian key being about two inches across. This went entirely around the bottom of the jacket, up tho front, and around the collarless neck, and also outlined the shoulder seams from neck to sleeves.

The sleeves were elbow-length kimono sleeves, also bordered with the Greek-key embroidery. The sleeves had their seams up the outside centre, and this was outlined on each edge by the bands of the braid embroidery, and at the bottom this seam, I think, was slashed up a couple of inches.

Topping this gown, Miss Goin, who is strikingly handsome, with very dark hair and eyes, wore an immense, rather drooping, picture hat, laden with floating black ostrich plumes.

Mrs. Pulitzer in Hydrangea Blue.

Mrs. Ralph Pulitzer, who was Miss Fredericka Vanderbilt Webb, wore at the Devens-Wetmore nuptials one of her favorite chapeaus, a toque of sable fur, having one white ostrich plume at the side and at the other half buried in the fine fur a spray of creamy white roses.

She wore a trailing robe of hydrangea blue panne velvet finished at the bottom with two inch-deep tucks just above the four-inch hem.

With this Mrs. Pulitzer wore a rather loose coat, a semi-pony of silver gray panne velvet embroidered all over in the finest silver thread and having lengthwise lines outlining bretelle effects in sable fur. The sleeves, ending between the elbows and wrists, were large, gathered coat sleeves also heavily embroidered in silver thread and having wide, deep cuffs embroidered and then edged with sable fur.

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman also wore a blue gown, but this was a very pale blue in some light cloth, too heavy for chiffon cloth, too light for broadcloth. This had a double skirt effect. The drop skirt trailed and was trimmed with pale blue line embroidery in silk, and over this, coming to the embroidery on the underskirt, was the overdress, or jupe proper, cut in star points at the edge, and embroidered up some eight to ten inches in pale blue. With this she wore a half-length, half-fitting coat of chinchilla, for the day was chilly, and a large, wide-brimmed hat, trimmed with two big ostrich plumes, one at each side. Blue in pale shades has been noticed frequently on fashionable women at the recent Easter weddings, not that it is any more fashionable, but because it is more conspicuous than many other colors. Coral pink and the various shades of cerise so much seen last Spring one hardly sees at all now.

Mrs. Frederick E. Ballard wore at the marriage of her daughter, Miss Ballard, to Mr. Powers, a pale blue silk, a princess gown embroidered in long lines, and having a little pale green let in in the waist. Her large, light blue hat was encircled by a wide blue ostrich plume, and another drooped off the back.

Mrs. Powers, the mother of the bridegroom, was in pale gray chiffon cloth, the trailing skirt trimmed near the bottom with horizontal milliners' folds of pale gray satin. The bodice in long lines was embroidered in gray, and trimmed with pipings of satin. Her small round gray straw hat was trimmed with gray ostrich plumes that fell off the back and were held at the front by clusters of pink roses.

Mrs. Philip B. Phillips, sister of Miss Ballard, was in a Princess robe of white princess lace over pale green silk, trimmed on the waist with several drooping black jet pendants, and atopped by a black hat, trimmed with long black ostrich plumes.

Simple Walking Costume.

An Eton coat and round skirt of light—almost mustard—colored panama cloth, or a similar material, is in the traveling wardrobe of an April bride. The circular skirt has a six-inch hem, and at the top of the hem fancy black silk braid an inch and a quarter wide outlines large ovals. Each oval is formed of two lengths of the braid, having the ends cut pointed, and these ends cross after each oval is formed and run under a crescent of black sewed to the skirt. The two points run out and almost touch the two ends of the next oval.

IN THE WORLD OF ART AND ARTISTS

Tempests in Academic Teapots

Apathy of the Public with Regard to National Academies and the Reason Therefor—Together with Some Cynical Suggestions as to a Cure.

ALWAYS there has been a tinge of the comic in associations of craftsmen and artisans, of practitioners of the fine arts, so called, and of academicians who are such in the name of literature. Guilds of this kind are erected on two very praiseworthy and solid foundations, acquaintance and intercourse with persons of similar pursuits on the one side and financial profits on the other. These are eminently useful and practical matters which do not lend themselves to criticism from those who regard them impartially and without reference to their own private interests.

The arts and sciences especially appear to gain through personal contact and the clash of temperaments and intellects. Art students have an instinct for gregariousness. Centres where by reason of continuance the art idea has become a tradition retain their attractive power long after the original masters have disappeared, when nothing is left but the empty husks of what was art to a vanished generation. At the same time, the formulas which a former age applauded because they once met a genuine demand on the part of the public continue to impose on the new age, and those who use them find it profitable to exploit them.

The National Academy of Design is going through one of those crises in which it is sufficiently clear that the old order of things does not meet the demands of the present. The comic element is supplied by those who, with the utmost candor and good faith, believe that what may have sufficed for earlier days will do for the existing situation, and they are assisted by their opponents, the strenuous reformers, who take themselves a trifle too seriously, and without any plans and definite idea of the possibilities in the case denounce what they cannot pretend to cure.

The result is a tempest in a teapot which, under the genial guidance of the press, assumes to the uninitiated the proportions of a veritable storm.

It might be well for the Conservatives to remember that the first aid to the injured is also of the first importance, and that a tempest, even if it be of teapot calibre, may become important if neglected and underrated.

It might be well for the reformers to consider that the ends they seek are not lost sight of and what they cannot obtain this year they may gain hereafter.

Both sides make the very natural and pardonable mistake of regarding academical honors in the light of a fetich. These honors amount to nothing unless the public regards them of great weight; but there is no evidence, in this country at least, that the public considers them of extraordinary value. Other things being equal, it may be that the title of Academician or Associate will now and then benefit a painter; but the advantage which many artists appear to ascribe to certain initials behind their names is an amiable hallucination. It springs from the European traditions by which Americans are generally bound.

In Europe the government is almost always the grand patron of art. It was more of a patron in former centuries, but it still remains the greatest, even in the case of France, which has been a republic for nearly forty years. That is not true of the United States now, and never was. Still, the National Academy was, at its origin, an imitation of the Royal Academy, and the influence of Europe has been so potent upon American art, largely owing to the sending of our art students across the Atlantic during their impressionable years, that our artists, as a body, never have got at grips with the actual situation, never have placed themselves fully and frankly in the only position tenable, namely, that of the tools through which the American Nation can express itself in art.

It is absolutely necessary to the future of the National Academy that this point should be thrashed out in meeting after meeting until a majority of Academicians have made up their minds what it is that keeps the public languid in their regard. A recent instance of differences of opinion among the jurymen elected for the present exhibition, which has been magnified to undue proportions, is only useful because it indicates a feeling that something is wrong. Nothing is known of a clear cut campaign to better the conditions in the Academy. One can scarcely take seriously the proposition that the election of half a dozen clever young painters will alter matters. For on the one hand they are not strong enough, individually or in combination, to change the cast of the Academy, and on the other they will only add to the number of those who view American art through European spectacles; since each of them is European through his training in art.

One cannot but admire the artlessness of the artists who expected to find the Academy electing some half a hundred new members. If any of them seriously advocate such a wholesale addition to the Academy, it is enough to point out that this, indeed, would be a remedy worse than the disease, for elections of that character would not be accepted as an honor, and the natural inference would be that the Academy wished to obtain quantity rather than quality in its membership.

The very basis, the reason for the existence of an Academy of Art, is selection, or, if you will, exclusiveness. The dream is a fond one that a National Academy which made it easy for any passable painter to attain membership would exercise any influence. The road to efficient public esteem lies just the other way. If, while seeking out the brilliant young painters and sculptors, the Academy could also find some way to correct its mistakes and rid itself of the artist-Philistine—the most terrible of all Philistines, whose hordes are encamped in the Academies of London, Paris, Munich, Berlin, and Dresden—then, indeed, might we have a National Academy whose diploma would mean the acknowledgment of mastership.

It is neither by holding themselves aloof from the promising outsiders in a fool's paradise of imaginary superiority, nor by taking hasty counsel with dreamers who want to flood the organization with half-baked artists of their own kind, that the Academy will be able to meet the wider responsibilities of a day in which art has become a great field for the most varied talents. Rather is it by appointing a committee to devise the means of adding only the very best artists to their number, and other committees to consider how to reach the public. If anything is plain, it is that the ordinary annual exhibitions are not attractive, and that if the Academy possesses men who know how to institute a change, these men, like the monkeys, keep up an inveterate silence lest they be put to work.

The probability is that the Academy, in order to take the place it should hold in the community, must condescend to ask for advice outside and employ outside talent. It can not go on as it has without forfeiting more and more each year those advantages which it gains from having the field at present free. If it fails to rise to the requirements of the greater city and greater nation of the century, it will discover when it is too late that the public has turned to some rival, insignificant at present, whose leaders understand better the American character and the possibilities of a National Academy of Art. MR. MORGAN'S PHOTOGRAPH.

The portrait of John Pierpont Morgan, published in the Pictorial Section of THE NEW YORK TIMES on Sunday, April 14, was from a copyrighted photograph by Pach Brothers, New York. The credit line was omitted by mistake, but in no wise affects the copyright.

Gossip of the Studios.

ROSINA EMMET SHERWOOD has two paintings at the Fourth Annual Water Color Exhibition now being held in Philadelphia. One is a pastel drawing of a young mother holding in her arms an infant, and the other is a water color sketch of mother and child. Lately she painted a portrait of Mrs. J. Herndon.

Wilhelm Funk is at work on several portrait commissions. He has recently painted a portrait of Mrs. Thomas Davis of Washington. A private view of sculpture by Albert Humphreys, given recently at Mr. Funk's studio, resulted in the sale of a number of small bronzes. Several interesting groups of animals are still on exhibition at the studio.

Kenyon Cox has just finished a portrait of Gen. Pope, which is to be placed in the Academy at West Point. Mr. Cox has been for some time at work on his second volume on "Old Masters and New." It will be published during the Summer by Duffield & Co.

Anthony H. Euwer has been busy with decorative work for Scribner's, The Outing Magazine, and The Cosmopolitan. A late edition of "The Swarm" from "The Life of the Bee," by Maurice Maeterlinck, was decorated throughout by Mr. Euwer, and a very attractive frontispiece for the same volume was also designed by him.

Mr. Euwer, who also designs book plates, has lately made plates for Mr. John Kendrick Bangs, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mr. H. J. Heinz, Mr. Benjamin Thaw, Mr. Lawrence Crane Woods, Mr. William Latham Abbott, Miss Sylvia Colwell, and Mr. Henry G. Bryant.

A little volume called "Rick-e-ty Rimes and Rig-ma-ro," compiled by Mr. Euwer several years ago, contains some very fanciful drawings and limericks. These are now running in "Club Life"—a full page in each month's issue. The title page of the original volume states that it is for "Fools, Philosophers, and Free Thinkers."

Marion Swinton's portrait of Joseph Jefferson as Caleb Plummer, which has been sent to the Kansas and Nebraska circuit exhibition, has been much admired. The Kansas City Times gives the following notice regarding the painting:

"The picture of Joseph Jefferson at the art show was examined yesterday by L. S. Cantwell, who was formerly an actor and with Jos. Jefferson in the 'Cricket on the Hearth.' Mr. Cantwell said he had seen dozens of pictures of Mr. Jefferson, but that this one was the best portrait of all. 'I had a minor part in his company,' he said, 'and often sat for several minutes watching the grand old actor. His every feature is stamped on my memory. I wish I could afford to buy that painting.'"

One of Miss Swinton's paintings—a still life—is now on view at the Annual Free Loan Exhibition of Pictures at the University Settlement House, 184 Eldridge Street. Another painting has been purchased recently by a New York art dealer.

Mrs. Louise Cox won the second prize of $1,000, offered recently by The Ladies' Home Companion for cover designs. The design will appear on the May number of the magazine. It is a child sitting on a table holding a turtle dove; another dove is on the cage near by.

An exhibition of paintings by Orlando Rouland opened at Clausen's Galleries Monday last and will continue until April 27. He is painting Mrs. Richard Mansfield, and recently completed a portrait of Thomas Edison, which will be hung in the newly erected United Engineers' Building on Fortieth Street. This is a commission from several of Mr. Edison's friends and is to be presented to the Society of Electrical Engineers.

This Winter Mr. Rouland has also painted portraits of Mr. John Borroughs, Olga Samaroff, the pianist; Edwin Markham, and Percy Mackaye. An article on Mr. Rouland's work will appear in the May number of The International Studio.

Augustus Lukeman has completed the statues which he has been executing for the Royal Bank of Canada. There are four colossal statues representing "Fisheries," "Railway," "Agriculture," and "Mining." Sketches for the bronze doors of the same building are now being made by Mr. Lukeman.

William Otis Swett has spent a very busy Winter painting a number of landscapes. In his studio are several large pictures of the Berkshires, the Adirondacks, and the interesting country about Deerfield, Mass. Several Berkshire pictures show hills and fields through the smoky atmosphere from nearby forest fires.

The first of May Mr. Swett will go again to Deerfield to make sketches of the early Spring. The last of June he will leave Deerfield for the Berkshires, where he will work throughout the Summer months.

Notable Art Matters Here and Abroad

Flood of Water Colors and Piles of Pastels in Philadelphia and New York—Painters of Mountain—Steamship Line as an Art Patron.

THE American Water Color Society is the next organization of artists to occupy the galleries of the Fine Arts, where the Academy is now. The society is no chicken; it is fair, fat, and forty this year, having a continuous record of twoscore annual exhibitions less one to look back upon.

In the old Academy Building, with the Venetian Gothic windows, on Fourth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, the American Water Color Society used to exhibit along with the New York Etching Club. At that time pastels were considered something really too frivolous and Frenchy, don't you know, and even the use of body color in place of washes was regarded by the jury with a coolness that kept such tricky work in the minority. We have no etching club now to give variety to the entertainment, but as for pastels, they are often in the majority. A number of worthy artists have grasped the astounding idea that the best medium is that which suits the artist's temperament and skill and expresses best what he has to say. If, like many artists, he has nothing to communicate, really it makes no difference, either.

The fortieth annual is booked for the Fine Arts Galleries during May, and will blossom in private view and reception on May Day, the public opening being Thursday, May 2. Days for receiving exhibits are Friday and Saturday, April 19 and 20. There is a prize of $300 offered by Mr. W. T. Evans for the best water color by an American, without limitation as to age or sex, but not to be taken again by a former winner.

The Hanging Committee consists of Messrs. Ochtman, Granville-Smith, and Potthast, none of whom is on the Jury of Selection. The latter comprises the following well-known names: Walter Shirlaw, Charles Warren Eaton, and Jules Guérin; William T. Smedley, William S. Robinson, and Henry B. Snell; Charles Monte, Francis C. Jones, and W. H. Drake; E. Irving Couse, Cullen Yates, and R. M. Shurtleff, a pretty combination of the old guard and the young, impressionists and genre painters, plein-airists and the Hudson River landscape school. Drawings in black and white other than oils, etchings, and miniatures will be considered for exhibition by these twelve apostles of art.

Meantime Philadelphia has beaten the American Water Color Society by a month, for its fourth annual water color exhibition is going on now, having had a formal opening March 30. The local Water Color Club aids the exhibition, which occupies six galleries in the Pennsylvania Academy. A good deal of care has been taken to give different backgrounds in different galleries, so that water colors or pastels of a certain kind would find the wall that suits them best. To some extent this is an international show; at least, a number of French pastellists and water colorists are included, such as Lucien Simon, Gaston La Touche, Mlle. Henriette Crespel, and Gaston Lemaire. There is also work by Garlaudi of Rome. Charles E. Woodbury has a group of marines and shorescapes, and Dodge MacKnight has startling combinations of colors in wintry scenes. Tryon, Dewing, W. L. Lathrop, Alden Weir, E. A. Abbey, and Alexander Robinson, who sends pictures from Bruges the Dead, have representative works. S. Walter Norris has a collection of mine scenes in Mexico. Illustrators like Henry McCarter, Thornton Oakley, Elizabeth Shippen Green, and F. W. Taylor exhibit drawings in color; there are portraits by the Misses Beaux, Violet Oakley, Amy Otis, and Mrs. Rosina Emmet Sherwood.

Among interesting news of the French museums not the least is the establishment at Algiers of a school for traveling scholars on the same plan as the old French school in Rome, which has the Villa Medicis for its headquarters. A large native house with garden attached will serve as residence for those artists who have received scholarships from a committee of which M. Bénédite, Conservator of the Luxembourg Gallery, is Chairman.

The Louvre is about to exhibit a famous Rembrandt, the owner of which promises to leave it to one of the French museums in his will. It is one of Rembrandt's portraits of his brother, and the owner is Count Potocki, a Parisian.

Owing to a threatened law in Spain to prevent private owners from selling their works of national art to foreigners, Paris has seen a rush of Spanish treasures of art to be sold before the law can take effect. Sculptures in marble, alabaster, and other stone, bronzes, wood carvings, tapestries, and old lustre ware, together with paintings by old masters, have been auctioned off.

Half a dozen paintings by Carleton Wiggins may be seen at the Macbeth Galleries until the 27th; they include a large "Holstein Cow" standing in an orchard where the apples have begun to redden among the green leaves. This is a portrait of a favorite mooly cow attached to the studio dwelling of Mr. Wiggins near Lyme, Conn., and he has painted her whitish pelt with black and reddish trimmings as a portraitist would picture a lady in a white gown. She turns her honest and by no means ill-favored face toward the spectator as if she expected a visitor bearing a gift of apples or carrots. The picture is an idyl of country life, which is not marred by the rain-cloud discharging its burden to the left of the smiling landscape. "Summer Morning" contains a group of a red and white, a black and white, and a buckskin sow in different attitudes of comfortable contemplation. "Leader of the Herd" is the likeness of a white and red bull gazing somewhat grimly as he stands in a marshy spot near the river. In "Ploughing" the sky is streaked with yellow and red, while the oxen, red and white, strain to the yoke before the blue-coated plowman. "Autumn Days" has a dash of sunshine in the middle distance and a flock of a dozen sheep feeding under a gray and fleecy sky. The pictures are equally divided as to cows and sheep.

The Season at the Manhattan

THE season at the Manhattan Opera House closed on April 20, having lasted twenty weeks. Mr. Oscar Hammerstein has put a remarkable achievement to his credit, and given many people a very considerable surprise by fulfilling his promises made in the early Spring of last year, for it seemed more than any single man would be able to accomplish. To establish an operatic institution out of whole cloth, so to speak, to build a house and organize a company, and set all the vast and complicated machinery of an opera season in motion without the backing and security of fashion, upon which opera has always depended for its support ever since opera was started, was a great undertaking.

The season that Mr. Hammerstein provided was of singular interest in many ways. He was exceptionally fortunate in building a theatre whose acoustics were of remarkable excellence and whose structural lines were such that they seemed to bring the audience into close relations with the stage. These facts provided exceptionally favorable conditions for the performances at the outset. Then Mr. Hammerstein was shrewd enough to engage in Mr. Cleofonte Campanini a conductor of rare force and authority, of knowledge and fine musical feeling, and to trust everything to his enthusiasm and zeal. It is safe to say that with a man of lesser powers in this position Mr. Hammerstein's season would have been much more precarious than it was.

He had a company of singers of singular though uneven merit, best, as has been repeatedly pointed out, upon the side of the men. Mme. Melba's coming and her interest in making the season a success were fortunate circumstances in favor of the new undertaking. There was enormous public interest in her appearances, of which she gave fifteen, and she filled the house at every performance in which she sang. So, too, the engagement of Mme. Calvé at almost the eleventh hour, to take in some measure the place that Mme. Melba vacated at the end of her engagement, was also a lucky stroke.

Mme. Melba appeared fifteen times, singing in "Rigoletto" five times, in "La Bohème" four, in "La Traviata" three, in "Lucia" twice, and in "Faust" once.

Mme. Calvé's performances were nine in number. She sang in "Carmen" five times, "Cavalleria Rusticana" twice, and "La Navarraise" twice.

There was a potent attraction exercised by Mme. Bressler-Gianoli, an artist of remarkable dramatic gifts, in the performance which she gave of "Carmen," which was, however, only one, though the chief, element in a presentation of the opera that had a most unusual charm for the really musical public in its dash, brilliancy, and spirit, the vividness and force with which the true quality of Bizet's masterpiece was brought to the consciousness of every auditor. These excellencies, in varying degree, were a peculiar possession of all the best of the productions made at the Manhattan during the season. They were especially marked in the operas of the smaller genre, which were given in a way that is impossible at the larger opera house. "Don Giovanni," "The Barber of Seville," "L'Elisir d'Amore," "Fra Diavolo" and "Marta" were especially favored by their surroundings; but there was a higher power in the appeal of every opera, even those of the "grander" style.

Of the other singing women Mme. Donalda was the most attractive, and Mme. Pinkert was a useful person in the performance of florid music, which occupied a large place in the repertory. The men were the strength of the company. In Messrs. Bonci, Renaud, Dalmorès this public made for the first time the acquaintance of remarkable artists. The return of Messrs. Ancona, Arimondi, and Gilibert to the New York operatic stage was scarcely less welcome. The impression made by all these was a deep one. Mr. Bonci failed to arouse a great popular excitement, as it was feared he would in the beginning. There is too little of the sensational in his art, too much of refinement and exquisite artistry, to appeal to that portion of the opera-going public that values chiefly bigness and resonance of voice and the prodigal outpouring of high notes. Furthermore, his style is adapted chiefly to the performance of operas that are out of date and out of fashion, even with a public that will submit to much for the sake of a golden tenor voice.

For Mr. Bonci, in large measure, together with Mme. Melba, the repertory was made old-fashioned. Not a single new work was produced at the Manhattan. On the contrary, some long-buried antiques were revived that had never entered into the ken of the present generation of operagoers as "I Puritani" and "Dinorah." The projected performance of Saint-Saëns's "Hélène" fell through. The nearest approach to novelty was Massenet's opera "La Navarraise," which Mme. Calvé revived.

The season was, of course, chiefly dominated by the Italian influence, which the French performances of "Carmen" and "Faust" could not overcome. Everything else, even the French operas, except "La Navarraise," had Italian representation. Even "Faust" had one Italian performance.

The performances were, on the whole, not sumptuous, though they were often excellent in the matter of scenic effects and stage mounting. The stage management was kept upon a high level of excellence, though it must be noted that there were comparatively few productions that made any exacting demands upon this department of the administration. There is gratitude for the chorus, which, notwithstanding the change that was made in the middle of the season, was also kept on a high level of excellence. The members sang vigorously, freshly, and tunefully, and manifested generally an intelligent and intelligible interest in the proceedings upon the stage. Into the ensemble all the performers, from the highest to the humblest, entered with zest and spirit; and aside from the remarkable achievements of some of the great artists, this peculiar excellence, much aided and abetted by the acoustics of the house, afforded a pleasure of a sort that has not been obtainable in New York operatic performances for a good while.

In this season of twenty weeks there were given 121 performances of 22 operas. Having practically no subscribers to consult in the matter of undue repetitions, Mr. Hammerstein was left free to arrange his repertory in such a way as most to tempt the different classes of music lovers to whom he appealed. Thus he gave no fewer than nineteen performances of "Carmen," because "Carmen" was, on the whole, the most successful of all that was done at the opera house. The results may be seen in the following table, which shows the operas performed, the dates of their first performance, and the number of times they were heard. The house opened its doors upon 111 different occasions. In these there were 121 performances given. The difference between the two is accounted for by the fact that ten "double bills" were given:

THE UNITED GERMAN SINGERS' CONCERT.

The United German Singing Societies will give a concert this evening in the Manhattan Opera House for the benefit of the German, St. Mark's, St. Francis, and Mount Sinai Hospitals. The public appearances of this large body of trained singers, which numbes 650, are rare. Their last public appearance was two years ago, when they gave a festival concert in Carnegie Hall, celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Schiller, in which many prominent American and German citizens participated.

The success of the concert this evening is assured, the larger part of the house, including the boxes, being subscribed for by prominent New Yorkers.

The United German Singing Societies is composed of thirty different musical organizations in this city, the President of which is Mr. Theodor Henninger, among them being the Eichenkranz, the Beethoven Maennerchor, the Heinebund, &c.

The artists who will assist in the concert this evening are Madame Arta, soprano; Victor Oceiller, baritone; Miss Elsie Fischer, violinist; August Fraemcke, pianist, supported by the Manhattan Opera House Orchestra of sixty-five musicians and the male chorus of 670 voices, all under the direction of Carl Hein, musical director of the United German Singing Societies. The following is the complete programme:

1. Overture: "Im Fruhling"...Ksrl Goldmark
   Orchestra.
2. Landkennung .....N. Edward Grieg
   Baritone Solo, Chorus and Orchestra.
3. Recitative and Aria, from "Der Freischutz" .....C. von Weber
   Mme. Regina Arta.
4. Concerto for Piano, in E. flat major..
   Franz Liszt
   August Fraemcke.
5. Fruhlingszeit (a la Capella)..Carl Wilhelm
   United Singing Societies.
6. Invitation to the Dance.....C. von Weber
   Orchestra.
7. Violin Solos:
   a Canzanetta .....Tschaikowsky
   b Polonaise .....Wieniawski
   Miss Elsie Fischer.
8. Folksong (a la Capella)..... a Voe Lie bchen's Fenster.....Rudolf Hesse
   b In elnens kuchen Grune..Frederick Gluck
   United Singing Societies.
9. Toreador Song from "Carmen"..G. Bizet
   Victor Oceiller.
10. Pilgrims' Chorus from "Tannhaeuser"
    R. Wagner
    United Singing Societies and Orchestra.

JULIAN EDWARDS'S NEW WORK.

"The Mermaid," a cantata by Julian Edwards, will be presented in Carnegie Hall on April 23 by the Musurgia Society, of which Walter Henry Hall is the conductor. On this occasion the Musurgia will be assisted by the Brooklyn Oratorio Society, the allied organizations enlisting a chorus of 250 trained voices, with a special orchestra of 75 musicians. The soloists will be Viola Waterhouse, soprano, who sings the part of the Mermaid, and George Hamlin, tenor, who sings the part of the Youth. The cantata's first presentation in New York on April 23 will be followed by a second performance in Brooklyn two days later under the auspices of the Brooklyn Oratorio Society, this time assisted by the Musurgia, with the same orchestra and principals.

Mr. Edwards is well known as a composer of light opera, and has at least once composed a romantic opera of some merit, "Brian Boru." Of late years he has been turning his talents to more serious composition.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

A concert will be given to-morrow night for the benefit of the Italian chorus, which has been disengaged, for the most part, since the strike at the Metropolitan Opera House last season. A chorus of 120 voices, an orchestra of 75 men, under Gaetano Merola, and the following violinists will appear: Mario Sammarco, Regine Pinkert, Giannina Russ, Giuseppe Tecchi, and Luigi Mugnoz.

Ernesto Consolo will give a piano recital in Mendelssohn Hall to-morrow evening. The programme includes the Bach-Liszt Prelude and Fugue in A minor, a Scarlatti "Gingue," Brahms's F minor sonata, two Scambati numbers, and Chopin's Scherzo in B minor; Cyril Scott's "Solitude" and "Pierrot," and the Weber-Taussig "Invitation to the Waltz."

The Musurgia Society, Walter Henry Hall conductor, will give Julian Edwards's cantata "The Mermaid" in Carnegie Hall next Tuesday evening. The Musurgia will be assisted by the Brooklyn Oratorio Society, the allied organizations enlisting a chorus of 250 trained voices, with a special chorus and orchestra of 75 musicians. The soloists will be Viola Waterhouse, soprano, and George Hamlin, tenor.

Victor Herbert and his orchestra will give the closing performance at Daly's Theatre to-night. This will be the farewell of this historic playhouse with which the late Augustin Daly was so long associated. This will also be the last of the Spring series of concerts arranged by Mr. Herbert and will be devoted entirely to his own music. The programme will include selections from operatic successes of the past ten years.

Edward Grieg commemorated his fortieth anniversary as a music writer April 12 in Berlin. A concert was given at which the composer conducted his own works. The anniversary will be commemorated in New York to-night at Carnegie Hall, where a concert will be given for the benefit of the Grieg Monument Fund. Mme. Sandal-Bramsen will sing several of Grieg's songs. Gaston Bor'i will conduct the Peer Gynt Suite, played by an orchestra of sixty-two. A male chorus of 100 voices from the United Norwegian Singing Societies of New York will sing some of Grieg's chorus compositions.

THE MacDOWELL ASSOCIATION.

The second annual meeting of the MacDowell Association was held at St. Margaret's School Monday evening, April 15. The programme included readings by Ruth McEnery Stuart and stories by Miss Gordon Kerby. Augusta Cottlow, the pianist, played several MacDowell compositions. Among them the Sonata Tragica. The other part of the programme was an exhibition of marbles, bronzes, and original casts by the following sculptors: Herbert Adams, Daniel Chester French, Hermon MacNeil, George Grey Barnard, Bessie Potter Vonnoh, J. Scott Hartley, Helen Farnsworth Mears.

HOW NEWER CHEMISTRY DISPOSES OF THE ATOM

Marvelous Development of Knowledge in the Last Few Years Has Given Rise to Entirely New Conception of the Nature of Matter.

By Prof. John Waddell.

"THE new chemistry" is a phrase frequently met with. "The newer chemistry" would be the more suitable term. One hundred years ago there was a new chemistry; to-day this new chemistry is being so modified and extended as to deserve the appellation "newer."

The new chemistry was preceded by a period of immense activity among chemists. Priestley, an English Nonconformist minister, made his fortunate discovery of oxygen in 1776, and shortly afterward Scheele, a Swedish chemist, whose painstaking mode of research was rewarded by many splendid achievements, independently discovered the same gas. Hydrogen, the lightest gas of which we have any knowledge, was first described by Cavendish in 1766, and carbonic acid gas had been described some nine years previously. The discovery of these gases helped to revolutionize the theory of combustion. This was owing chiefly to the brilliant work of the French chemist Lavoisier, whose name is one of the most glorious in France, and whose execution by the Revolutionists was one of their most discreditable acts.

Lavoisier was not the first to use the balance in chemical operations, but he was conspicuous by his insistence upon the necessity for submitting all problems involving the composition of substances to the test of weighing. Before his time iron rust was supposed to be changed to iron by the addition of something called phlogiston, but the use of the balance shows that iron weighs less than the rust from which it is formed, and hence cannot be produced by the addition of anything. Lavoisier showed that quicksilver heated in air changed from a bright liquid to a red powder and became heavier. He concluded that the mercury had taken something from air. The red powder on being heated to a higher temperature gave off the gas oxygen and was changed to the original mercury, with the same weight as at the beginning.

Constituents in Same Proportion.

Gradually after a large number of experiments had been made by carefully weighing the constituents of compounds and comparing the sum with the weight of the compound itself, it was recognized that any particular compound was always made up of the same constituents in the same proportion. For instance, carbonic acid gas, (carbon dioxide,) no matter how obtained, whether by heating marble, or by acting on chalk with acid, or by burning charcoal, or by extracting it from the air breathed out from the lungs, was always found to consist of three-elevenths carbon and eight-elevenths oxygen. In addition to carbonic acid, another compound of carbon and oxygen was known in which the carbon was three-sevenths and the oxygen four-sevenths. It will be seen that in this compound for every three grains of carbon there were four grains of oxygen, while in carbonic acid for every three grains of carbon there were eight grains of oxygen—that is, twice as much.

Further, it had been found that three grains of carbon united with one grain of hydrogen in the compound called marsh gas or fire damp, and in another compound twice three grains of carbon united with one grain of hydrogen. The number three, then, might represent a standard quantity of carbon in its compounds with both oxygen and hydrogen—three grains of carbon uniting with eight of oxygen and with one of hydrogen. But, still further, oxygen and hydrogen unite to form the compound water in which eight grains of oxygen are combined with one grain of hydrogen. So if three was taken as the standard quantity of carbon, eight might be taken as the standard quantity of oxygen and unity as the standard quantity of hydrogen. It was found that similarly a series of numbers could be obtained to express the proportion in which different elements unite. Sometimes the elements united exactly in the proportion of the numbers; sometimes the number representing the element would need to be doubled or multiplied by three or even by four.

John Dalton had the genius to suggest a hypothesis that would explain all these regularities. Dalton was color blind. It is said that he bought for his mother a pair of stockings, one of which was red, the other green, and this particular kind of color-blindness is sometimes called Daltonism. But though his bodily eyesight was defective, his mental vision was keen, and his theory was most fruitful in the further development of science, and inaugurated the new chemistry of 100 years ago. His theory was that all matter is composed of small particles to which he gave the name atoms. As the name implies, these particles were considered indivisible. Each atom had a certain weight. The atom of oxygen, in his view, weighed eight times as much as the atom of hydrogen, the atom of carbon six times as much, and the atom of chlorin thirty-five times as much. An explanation was thus afforded of the facts observed. Compounds consisted of combinations of different kinds of atoms; in elements the atoms were all alike. The smallest quantity of a compound must contain at least two atoms, and larger quantities were made up of a number of these smallest quantities. It was now evident why one compound of carbon and oxygen contained twice as much oxygen in proportion as the other. The smallest quantity of the one compound contained one atom of carbon and one atom of oxygen; the smallest quantity of the other compound contained one atom of carbon and two atoms of oxygen.

Determining Molecular Weight.

Later the groups of atoms came to be called molecules, and it was sometimes a question how many atoms of each kind there were in the molecule. Upon the answer given to this would depend the relative weight assigned to the atoms. In one compound of carbon and hydrogen, as stated already, the weight of carbon is three times the weight of hydrogen. If the molecule consists of one atom of carbon and one atom of hydrogen, the weight of the carbon atom would be three times the weight of the hydrogen atom. Dalton considered that there were twice as many hydrogen atoms as carbon atoms, and thus the carbon atom would weigh six times as much as the hydrogen atom. We now consider that there are four times as many hydrogen atoms as carbon atoms, and so the carbon atom is considered as weighing twelve times as much as the hydrogen atom. Some of the numbers Dalton used to represent the weight of the atoms are retained, some have been doubled, some have been trebled. It will be understood that the numbers chosen represent merely the relative weights of the atoms, and the numbers adopted are in comparison with hydrogen taken as unity, the atom of hydrogen being the lightest known.

Though the exact weight and size of the atoms are unknown, there have been estimates made. A little girl who had heard her parents talk about microbes, and had formed some conception of their minuteness, was asked which she supposed was the smaller, a microbe or an atom. She replied a microbe, because you may smash a thing to atoms, but you couldn't make the pieces as small as a microbe. The smallest microbe visible with a microscope is about 1-80,000 inch in diameter, and if packed as closely as possible about 500 million million would occupy a cubic inch. But it is calculated that in a gas more than 150 million million molecules are contained in a cubic inch, and the molecules of many gases are composed of a considerable number of atoms. Moreover, the molecules are comparatively very far apart in a gas. Probably the smallest microbe contains a thousand million atoms at least.

Another method of showing the probable size of molecules is the following: Suppose a drop of water were magnified to the size of the earth, the molecules would be between the size of a cherry and that of a cricket ball.

And now we are brought to the newer chemistry. Dalton's new chemistry taught that the atom is the smallest particle of matter existent; that the atom is indivisible. The newer chemistry admits that the atom is indivisible in the sense that we cannot divide it. The chemist may separate one atom from another atom, but he cannot divide the atom itself. But according to the newer chemistry, though we cannot divide an atom, the atoms of some substances and possibly of all substances decompose of their own accord.

Some forty years ago Crookes made a very interesting investigation into the passage of electricity through rarefied air and other gases inclosed in glass tubes or bulbs. Platinum wires fused through the glass terminated inside and constituted electrodes—that is, the means by which the electricity was communicated to the gas. The wires outside the tube were connected with the positive and negative poles of an electric machine. The electrode connected with the positive pole is called the anode; the one connected with the negative pole is called the cathode. The passage of electricity through these tubes produces wonderful effects.

If the gas is not too much rarefied a brilliant glow appears in the tube, not continuous, but like luminous disks at right angles to the path of the electric current. If the gas is sufficiently exhausted a dark space shows around the cathode, and if the gas is still further rarefied the dark space grows and may fill the whole bulb, if the exhaustion is carried very far. But in this case the walls of the bulb shine with a brilliant glow called fluorescence. Crookes maintained that the phenomena were not to be explained, except on the assumption of particles much smaller than atoms shot out from the cathode.

The attention of the world at large was drawn to the matter by Roentgen's startling discovery of the photographic effect of electric discharge in exhausted bulbs. It can be proved that small particles are shot from the cathode in straight lines. If the cathode consists of a flat disk the particles are sent out in parallel rays; if the cathode is a portion of a sphere the rays converge to the centre of the sphere. The particles are very small, only about one-thousandth the weight of the hydrogen atom, and each has a charge of negative electricity, as is proved by the fact that they are attracted toward a positively electrified body and are repelled by a negatively electrified body. Their velocity is between 20,000 and 60,000 miles a second. It is not possible in this short article to show how these conclusions are arrived at, but they are generally admitted by investigators of the subject. These very small particles are sometimes called corpuscles and sometimes electrons.

Alpha and Beta Radium Rays.

A little more than ten years ago Becquerel discovered that uranium compounds produce some of the effects hitherto obtained only by electric discharge through exhausted gases, and shortly afterward Mme. Curie separated radium from pitchblende, the most important ore of uranium. Radium was found only in very small quantity, but its effect proved to be very powerful. Further investigation by Rutherford and others shows that from radium compounds two kinds of particles are sent out. One kind is about twice the weight of the hydrogen atom, and has a charge of positive electricity. The other kind is similar to the corpuscles which constitute the cathode rays. The first form what are called the alpha rays; the second, beta rays. The electric charge upon the particles is determined as in the case of the cathode rays. It is found that the alpha rays are attracted by a negatively electrified body, while the beta rays are attracted by a positively electrified body. The beta rays are the ones that most concern us at this time, because they consist of electrons which, as already stated, are smaller than the lightest atom known.

Since radium sends out particles as stated, it seems evident that it is decomposing. The beta particles are emitted in inconceivable numbers. It is calculated that each grain of radium shoots ont 200,000,000 corpuscles each second with a velocity nearly equal to that of light. So small are these electrons, however, that if these were the only particles emitted it would take millions of years for the radium to be dissipated. The particles of the alpha rays are much larger, and are given off more numerously, and on that account a few thonsand years only are needed for the almost total dissipation of radium.

The present theory regarding the composition of matter is that all atoms are made up of electrons; in the hydrogen atom there are approximately 1,000, in the atom of radium there are 225 times as many. Each of the electrons is charged with a definite quantity of negative electricity, but the atom is not charged, because the negative electricity is counterbalanced by an equivalent positive. How the positive electricity exists is not definitely settled.

One atom differs from another of a different element in the number of electrons, and possibly also in their arrangement one atom may change to another by losing a certain number of electrons. So it is conceivable that the lead atom might change to a gold atom, and we should have the problem solved for which the old alchemists desired the philosopher's stone.

The dream of the old alchemists is still unfulfilled. If it should in the futnre attain fulfillment the era of the newest chemistry would be inaugurated.

Teaching Children to Laugh

Unique Work That Aims to Bring Health and Happiness to Thousands.

THE idea that children need to be taught to laugh is pathetic in the extreme, yet it is literally true that the darkness of poverty has so enveloped the innocent souls of the tenement childhood that it laughs with the lips alone and not with the whole-hearted freedom of the child of normal conditions who knows the joys of childhood unalloyed and who carries invariably into later life the recollections of its happy days as the most cherished of memories. The absence of pleasures of any sort from the privation-hardened lives of the little east side folk is evidenced more strikingly by this physical laughter than by any other of its marked characteristics—or it was before the joys of the public playgrounds, the open-air gymnasiums, the clubs at the settlements, the kindergartens, the wonderful Summer vacations—before all these and many other pleasures were made known to them by private benefaction in some cases and through the Board of Education in others.

Within the past few years, by combining the public school and public playground accommodations with means supplied by philanthropic and wealthy women, the Public School Athletic League began its work among the children, and the wondrous ministrations of the stranger, Joy, have transformed the schoolhouses until they represent to the little east side girls an Elysium.

Work of Athletic League.

The Public Schools Athletic League in its work among the boys of the schools has been a potent and well-known power in the past four years. Its work among the girls, which is, if anything, the more important in its lasting benefits, is comparatively little known. Just a year ago it began under the leadership of well-known New York women to develop the physical and moral side of the girls in the schools, and its accomplishments in that short twelvemonth, hampered as it has been by the lack of money for its work, has been truly remarkable. It has extended from eight schools in which it began instruction to seventy of the public schools of the city, many of them in the crowded tenement districts, and in each has organized from one to six athletic clubs, each with a membership of forty or more girls, representing upward of 5,000 children, deriving daily benefits of most conspicuous character.

The nature of the work of instruction is necessarily different from that followed with the boys. Sports and games come naturally to the ordinary boy, but the girl knows little of how to play. Pastimes that develop the physical wellbeing are unknown to them. They have no inherent instinct to lead them, and, indeed, it is extremely difficult to find games suitable for their purposes. It has been found necessary to invent new games to wake and hold their interest and to invoke dancing to develop them. Indeed, dancing has become the main hold of the teachers, who find the exercise it affords most helpful of all, in view of the zest with which the children enter into it and its adaptability to the restrictions of the schoolroom.

And it is this dancing that brings delight to the east side tenement, delights so keen that many are the stories told by the enthusiastic teachers of the interest of the little folks. Indeed, this love of dancing must always strike even the most casual visitor to the congested districts. Everywhere it manifests itself. The children's dancing classes at the various settlements are filled to overflowing, and every organ grinder on the street is followed by a swaying, skipping troupe of children, some improvising steps as they go along, others waltzing, polkaing, pirouetting in a very ecstasy of motion. Thus the league, in its efforts to build sound, healthy bodies through appropriate exercises, found a well-paved foundation, and at the hours when the dancing classes gather, the offices of the Principals of the schools where they are held are besieged by a crowd of ragged little ones begging to be admitted.

The limited amount of funds at the disposal of the league made it impossible to hire the large number of professional teachers necessary, so a volunteer corps of teachers was organized by Miss Elizabeth Burchenal, who, in return for their own instruction by her, teach the children the work she outlines.

Some of Those Interested.

The women who have undertaken the organization of the work and have interested themselves in it through philanthropic instincts include many of the best-known names in New York. Miss Catharine Leverich has been foremost of these, and has been chosen President of the League. Assisting her both in her official position and outside of it, have been Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Henry Siegel, Mrs. William C. Demorest, Mrs. Henry Phipps, Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, Mrs. Henry Parsons, Mrs. Francis H. Bacon, Jr., Miss Julia Richman, Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim, Mrs. I. N. Phelps Stokes, Mrs. Charles F. Hetherington, Mrs. George Dickson, Mrs Richard Aldrich, Mrs. Cleveland H. Dodge, Mrs. S. R. Guggenheim, Mrs. Arthur J. Trussell, Mrs. Egerton Winthrop, Jr., Mrs. Felix Warburg, Miss Evangeline Whitney, Mrs Charles Farnsworth, Mrs. C. Frederick Naething, Miss Martha L. Draper, Mrs. Earl Sheffield, Mrs. Clarence Mackay, Mrs. E. G. Janeway, Mrs. J. Bradley Lord, Mrs Jessie H. Bancroft, Miss Margaret Stimson, and Miss Josephine Beiderhase.

In planning how they should reach the children of the schools these women were compelled to adapt themselves to the conditions that exist. First of all it was necessary to have places to play and places that were readily accessible. It was impossible even in the outlying districts to get fields with the limited means at their disposal, and in the more crowded districts it was impossible at any cost. Many of the schools had not space to house the number of children applying for instruction, and few had room to provide a playground. For these it was necessary to use the classrooms themselves, many of them not even having aisles. The games had thns to be adapted to meet these needs, modified and altsred to fit the playing ground. After school was the only time available, and this required that the sport be interesting enough to draw the children voluntarily back to school.

It was found that the natural instinct for dancing made this the most desirable form of athletics, so the folk dances of the peasants of European nations were invoked to provide variety. The adaptation of these dances to the end desired has been extremely clever, and they have served their purpose splendidly from the first.

Then the relay race appealed especially to the girls, and it has been adopted with many ramifications to vary it. All sorts of races, involving the passing or throwing of objects, like bean bags, the picking up of potatoes, and similar devices, have been employed. These have afforded a great variety of games. Sports like jumping and hurdling have been considered too liable to overtax the strength of the girls to be used, and the more strenuous games involving physical contact, like football, basket ball, and similar sports, have been eliminated, although basket ball is played largely under a totally different set of rules, which make it quite different from the boys' game. Indoor baseball, with the large rubber ball and bat, has been used, and field hockey, as it is known in England. These have been the main dependence, while in a few of the higher schools it has been possible to introduce gymnasium work with vaulting horses and heavier apparatus.

Dancing a Prominent Factor.

But primarily the dancing has been the prominent factor. The dances employed have been necessarily simple, for the double reason that they need to be taught to the teachers of the children and need to be learned quickly and performed equally well by all the children. Individual dances are all eschewed, none but those which can be used in class being taught.

A Swedish dance called Ladita is one of the most popular. It is danced in circular formation, with a glide and hop step in and out of the circle, with a bit of a spin. Another Swedish dance called the Lunnug is another largely used, danced also in circular form, with a sort of mazurka step. Then a Bohemian polka is often employed, called Komarno, and the Spanish dances, the Seguedilla and the Tarantela. A Russian dance, the Comarinskaia, is the nearest approach to the individual dance, though the Scottish dances, the Highland Fling and the Shean Trews, are essentially solo dances. These constitute practically the entire répertoire of the league in their various modifications.

They have all been taken hold of with avidity by the children everywhere. Every afternoon they are constantly dancing within and without school, employing the movements that are deemed especially beneficial in their physical development. Then, with the games and the relay races, they have learned to use their bodies with a grace and freedom that is in marked contrast to their former habit. By allowing only the girls who stand well in their classes to participate the games have been made to serve a disciplinary purpose as well, and have improved the grade of scholarship, spurring on the laggard as no punitive system heretofore employed has succeeded in doing.

The lack of the league, however, is money. They need money for apparatus, money for playgrounds, money for trophies and for instruction, for music, and a hundred and one purposes that daily arise to hinder the development of their plans. The boys have been able to secure money for their needs, and have been able to make some of their activities remunerative by charging admission fees, but the girls have depended wholly upon voluntary contributions, and these, though liberal, have been much less than necessary. In one year their work has cost but $3,500 all told, while three times that sum could have been advantageously expended had it been available. And nearly that amount will be necessary with the growth of the work in future.

It is with this phase of the problem that the New York women interested in the league are now struggling, and until this is solved the work must be pinched and dwarfed, where it deserves the aid of every philanthropic interest in this great city.

Still on the Bridge.

A RETIRED Captain of a big ocean liner, who now lives in Jersey with his family in a house surrounded by a garden in which various flowerbeds are shaped as anchors, unconsciously affords that portion of the commuting public which knows him much amusement on the ferry trips. When the Captain gets aboard a ferry a queer look comes over his face. He passes through the lower cabin to the stairway, which he ascends to the upper deck. Clear forward he goes until he is at the very front rail in the centre of the deck. There he remains throughout the trip, staring ahead until the boat has made her landing safely. In fancy he is still on the bridge of his own ship.

Erie's New Electric Road

THE opening of the new electric road on the Rochester Division of the Erie Railroad recently marked another achievement of American ingenuity in electrical railway science. For the first time a steam railway is using a single-phase alternating motor for moving trains, with power from Niagara Falls, seventy miles away.

The new system has been installed on the main line of the Erie between Rochester and Avon, and on a branch running from Avon to Mount Morris. It covers thirty-four miles of single track and is intended for passenger service only.

Until the trolley cars were put into operation the equipment was largely in the nature of an experiment. The preliminary test justified the confidence of the engineers, and this promise has been borne out by the operation of the road since it was opened to the public several weeks ago. Indeed, the departure is considered so successful that plans are under way to extend the trolley system to other divisions of the Erie lines.

The system has been developed in the last three years by the Westinghouse interests, the engineering work having been done by Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. Its novelty is found in the use of the alternating current instead of the direct current that has been generally employed by steam railroads. This change has been made possible by the single-phase motor. It is an adaptation of the older contrivance used on street cars.

Although the single-phase motor is not unlike the direct current motor in its operation, there is an important difference in the use of the alternating current. It is unnecessary to supply a direct current on any part of the electric line. Therefore there is no need for the rotary converter sub-stations, which have heretofore been installed at intervals along the electric lines.

The sub-station at Avon is nineteen miles from Rochester and fifteen from Monnt Morris, or about midway between the terminals of the new road. The power is drawn from the lines of the Niagara, Lockport and Ontario Power Company running to the new station of the Ontario Power Company at Niagara Falls.

In the sub-station building are three 750-kilowatt transformers of the oil-insulated, water-cooled type, which transform the 60,000-volt three-phase current from Niagara to an 11,000-volt single-phase current. This is fed directly to the trolley wires of the Erie Railroad. The overhead construction is of the so-called "catenary" type, the trolley wire being suspended from a messenger cable at intervals of ten feet, the whole being supported on poles with brackets. The support given by the messenger cable is a precaution required by the high electric tension, the relative large power supplied to the cars, the high speed at which they are run, and the necessity for absolute certainty of contact. The transformers on the cars receive the power at 11,000 volts and lower it to a point between 110 and 300 volts, the average being 250.

When the people of Rochester use the new road they find themselves in cars not unlike those on the Subway. They are 54 feet long. Each will seat 56 people. There is a 100-horse power motor on each axle, or four to a car, with the Westinghouse electro-pneumatic system of multiple unit train control.

The trolleys look like steel diamond-shaped frames working on a hinge on the roof of the car. They are technically known as the pantagraph type of trolleys, a horizontal bar resting on the wire and being raised and lowered by the lightly jointed framework, controlled by air pressure. The trains run every hour between Rochester and Mount Morris.

A comparison with the other electric equipments on steam roads shows other advantages of this more simple system. The trains of other railways are usually drawn by heavy engines driven by electricity from an overhead trolley or a third rail.

Seasickness to Be Abolished?

German Scientist Experiments with Gyroscope to Prevent Ship Rolling.

"NO more seasickness; the engineer to the rescue." Such is the promise held out by the invention of Dr. Otto Schlick, a German scientist. It was recently described before the British Institution of Naval Architects by Sir William White, late Chief Constructor of the British Navy. Sir William was talking not of mere naval theory, but was giving the result of his own experiments with the device, which is an adaptation of the principle of the gyroscope, or gyrostat, to give steadiness to the ship.

For the reader who does not like scientific terminology, and who is not familiar with either of these names, it may be said that it is the principle of the spinning top. No more, no less. Popularly stated, the theory is this—that if any body is made to revolve rapidly it will spin round a certain axis, a fixed line, which can be supposed to run through it, and that while thus spinning it will require a certain degree of force to change the direction of that axis. Every kind of motion requires force or resistance to change its direction; but that now under consideration is a very special variety of the general idea. Consider the case of a schoolboy's top. Place it with its peg on the ground when it is not spinning, and it instantly falls under the influence of gravity. Now let the schoolboy give it a rapid rotation with his string, and instantly there is a change, which, if it were seen for the first time, would seem magical. The top stands erect on its tiny peg, and for a time during which it might have fallen by gravity several hundred feet it whirls round and round with a steady, equable motion. One might imagine personified gravity saying to the top, "Come down; obey the laws of earth's attraction," and the giddy top replying, "Gravity, while this glorious spin lasts I defy you."

If your top is spinning on a plate you may move it upward, downward, sideways, as you will, without resistance. That is a motion of translation merely; but the moment you attempt to make its axis point in another direction there is a resistance, and, considering the smallness of the top, a very strong resistance, to the change. In the gyroscope this principle has been adopted for the production of the most striking effects. The instrument consists of a small metal flywheel, suspended on gimbals, which permit it to rotate in various positions. When the wheel is set in rapid motion the axis resists any change of direction, as does the spinning top. It may be suspended by a string fixed at one end of the axis, and go on spinning in a horizontal position until the motion slackens, when it gradually declines, as does the top.

Earth Motion Illustrates Scheme.

Modern artillery illustrates the same law of motion. The rifled gun gives the projectile a rotary motion which keeps its axis always parallel to itself. The great globe which we inherit is another example. The earth is revolving at the rate of about 1,000 miles an hour at the equator, and in London 730 miles an hour, and as a consequence its axis points unchangeably to the Pole Star. Otherwise we should have an unstable, wabbling world, and earthquakes appalling beyond conception.

On the same principle as Nature secures the stability of this solid globe, as the schoolboy's top defies gravitation, as the rifle bullet goes straight to its billet, as the gyroscope performs its marvelous feats, Dr. Otto Schlick proposes to abolish seasickness. His massive flywheel revolves at great speed round an axis or axle, pointing in a certain direction; and, like the top or the gyroscope, it resists powerfully any attempt to change that direction of rotation. The ocean waves try to make the ship roll; the revolving wheel resists the attempt.

The See-bar, on which this experiment has been made, was originally a first-class torpedo boat of the German Navy. She is 116 feet long, 12 feet beam, 3.4 feet draught, and 56 tons displacement. Her gyroscope is fixed in a compartment in front of the boiler room. It consists of a flywheel, made of forged steel in one piece, a metre—rather more than a yard—in diameter. The apparatus is mounted on trunnions, the axis of which lies athwartships, or across the breadth of the ship. These trunnions are connected by a massive framework so arranged that when the vessel is at rest, in an upright position, the spindle of the flywheel will be vertical. When the vessel is set rolling the spindle of the flywheel is free to become inclined to the vertical in a fore-and-aft direction. As rolling proceeds, the gyroscopic effect of the flywheel produces longitudinal oscillations of the apparatus. The gyroscope is made to revolve 1,600 times a minute—rather less than thirty times a second. This is the normal speed, but it can be made to do fifty revolutions a second, 3,000 in a minute.

How Rolling Is Prevented.

The weight of this gyroscope in the See-bar is about half a ton, or 1 to 114 of the total weight of the ship. Such a mass making from thirty to fifty revolutions a second produces an enormous gyrostatic effect—that is to say, what is called technically its moment of inertia—or resistance to change of rotational velocity—is very great. To put it familiarly, the See-bar is disposed to yield to the waves and commence rocking; the gyroscope stoutly resists any change in the direction of its axis. The ship rolls a little up and down, but the gyrostat goes on revolving at every instant, applying as it were a powerful brake to the hull of the ship, and at last completely steadying her. The waves "heave" her, lift her up and down as they please; but her revolving flywheel forbids rolling.

In describing the experiments The London Telegraph says that when Sir William White was on board the See-bar the sea was unfortunately too smooth to furnish a satisfactory test; but, it continues, we have graphic records of actual experiences, on July 17 and Aug. 21, 1906, and some still-water rolling experiments, the results of which are very striking. In the latter case, when the vessel was heeled over from 10 to 15 degrees by a crane, her inclination fell to half a degree in two oscillations, whereas without the gyroscope it took twenty oscillations. In the trials off Cuxhaven the graphic records show that without the gyroscope the vessel rolled in the first instance 25 degrees to leeward and 15 degrees to windward, but immediately the gyroscope came into operation the arc of rolling (out to out) was reduced to 1 degree. Voyagers who are subject to mal de mer will appreciate, without being versed in trigonometry, the difference between a roll of 40 degrees and a roll of 1 degree. In the one case it is "Steward! steward!" or it may be the blank despair so often witnessed at sea; in the other it is calm contemplation of the rising or falling surge.

Many practical seamen, says The Telegraph, to whom this proposal for steadying ships gyroscopically has been submitted have expressed the fear that if a ship were so steadied a grave danger would arise—that of seas breaking on board the vessel. Sir William White was consulted by the inventor, at an early stage of his inquiry, on this point. Sir William was of opinion that "no danger whatever would arise." "It seemed to me," he says, "that when a vessel rolls heavily, in all probability the risk of seas coming on board would be greater than in a vessel for which the rolling motion has been destroyed. In both cases vertical heaving motion must take place among relatively large waves, or the ship would be overwhelmed; but in the ship whose deck remains practically horizontal during the heaving motion, the risks of seas breaking on board should be less than in the same ship when her heaving is combined with heavy rolling."

Dr. Schlick, reporting a trial when the See-bar was broadside to the seas, says: "The waves seemed to disappear under her, and she rose with a gentle motion vertically upward, and sank again just as gently into the trough of the sea, without even spray coming on board to any extent worth mentioning." This agrees with Sir William White's expectation, and, as he points out, "it corresponds exactly with the description given by other observers of the behavior of ships of long period (of swing or oscillation) when exposed to wave action."

It may seem to the reader that the effect is large in proportion to the means. It has to be remembered, however, that the whole force of a wave is not exerted in making a ship roll; mainly, it is spent in producing vertical motion. We have seen no estimate of the dynamic effect of the gyroscope in operation; but it must be large. It may be remembered that when the destroyer Cobra was lost in the North Sea it was believed that she had broken her back; and calculations were made tending to show that her turbine machinery would exert a gyroscopic resistance against pitching which, added to a heavy head sea, might have helped to break the vessel in two. The truth can never be known with regard to that too frail craft, but, at any rate, no such effect could attend the use on a vessel of ordinary construction of the athwartship gyroscope, with its freedom to swing fore and aft.

The naval architects who joined in the discussion of the paper admitted the efficiency of the apparatus, but differed considerably as to the amount of power required. Sir John Thornycroft, himself the inventor of an automatic steadying apparatus which he applied to his own yacht, and Sir John Stirling agreed that the gyroscope would check rolling. On the other hand, Prof. Biles of Glasgow and Prof. Cremieu of the University of Paris foresaw the possibility of the proposed apparatus in certain conditions increasing the roll perilously. Sir William White made light of some of these terrors as theoretic dangers not to be feared in practice. On a question of this order opinion, however eminent its authors, is of little value against experiment. Actual trial will have to be made, and we have one of the finest possible opportunities for making the trial, where, if successful, it will bring an immediate reward.

Channel Propitious for Experiments.

The Channel service was mentioned by Sir William White. Here is an ideal opportunity. Three out of five of the strong winds are westerly and southwesterly; and the services between Dover and Calais, Folkestone and Boulogne, and Newhaven and Dieppe have to be carried on in all weathers, against heavy winds and big seas—broadside on. Turbine steamers have already canceled the vibrations that were caused by the reciprocating engines, and there remains one more triumph to be won—to stop the rolling. Prof. Lambert, while admitting that the gyroscope would help to steady the vessels, was rather appalled by the power that would be required. He made a rough mental calculation that on a Channel steamer there would be needed a gyroscope of sixteen tons weight.

A Correction.

HOW RAILROAD PRESIDENTS PLAY

Diversions Run all the Way from Walking Tours, Golf, and Salmon Fishing to Stock Raising, Farming, Yachting or Studying Historical or Scientific Treatises.

HOW does the President of a great railroad play? Are his pleasures as intense in their way as his responsibilities during business hours? The questions were suggested when James McCrea, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, sailed for Europe on the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria last Thursday. Mr. McCrea is on his way to England for a walking tour with his two sons. His ideas of recreation and a simple life contradict the popular notion of the masters of great railroads taking their vacations in luxurious travel in private cars, yachting, buying pictures, or finding relaxation in the gayeties of Newport, Bar Harbor, or the capitals of Europe.

Most men point to James J. Hill as the representative railroad President of the country. He is still the leader of the vast Great Northern enterprise, even though he has resigned the Presidency to one of his sons. Moreover, Mr. Hill's play hours are typical of most of his class. Mr. Hill has grown with his railroads, and knows them from the oily ties and spikes to the complications of new bond issues. Practical railroad Presidents of this sort—they are in the majority—find keen recreation in moving trains, making tours of inspection, planning improvements, and opening new lands to farmers and manufacturers.

James J. Hill Goes to Labrador.

Until quite recently Mr. Hill's other diversions were of the simplest sort. He has a beautiful home at St. Paul, on the bluffs overlooking the Mississippi. There most of his leisure is spent. Fine paintings amounted to a hobby with him, and he gradually collected a good-sized gallery. He does not care for the old masters. His pictures are modern, preferably of the Barbizon and later French schools. Then he bought a farm of about 1,000 acres, situated nine miles from St. Paul. It is all a gentleman's farm should be, with blooded stock, model barns, dairy, and dwellings. Here Mr. Hill spends days at a time.

About six years ago Mr. Hill found that his financial interests required his presence in New York very frequently. With his gradual change of residence came new pleasures. He now divides his time about equally between this city and St. Paul. First he lived in hotels here, then in apartments, and recently he bought a house in the upper Fifth Avenue section, where he entertains in a quiet way. His vacations in the East consist of trips to Labrador on his ocean-going steam yacht to fish for salmon. The voyages usually begin early in June, and last about three weeks. He takes a small party of friends with him, usually including George F. Baker, President of the First National Bank. The time spent in these annual trips is Mr. Hill's only extended holiday.

Friends of E. H. Harriman say that really to know him—if he can be fully known—one must see him at play. To Wall Street Mr. Harriman, the President of the Union Pacific, engineer of vast enterprises, and master of finance, seems to be a slight, taciturn man, with spectacles, a bushy mustache, and a nervous manner, who has an infinite capacity for work and the ingenuity of a great General in planning surprises. His friends see quite a different man in private life. Mr. Harriman believes in plenty of diversion; he loves sport for its own sake. On the average he spends three days of seven in play.

Mr. Harriman's Farm and Boys' Club.

His love of the open and fine horses is expressed in Arden, his great estate in the Ramapo Mountains, where Mr. Harriman spends the larger part of the year. The property comprises about 30,000 acres. The residence, with its jutting wings and glass-inclosed verandas, forms a picture of homelike elegance. A fine house is building on one of the hilltops, a funicular railway having been built to the summit to carry up the materials.

The best expressions of the owner's tastes, however, are found in the stock farm and rural improvements. The horses in the stables are of the finest for a gentleman's driving teams. Miles of private roads have been laid out. Mr. Harriman has organized a farm company, a wood-cutting company, and a construction company to improve the highways. He cares for his farmers and workingmen in a way that is almost paternal.

These diversions are more attractive to Mr. Harriman than gay society or even his occasional trips on his steam yacht, the Sultana, one of the finest of American pleasure craft. Another interest amounts to a fad with him—a boys' club on the east side. He has been interested in the project about thirty years. The creation of the largest club of its kind in the world and plans for the happiness of thousands of poor youngsters—executed in a most unobtrusive way—are a constant source of recreation. A clubhouse at Tenth Street and Avenue A, costing $250,000 and erected five years ago, is evidence of Mr. Harriman's interest and power as an organizer.

George J. Gould is an extreme type of railroad President and sportsman combined. As head of the Gould family and manager of their great railroad interests, he is President of the Missouri Pacific system and serves in a number of subsidiary concerns.

Always fond of sports, Mr. Gould has engaged in a continuous round of sports since he grew up. Before he gave much time to business he was a fair fencer and boxer. Then he went in for riding, shooting, and yachting. He rode to hounds in cross-country runs, built the yacht Vigilant in 1894 and cut a wide swath at the Cowes regatta, and put up a shooting lodge in the Catskills and gave some time to hunting. He also made long voyages in European waters in his steam yacht—one of the finest boats of its kind.

Then polo playing became his fad in 1898, and in this branch of sport he has been chiefly interested of late years. He has been known to play polo six days running on his estate, Georgian Court, at Lakewood. His private polo grounds there cost $75,000. He would appear at the Narragansett and Meadow Brook games with a string of twenty-five ponies, changing them with every round. He organized the Lakewood Polo Club, and started several championship tournaments. Mr. Gould became known as a polo player of the first rank.

Now Mr. Gould is selling his string of polo ponies, and says he will not play much hereafter. He works hard at his railroad affairs—as hard as he played polo. He says he is too busy with big matters to think so much of polo. Splendid Georgian Court, with its riding ring, tennis courts, bowling alleys, and swimming pool, benefited Mr. Gould less than usual last Winter. He will sail with Mrs. Gould for Europe in June.

President Baer Enjoys Landscape Gardening.

In striking contrast with these financiers is the austere, self-contained personality of George F. Baer, President of the Reading and New Jersey Central systems. Friends of this deliberate, incisive leader of capital in the Pennsylvania coal strikes say they see in him the stamp of his protesting German ancestors, not only in his business life but in his recreations as well. Mr. Baer began life in Reading, Penn., in the heart of the "Pennsylvania Dutch" region. A student by nature, he is a lawyer by profession, a railroad President by evolution, and an agriculturist by taste. His country home, Hawthorne, near Reading, has a fine library, and Mr. Baer devotes much of his time to historical research. In his garden he is an authority on flowers, especially roses and chrysanthemums. He is also something of an authority on landscape gardening, and has planned a park system for Reading. Two miles from the city is a large farm, where Mr. Baer spends most of his Summers, with his Alderney cattle, his bungalow on the edge of the Schuylkill River, and a steam launch to carry him to the town.

E. B. Thomas, President of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, has long been known as an expert whip. He has a residence in South Bethlehem, Penn., and an apartment in this city, but much of his leisure is spent at his country seat near Morristown. Here the sight of Mr. Thomas's four-in-hand at the railroad station, his appearance with a few friends, and glimpses of the party bowling along the neighboring roads with the host on the driver's seat, is familiar to dwellers in the New Jersey suburbs. In the last few years automobiling has gradually taken its place among this railroad President's diversions. He keeps his string of horses and rides frequently, but his longer trips are made by motor car.

For ten months of the year Mr. Thomas's life is that of most busy men of affairs. Hours of work in his office and frequent trips over the Lehigh Valley lines are diversified by leisure moments on one of his riding horses, among his books, of which he is very fond, or jaunts in his motor car. When Summer comes he tries to forget business in a trip abroad. Three years ago he spent two months in a coaching tour through England and France. Last year his four-in-hand was supplanted by a motor car that whirled him along the rural roads of France for a month or more. Next Summer Mr. Thomas expects to spend two months in a similar jaunt.

Several of the railroad Presidents, besides finding recreation in their work, shoulder responsibilities so heavy and complex that they find little or no time for play in the usual meaning of the word. Such a man is Marvin Hughitt, President of the Chicago and Northwestern. He has not been known to take an extended holiday in fifteen years, excepting two weeks spent in the White Mountains.

Another of this type is W. H. Newman, the executive head of the great Vanderbilt system. He is usually to be found in his office in the Grand Central Station from 9 in the morning until dark. One of his fads is walking—over the tracks or terminal as like as not. He has a way of suddenly appearing at some distant switch or signal tower with an inquiry or a suggestion to the men he finds there. No one knows precisely when President Newman will start in his private car for a few hours of relaxation on the road. The car stands in the Grand Central Station ready to leave with ten minutes' warning, even the bed being made up. The entire Vanderbilt system is inspected at least once a year. Improvements or traffic problems, more or less remote, may demand Mr. Newman's presence at any time. In Summer he usually goes away for a week or a fortnight at a time for a rest in some quiet spot in the Adirondacks or a village along the New York Central lines.

Practical Railroaders Combine Work and Play.

This habit of combining work and play is characteristic of the railroad President who has risen from the ranks through the operating department. Mr. Newman began his career as a station agent at Shreveport, La. L. F. Loree, the new President of the Delaware & Hudson, has the same characteristics. He started as a civil engineer. F. D. Underwood, President of the Erie, another high official who finds recreation in railroading, began as a brakeman.

Of the three, President Loree is the least familiar. After serving as executive officer of the Baltimore & Ohio and the Rock Island, he came to New York about two years ago to go into the banking house of Speyer & Co. Being of a modest, retiring disposition, not every one has been able to penetrate under the surface and find the expert railroad executive of unusual abilities.

Mr. Loree is serious, even in his pleasures. He finds diversion in the details of railroading with much the same spirit that he spends hours of leisure in reading—preferably books on scientific topics. He visits Europe twice every year. These trips abroad usually last from a month to six weeks.

President Underwood of the Erie has the ability to cast off the cares of railroad management as he would his office coat. His play with his yacht, the Alice, and his automobile alternates with little trips along the Erie lines. The cruises on the Alice usually last from Friday noon to Monday morning—along the Sound, in the lower bay, or perhaps down the New Jersey coast. A spin in his touring car generally ends his business day. But friends of Mr. Underwood say he finds quite as much pleasure in watching the little developments along his railroad and mixing with his employes, with whom he likes to chat in a democratic way. Mr. Underwood spends a month or so every year on a pleasure trip. He has just returned from such a vacation at Virginia Hot Springs.

E. P. Ripley, President of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé system, and considered a typical railroad man of the West, combines business and pleasure in still another way. Ten months of the year he spends in Chicago, his suburban home being at Riverside. Two months find him at his country home in Santa Barbara, Cal. Every month or six weeks he runs on to New York to spend a few days and keep in touch with railroad affairs. He is a man of tremendous energy and with an eye for minute details. He sees every mile of his system at least one a year. At Santa Barbara the click of typewriters, the ringing of long-distance telephone bells, and the telegrams brought him by his private secretaries remind his visitors of his business office in Chicago.

Then Mr. Ripley plays just as intensely. His fad is golf. He talks, even preaches, it, and covers the links at Riverside or Santa Barbara with the enthusiasm of a schoolboy. Two weeks ago he won the handicap golf trophy of the Santa Barbara Country Club in an exciting 36-hole contest.

These Presidents are the products of the operating departments of the great railroads. The other type, represented by Oscar G. Murray, President of the Baltimore & Ohio, comes from the traffic department. One means life on the open road; the other, executive work in offices. The operating man gets the trade, the traffic man handles the business details.

Mr. Murray can work hard on occasion, but usually his office moves with the regularity of clockwork. He is a bachelor of luxurious tastes, fond of books, a yearly jaunt in Europe, and trips over his lines with small parties of friends. His house in Baltimore is often the scene of quiet entertainments. He owns a farm near Pennyen, Md., where he is the host at house parties at week's ends. His pleasures lie in his clubs and in society.

Curious Odds and Ends

Every year the school children of Sweden plant about 600,000 trees.

The nutritive value of an egg is two and a half times its weight of cow's milk.

A sure cure for hiccough, says a Western physician, is a pinch of snuff.

If one were asked, remarks London Health, to name the most patient man on earth, the reply would probably be—Paul Cinquevalli. The famous feat of throwing up a hen's egg and catching it on a plate without breaking it necessitated nine years of constant practice.

Old newspapers make excellent packing paper, in which to put things in storage, as printing ink is disliked by insects.

Snails are blessed with great vitality. A case is recorded of an Egyptian desert snail which came to life upon being immersed in warm water, after having passed four years glued to a card in a museum.

Men's Suits to Measure, $26.50.

Reduced From $35.00 and $40.00.

OUR GREAT ANNIVERSARY SALE. Just a year ago to-day we advertised our remarkable $26.50 Sale of made-to-measure Suits for men.

We thought we had reached the limit of reduction at that time, owing to the big advance in price of woolen fabrics, and never again would we be able to offer to our customers so good a chance to secure a fine Suit, especially at the commencement of the season.

We knew when we made this offer a year ago that it would not take Brooklyn men long to appreciate the value of these Suits to measure at $26.50, but it was gratifying just the same to meet with such an enthusiastic response. Hence we have decided to repeat this sale as a celebration of the large increase in business during the past year we have been in our new location in the New Men's Wear Building. The materials are the season's newest woolens, in fancy worsteds, cassimeres, tweeds and cheviots; also a nice line of blues and blacks, in serges, unfinished worsteds and cheviots. About 50 styles. Coats will be the new model, single or double breasted sack. For all over 42 breast measure an extra charge for additional material will be made.

This sale FOR MONDAY AND TUESDAY.

BIG CRUSH TO HEAR ROCKEFELLER PASTOR

Police Had to Let in Fifth Avenue Congregation a Few at a Time.

HE TALKS OF OUR FUTURE

Anxious About Immigrant Problem—Also Asks, Can You Reconcile Your Business with God?

The Rev. Dr. Charles F. Aked, late of Pembroke Chapel, Liverpool, the second largest Protestant congregation in the British Empire, assumed the pastorate of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, in West Forty-sixth Street, just off Fifth Avenue, yesterday morning. This is the church popularly called "Rockefeller's," perhaps because John D. Rockefeller and his family are members of it and his son is the leader of one of its Bible classes.

There was a dispute as to whether Mr. Rockefeller, Sr., was present. Several ushers said he was not, explaining that a slight indisposition kept him away. They also declared that the man who sat just back of John D., Jr., and who resembled the pictures of the oil magnate, was some one else. This man, however, waited until everybody else was out of the church and then made a hasty exit with his wife by a little side door. Some one who addressed him in the street as "Mr. Rockefeller," asked him how he had liked the new pastor's first sermon.

"Very nice," answered he. "It was a vigorous sermon."

Others in the congregation that packed the church were J. R. Hegeman, Colgate Hoyt, William Henry Hays, John E. Thompson, and J. F. Comey.

Rockefeller Class Seated First.

The small church auditorium, which holds but 950 persons, was decorated simply. A few palms stood on the pulpit platform, above which was a wreath of lilies and orchids and green. The Bible class of young Mr. Rockefeller occupied the auditorium from 9:45 o'clock until church time. Previously a number of people had gathered outside the front door. They were held back by policemen. When he had dismissed his class young Mr. Rockefeller saw that they marched to the gallery and that all of them had seats. Then the pewholders were admitted. After that came the public, admitted by half dozens, the rear guard pushing hard upon those in front.

Many had to stand in the aisles, and all the seats were packed, a number of the pewholders making room by judicious squeezing for one or two more than their families. Nearly everybody who had come to hear the famous English divine got inside. Practically all of the congregation was there, for Dr. Aked's first sermon was anticipated with interest.

Makes Good First Impression.

Dr. Aked whirled up to the church in a blue-striped automobile, going away in it also. He made a good first impression on his audience. In spite of a somewhat pronounced English accent, every word he said could be understood. He is a big man, with a big, brownish mustache, which some who professed to know said was "just like Roosevelt's." He seems to be in the full tide of vigor—all enthusiasm, and with no affectation. At least that is what some hundreds said as they went out of the church after the sermon.

Dr. Aked was for sixteen years pastor of Pembroke Chapel. He gained a wide reputation and popularity by waging successful campaigns for civic decency and against all forms of vice. His labors at Liverpool attracted the attention not only of England but of the Continent because of his extraordinary ability as a preacher, the wide range of his sympathies, and his energetic support of every movement calculated to benefit the people, no matter to what church they might belong.

His opening prayer yesterday morning was some fifteen or twenty minutes long. While making it, though his eyes were closed, his voice had the elasticity and his face the mobility of a preacher delivering an eloquent sermon. He gave thanks for the bright sunshine of the day, and asked for strength to do the work he had planned to do in his new ministry. He asked blessings for those who managed the business part of the church, and prayed that journalists and Judges and Magistrates might realize the responsibility that rests upon them to do good in molding and shaping the great heterogenous New York public in the right way.

A Ministry of Reconciliation.

The theme of his sermon was "A Ministry of Reconciliation," the text being from II. Corinthians, v., 18: "And hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation." He began by saying:

"The dynamic of the ministry in the Word is that God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself, and that this ministry has come to us as ambassadors on behalf of Christ, so that we shall say to all people, 'Be ye reconciled to God.'"

This first sentence of the sermon gives the general trend of the address. Dr. Aked would not have the Church fight with the upturned secrets of science, but would claim for God every world that science may discover. He would not preach that the churches should all be united, for each has its own special way of telling the same truth; but he would have them federated. He would have the nations federated in peacefulness.

Bringing his sermon closer home, striking the most intimate practical note to New Yorkers, he asked what the city first, and then the Nation, is to do with the hordes of foreign peoples that are crowding upon the shores of New York. They are alien in sympathies and training, he pointed out, and when they taste of the liberty of this land they will get drunk on license unless their cases are attended to sensibly. He thought the problem would be solved by making Christians of them. He said the campaign would be made, and that the Word would be carried to them in their own languages if it was necessary.

Reconciling Business with God.

In the course of the sermon he put this question:

"Can you reconcile your business with God? Was yesterday's deal in harmony with His mind? Will your books stand a heavenly audit? In your office daro you put up the sign—that is to say, should you dare if you had any realizing belief in the efficacy of prayer—'Abide with me; oome not to sojourn, but abide with me'? Will

A THAW TRAGEDY REVEALED.

Woman Committed Suicide in Mrs. Thaw's Home Five Years Ago.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 21.—After having been successfully suppressed for five years, the tragedy at Lyndhurst, the Thaw family mansion, was made known to-day. It came out that in the Spring of 1902 a Kentucky woman, the wife of a Presbyterian minister and a relative of Mrs. William Thaw, committed suicide in Lyndhurst by hanging herself. To this incident is attributed the refusal of Mrs. Thaw to live in Lyndhurst, and the nervousness of Harry K. Thaw when last he visited the old home. At that time he would not remain in his bedroom unless a light was left burning all night.

Ex-Coroner Jesse M. McGeary confirms the story, and the only detail lacking is the name of the woman, which will be made known when Coroner Armstrong's office opens to-morrow.

"I was Coroner of Allegheny County in 1901-02, at the time a beautiful woman, a guest of Mrs. William Thaw at Lyndhurst, committed suicide," said Mr. McGeary to-day. "She was found hanging in one of the bathrooms, having used a Turkish towel to make the noose. I do not remember the name of the woman or her place of residence, but there was great effort on the part of the Thaw connections to keep the matter from the public. An inquest was held, and the verdict was death from suicide. The woman was a relative of Mrs. William Thaw, the wife of a Presbyterian minister, who was in poor health and who had not accompanied her to Pittsburg. I remember the case distinctly, as I deputized Deputy Rowan to handle it."

The body was taken to Kentucky by a prominent minister here, and the family then believed that death was due to natural causes.

PEACE IN THAW FAMILY?

Mrs. Holman, Evelyn, and Thaw's Mother to Meet, Pittsburg Hears.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 21.—It is stated here to-day on apparently reliable authority that a reconciliation will be effected between Mrs. William Thaw, mother of Harry Kendall Thaw, and Mrs. Charles J. Holman, mother of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, and that the Countess of Yarmouth will bring about the meeting.

Mrs. Thaw and the Countess will go to the former's Summer home at Cresson this week, but before they go the Countess, it is rumored, will call at the home of Mrs. Holman in Brookline, and extend an invitation to Mrs. Holman to form one of the party at Cresson. It is believed that Mrs. Holman will accept the invitation, and that while there Mrs. Evelyn Thaw will run over from New York for a few days to meet her mother, whom she has not seen since her wedding day.

The reconciliation, it is said, will be the result of the recent statement issued by Mrs. Holman.

TO SUE FOR THEIR MASCOT.

Railroad Men Want Back Dog Who Rides on Their Engines.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., April 21.—The employes of the Caldwell Branch of the Greenwood Lake Railroad have for several weeks been making a determined effort to learn the whereabouts of Railroad Ned, their dog mascot, which had mysteriously disappeared from its usual haunts—aboard the tender or cab of a locomotive, the platform of a passenger coach, or within a baggage car. The mystery was solved yesterday, for the committee of railroaders who have been untiring in their search for the dog found him at the home of a New York business man at Essex Falls. The latter refused to surrender Ned, and the railroaders will, it is said, bring an action to recover the dog if it is not returned by Monday.

Railroad Ned, a white mongrel, was found at the Caldwell station in a half-starved condition by Engineer "Jim" Minshull about a year ago. To use the engineer's expression, it was "about as long and as thin as a lead pencil and he was suffering from exposure." The engine driver took the dog into the cab, and, after thawing it out, gave it a meal from the contents of his dinner pail. Other railroad men took an interest in its future welfare. In time the dog became adept in jumping on and off trains while under headway, and was never contented when away from the sound of the whistle. Commuters tried to take an interest in Ned, but the dog would not make friends with any one who did not wear a uniform or suit of overalls. As the train was about to leave a station Ned would stand on the tender of the engine and bark loudly at the passengers, as if to notify them that the train was about to start, and this always caused much merriment among the commuters, and Ned was soon a favorite despite his unfriendliness toward them. A movement was on foot to purchase a handsome collar for the dog when he disappeared.

WITH AUTO KILLS A MAN.

St. Louis Youth a Few Hours Before Had Been Fined for Speeding.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, April 21.—James E. Campbell of 7 Kingshury Place, a stepson of a St. Louis banker, John W. Morrison, fatally injured John Hastings, a motorman, while driving in his automobile in St. Louis County last night. Hastings died in Missouri Baptist Sanitarium near midnight. Campbell was arrested at his home at two o'clock this morning. A few hours before the accident he had been fined $3 in the police court for violating the speed law.

In the car with him when he ran over Hastings were Richard S. Kennard of 4 Portland Place, Eugene F. Williams of 9 Washington Terrace, and E. Ansor More and his brother, Cyrus B. More, of 302 Lake Avenue. Campbell was driving the car. Hastings was crossing Clayton Road from north to south. Campbell veered to the right, he says, trying to avoid him, but as he turned the motorman went in the same direction, and in an instant was under the automobile.

Campbell had by this time turned off the road into a ditch and came near overturning the automobile, the party declare.

Adolphus Busch Off to Europe.

ST. LOUIS, April 21.—Adolphus Busch left St. Louis to-day in his private car for New York, where he will embark on May 14 on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. for Europe. He will spend the Summer in Langenschwalbach. Mr. Busch had to be carried to his car in a chair. Dispatches received to-night from Indianapolis say he is standing the trip well.

DESERTED WOMAN WENT BACK TO DIE

Climbed Into Husband's Room by the Fire Escape and Turned on the Gas.

SOME ONE CAME BETWEEN

And He Wouldn't Be Reconciled—Lay Dead Facing Calve's Picture.

Isabel Belleville, not long from Paris, had been trying to learn English up to last Saturday night. The maker of her grammar chose for conjugating purposes no prosalo verbs; he used such as "smile" and "laugh" and "dance." Theee she had labored with, writing down on slips of paper that cluttered her dark little room at 325 West Thirtieth Street the schoolday conjugations: "I smile, thou smilest, he smiles"; "he laughs," "I dance," and so on.

But not long ago he ceased to smile at her, to laugh when she was near, to dance with her. Thus Isabel's conjugating of the old verbs came to be bitter work in the last two weeks, and she grew weary of it.

On Saturday night the weariness reached a climax. Putting on the daintiest of all the clothing she had—and she had much, for she worked by day in a dressmaking place—she went over to the house at 302 West Twenty-eighth Street, where Louis Belleville lives, to try upon him once more what graces had been given to her. Once he had thought much of them.

And having failed in that she waited until he had gone out. Then she gained entrance to the house hy strategy and got into his room by way of a fire escape and an opened window. She stopped up all the cracks in the room with towels. French to the last, she pulled off her plain outer jacket, put a red ribbon in her hlack hair, turned on two gas jets, and died there where he, first of all, must see her.

He saw her early on Sunday morning and all yesterday he cried. He says he knows now how much he loved Isabel. He didn't realize it at all Saturday night.

Belleville, a tall, hlack-eyed Frenchman, a bass violist all his life, came to this country several years ago. Soon he sent back to Paris for Isabel Routtelot, and she came here to him as Mme. Belleville. They were as hsppy, said their friends, as sny couple could be.

Last year Louis tried for a place in the orchestra of the Manhattan Opera House and got it. They had a great celebration that night, and in the next succeeding months they seemed happier than ever.

Then, some two or three months ago, the couple moved to the house of Mme. Guilard, at 302 West Twenty-eighth Street, from another house in the neighborhood, and trouble soon hecsme apparent. There were no loud quarrels or anything of that sort, but the old French-women in the neighborhood talked of how the little black-eyed girl from Paris was drooping away. What the trouble was neither ever told.

"It was a secret sorrow of some eort," said old Mme. Tisson yesterday, and she had talked much with the girl at night while they sewed or wrestled with the English language. "She nevalre say much."

It was soon after Mme. Calve came to the Manhattan Opera House and clinched the success of Mr. Hammerstein's venture in opera there that the bass violinist and the dressmaker from Paris separated. He saw to it that she went to the house of Mme. Pascal in Thirtieth Street, and paid her board and lodging there. That was some four weeks ago. He continued to pay the $6 every week, and to do that he made a single trip to her hoarding house every seven days.

She continued working at the dressmaking place. At nights she seemed very sad. Often when she would get up from the supper table Mme. Tisson and Mme. Pascal and several other women and girls would inveigle her into a big family room, where they would sew and work out problems of the English language. But the girl went further down into the blues. She told nothing of her worries, but the old women knew, or what they did not know they imagined.

On Saturday night there was a ghastly pallor on her dark face at the supper table. Mme. Tisson and all the rest besought her to stay and sew and laugh.

"No, I will go to my hushand's house to-night," she said.

She was there before he went to the Opera House. They had a little talk together. She went with him to the Opera House, or part of the way thither, but came back immediately, going up to one of the upper floors to talk to Mme. Cherot, an old friend and diplomatic comforter. Her mood had changed; now she seemed hysterically happy. Leaving Mme. Cherot at 10 o'clock, she made her way downstairs, to go home, her friend thought.

Reaching the first floor, however, she crept through a hath room window onto the fire escape. She ran along that to the window of Belleville's room. She forced it open and went in. She wrote a note to her employer, saying that she knew her work had been had in the last week or so, hut ahe had some excuse for it hecause of a great sadness that was over her. She wrote another to Belleville, which said, in French:

"Do not worry. I do this of my own accord.—Isabel."

Belleville came in ahout 1 o'clock. He smelled the gas as soon as he opened the downstairs door. He hroke into his room, calling out for help. Other roomers opened the windows. By the dim light from a hall jet he saw Isabel lying on the hed, dressed as for a wedding, and facing a portrait of Mme. Calve, the great artist of the Manhattan Opera House, on the mantel.

Belleville grahbed up the little hody and pressed it to him, patting the berlhoned hlack head in his delirium.

The police came in due time, then an ambulance surgeon, then the Coroner, and at last the undertaker, who had the hody taken away. The funeral will be to-night or to-morrow.

YOUNG GIRL DISAPPEARS.

Police Search for Elizabeth Grady, Last Seen Near Fort Washington.

The parents of fourteen-year-old Elizabeth Grady are alarmed at the girl's absence from her home, which is in the old mansion of the Nolan estate, 193d Street and Fort Washington Avenue, where they are the caretakers.

Saturday afternoon the girl started for St. Elizabeth's Church, 187th Street and Broadway. She was seen by a playmate, Francis Brady, at 181st Street on her way to the church, near which is the school she daily attends.

At the request of the girl's parents the police have sent out a general alarm.

Stole Edward M. Shepard's Railing.

Edward M. Shepard, the well-known lawyer, reported to the police of the Adams Street Station, Brooklyn, last night that thieves had visited his home, at 44 Pierrepont Street, Brooklyn Heights. The robbers stole several feet of an ornamental bronze railing in front of Mr. Shepard's house.

DON'T WANT NEW HAVEN LOAN

London Times Reports the Failure of the Bond Issue in Paris.

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES CO.

LONDON, April 21.—A dispatch to The Times from Paris says:

"The New York, New Haven & Hartford 4 per cent. bonds are not a success.

"It is doubtful if the underwriting syndicate will take more than half the amount of the loan which it bought. The halance, which is being held under option, may not be taken at all."

The bond issue referred to consists of 4 per cent. debentures to the value of 145,000,000f., which were put out for subscription in the last week of March hy the Société Générale and the Comptoir National d'Escompte de Paris and by their agents in London, Berlin, Hamhurg, and Amsterdam. In order to facilitate subscriptions the bonds were printed in the denominations of 500f., and corresponding amounts in the currency of the respective countries. The issue price was 98 per cent., payahle on allotment.

By reason of the small denominstion of the honds and the fact that the subscriptions were opened in so many financial centres the failure of the issue to attract huyers was not for lack of endeavor to sell the securities to the small European investors, who, according to reports, have been keen hunters after hargains in American securities.

An additional attraction in France was the fact that the bonds were free from all French taxation under the laws now in force.

OYSTER BAY THEATRE BURNS.

Buildings Near By Also Destroyed by Early Morning Fire—Loss, $40,000.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., April 21.—Hundreds of persons drove in from the nearby villsges to-day to view the ruins of Long's Opera House here, which was destroyed hy a fire early thie morning, which also damaged several adjoining buildings. The total loss was $40,000.

The flames started in the rear of the stage, and when discovered filled the entire interior of the theatre. "Driven from Home" had heen given in the house last night, and the fire started ahout two hours after the last person had left the building. The building was entirely of wood, and hurned rapidly.

The houses across the street were smoking in the heat when their occupants plied out, without waiting to dress. Roger W. Royce's grocery store occupied the ground floor of the opera house building and was destroyed, as was a millinery store kept by Miss Ella Matson, next door. A cottage on the other side was badly damaged.

The Post Office huilding suffered heavily, the Bosrd of Trade rooms and offices over the Post Office being wrecked hy flames and water. The Prenowitz building was also damaged.

FIVE MILES OF FOREST FIRE.

Long Island Blaze Does $500,000 Damage and Threatens Three Towns.

Special to The New York Times.

AMAGANSETT, L. I., April 21.—A forest fire which started near East Hampton early this morning destroyed valuable timber, estimated to be worth half a million dollars, covering a tract of five square miles. Arthur Griffin, who had about 1,000 cords of standing oak and cedar and 400 cords cut ready for hauling, was the heaviest loser. Three towns were threatened with destruction.

The fire, which is supposed to have been of incendiary origin, started in Lyman Babcock's woods, about a mile from East Hampton, at 7 o'clock this morning, and by noon practically every man and many women and children hetween East Hampton and Amsganeett wae out fighting the fire. The church hells in both villages were ringing for two hours to call out volunteers, and at every lane and crossroad scores of people were engaged in back-firing until 5 o'clock this evening.

Five times the flames leaped across roads, and as many times were subdued. Rabbits and other small game were driven ahead of the flames. Engineer Eichorn of the Long Island Railroad had his clothing almost burned off in fighting the flames, hut he was not injured.

POLICEMAN STOPS RUNAWAY.

Catches Horse Just Before It Reaches Three Funeral Parties.

A horse atached to a light runahout and driven by William Zahn of 38 East Fourth Street, who was accompanied by Miss Elizabeth Kimmond of 538 East Thirteenth Street, ran away yesterday afternoon down East Thirty-fourth Street in the direction of the Thirty-fourth Street Ferry. At First Avenue the vehicle collided with a First Avenue car and one of the wheels was torn off. Thia threw Zahn and the woman to the street, and the horse dashed on.

Policeman Maurice Corr of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station, who saw the runaway, jumped for the reins, which he caught, and he held on until he brought the horse up with a sharp turn at a pile of lumber and stopped it. Three crowded funeral parties into which the horse might have dashed were just ahead of the runaway horse. A big crowd cheered the policeman's act.

Corr found that Zahn and Miss Kimmond suffering from shock and several hruises, hut neither was seriously hurt. Corr had his uniform torn and suffered a few contusions. He is a medal man in the department.

16-YEAR-OLD HANGS HIMSELF.

Lad Found Dead by His Little Brother —Was Addicted to Dime Novels.

The hody of Richard Greiner, 16 years old, a son of Otto Greiner of 287 Sanford Street, East Orange, N. J., was found hanging hy the neck in the cellar of his father's home on Saturday night. The discovery was made hy the hoy's eight-year-old hrother, George. Dr. Benjamin F. Voelhel of Vailshurg was called, and pronounced life extinct.

Deputy County Phsician Muta said there was no douht that the boy had committed suicide. The lad used a piece of clothesline and placed a strip of cloth hetween his neck and the noose. The rope was attached to a rafter in the cellar, and Richard had stepped off a packing box. The boy is said to have been a little sentimental, and also to have been addicted to the Nick Carter habit.

The dime novel stories worked on his imagination so that his father recently took them away from him, and the boy later traded the yellow-covered books for a United States history. He read in this an account of the hanging of John Brown, and the story made a deep impression on him, and may have prompted him to take his life.

WATTERSON ELECTS HUGHES IN 1908

Back from Europe, He Says He Has Wagered the Governor Will Be President.

SECOND TILDEN, HE AVERS

Slaps at Bryan, Who Will Run Next Year, He Thinks—Roosevelt Couldn't Win.

Henry Watterson and his wife returned yesterday on the Hamhurg-American liner Amerika after a Winter spent in Spain, Italy, and on the Riviera. Col. Watterson looked in the best of health as he came down the liner's gangplank, and he declared that he had had the best of good times while on the other side of the Atlantic.

He discussed Presidential candidates at some length and declared that Bryan was the only alternative for the Democratic party in 1908, and that there was good Presidential timher in Gov. Hughes for the Republicans.

"I am taking President Roosevelt at his word," said Col. Watterson. "If I remember rightly he said to a group of journalists that he would not accept another nomination, and that if the convention met and nominated him it would have to reconvene. I say that I don't think Roosevelt wants the nomination, hut if he did take it he could not win. By his action he would lose three New England States.

"The proposition to keep one man in the White House for life, or even for three terms, would Mexicanize this country just as sure as would 16 to 1. Roosevelt might dodge the nomination in 1908 to take it in 1912, hut thst is looking too far ahead. You might as well try to etate what will hsppen one hundred years from now as to predict what will happen in politics in this country within the next eight years."

From Roosevelt and Bryan the Colonel turned to a discussion of Gov. Hughes. He declared that Hughes was a force to be reckoned with in Republican politics.

"I predicted last June," he said, "that Hughes would succeed Roosevelt in the White House. At that time Horace White, Mr. Hughes, and I were at Brown University, where the degree of LL. D. was conferred on each, and I told Hughes thst while some Repuhlicans might not like him, they would have to select him. I believe Hughes will be to the Republican Party what Tilden was to the Democratic. I have in my pocket a ticket in the Paris mutuals calling for 100 to 1 that Hughes will be the next President of the United States."

Col. Watterson was asked what he knew about "the rich man's conspiracy." He smiled and replied that he knew nothing about a conspiracy of rich men, but there was plain evidence that the lines were being closely drawn between the President and the field. To another question as to whether he had heard the report that Assistant Postmaster General Hitchcock was in the South looking after disloyal office holders, Col. Watterson replied that he had not heard of the report.

A Shot at Fairbanks.

"I suppose it goes without the saying that the Vice President is not in the field for fun. He means husiness, and what is more, he has plenty of money with which to pay the freight. There is plenty of freight loose in the South."

From Fairbanks the Colonel switched to Taft. He said that in his opinion a defeat for Taft in the Ohio primaries would not mean the withdrawal of Taft from the race. He pointed out that in 1892 Cleveland had been nominated after the New York delegation had refused to stand for him.

He continued: "Roosevelt may be playing practical politics in this State to obtain the New York delegation for Taft. Roosevelt knows how to play the game, and play it well. He has been playing practical politics for some time. He certainly seems to have played Mr. Harriman most effectively."

"What do you think of Mr. Bryan's declaration for the initiative and referendum?" he was asked.

"I am not surprised," he said, "for Mr. Bryan is fond of political speculations, and I am not surprised at any novelty he may trot out. Then you must remember that Mr. Bryan is a public speaker, and a public speaker must be both attractive and entertaining."

"Will Mr. Bryan drive from the party all who will not follow him?" was another question asked.

"He may. He is a pretty good driver. He has driven thousands from the party already. As a result, we have lost some States and much in the House. In spite of this, I say that Bryan is the only alternative of the Democratic Party in 1908."

Col. Watterson also said that Hearst was liable to do anything, hut that he could not be considered a Presidential possibility.

BROKER GOODMAN HELD.

Arrested for Swindling Southerners by "Get-Rich-Quick" Scheme.

Charged with grand larceny, Alfred C. Goodman, a hroker, and Edgar M. Martin, a clerk, were locked up in police headquarters last night after having heen arrested at the Hotel Regent, Sherman Square and Seventieth Street. Lieut. McConville, who arrested the men, says they were operating a "get-rich-quick" scheme. Those swindled, he said, were mostly Southern men. A firm of the name of Clark, Goodman & Co., hrokers, did have an office at 20 Broad Street up to March 12.

The police say that the arrest was made on the specific complaint of H. J. Boswell, a lawyer of Greenhorough, Ga. The lawyer wrote a letter some time ago telling the police here that several people in his town had sent money to Clark, Goodman & Co., 20 Broad Street, for which they had received no return. Clark, Goodman & Co. purported to deal in "cotton, stock, and grain."

Lieut. McConville said last night that he had found in the room of the prisoners a note addressed to Goodman and signed "M." It advised Goodman, says McConville, to take what money he could get hold of and go to the race track and win more.

Bosschieter Convict Seeks Pardon.

PATERSON, N. J., April 21.—Andrew J. Campbell, one of those convicted for the murder of Jennie Bosschieter, for which he was sentenced for thirty years, will soon apply for a pardon. His brother, Thomas A. Campbell, has written letters to a large number of persons in Paterson asking for support, and saying that his family will make every conecientious effort to prove his brother's good character before the Court of Pardons, and to remove the stain and punishment "that in truth should not have been inflicted upon him and us."

DEATH ENDS WEDDING PLANS.

Elaine Hamilton Lawson, a Prospective Bride, Dies of Appendicitis.

In the midst of preparations for her wedding, Elaine Hamilton Lawson, a stepdaughter of P. T. Wall, of 162 West Fifty-eighth Street, was stricken with appendicitis. She died on Saturday. Funeral services will he held at her home this afternoon.

Miss Lawson, who was a direct descendant of Alexander Hamilton, was 22 years old, and was to be a June hride. The wedding was set for June 19, when she was to have married Arthur Emmons of Emmons Brothers, hat manufacturers, of Boston and New York. The young couple were to reside at Haverhill, Mass.

Several days ago Miss Lawson was taken ill. At her bedside when she died was Mr. Emmons, who was heartbroken.

HITCH IN POULSEN PLAN.

First Attempt to Relieve Bridge Crush Ties Up Trains Three Hours.

Before a number of city officiels, including Controller Herman A. Metz, President McGowan of the Alderman, Bridge Commissioner Stevenson, and Dow S. Smith of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, the Neils Poulsen plan for the relief of the congestion at the Brooklyn Bridge was attempted at Coney Island yesterday morning.

The plan had heen to use twenty six-car trains and dispatch them under thirty seconds headway. For some reason or other the motormen of the four traine that were to leave the terminal under the thirty seconds' headway, instead of proceeding apart, all started their trains at the same time. The result was that the wires overhead hecame heated and melted until the hot metal fell on the trains, causing a stampede of all hands. This tied up the division for three hours.

A hurried retreat to nearby resorts was the result and the trying out of the Poulsen plan will have to be postponed until a later date.

FLIER SAVED FROM WRECK.

Rail Sawed or Broken Near Cleveland —Discovered Just in Time.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, April 21.—An apparent attempt to wreck the Pennsylvania Flier, due here from Pittsburg at 6:15, was made in broad daylight this afternoon. A two-foot section was sawed or broken out of a rail just this side of the tower at Bedford.

The night track walker, in making his first rounds, saw the damage, and rushed to the tower, about one-half mile distant, to report it. Orders were sent out by which the flier was brought into the city over the other track, and a repair gang replaced the rail.

Supt. Hamilton of the Cleveland Division said he believed no wreckers had been at work, and that the rail was merely broken.

FREIGHT WRECK ON CENTRAL.

Fireman Badly Injured Near Ossining and Six Cars Set Afire.

OSSINING, N. Y., April 21.—A milk train, southhound, crashed into the rearend of a freight train at Craw Bucky, a mile above the Ossining Station, on the New York Central, at 9:30 o'clock tonight and plowed through the caboose of the freight train. Ten cars of the freight and six of the milk train were derailed. The cars took fire and were consumed.

The engine of the milk train was completely wrecked, and William Cohn of Mount Vernon, fireman, was severely injured. The engineer crawled out of the wreck unhurt except for bruises.

The wreck hlocked traffio for several hours.

HAS HIS BROTHER ARRESTED.

Catches Him in Street and Turns Him Over to Police as a Thief.

People near 125th Street and Third Avenue last night watched with interest as a young man approached another and threw his arms about him.

"You thief, I arrest you!" he shouted.

The other man partially hroke loose from the arms that had grasped him.

"This man is my hrother, and he has stolen my clothes. Help me take him to the station!" the first young man shouted to the crowd.

None interfered until Policeman Brennan of the East 104th Street Station, appearing, took hoth to the station.

There the complainant said he was Charlea Marks of 1,826 Lexington Avenue, a postal clerk. His hrother, Milton, he said, cleaned out his room of $300 worth of personal property some time ago. Since then he had spent his spare time looking for his hrother.

Milton, who gave no address, but in whose pocket was a card which described him as an expert machinist, was locked up.

BANK CLERK SKIPS WITH $50,000 LOOT

But the Whole Staff Turns Out to Watch Railroads and Gets Him.

ROBS TRUST CO. OF AMERICA

Loan Clerk Douglas Found in a Hotel Under a False Name—Traced Through Wife.

W. O. Douglss, the trusted assistant loan clerk of the Trust Company of America since its amalgamation with the North American and City Trust companies two years ago, disappeared from his office on Saturday morning. The examination of his accounts that followed showed that $50,000 worth of negotiahle Rock Island bonds were missing.

Early yesterday morning the missing clerk was discovered in the Hotel Portland, st 132 West Forty-seventh Street, where another man had registered him and his wife under assumed names. He was promptly arrested and locked up in the West Forty-seventh Street Police Station, charged with grand larceny, preferred hy Oakleigh Thorne, President of the Trust Company of America.

That Douglas was arrested and locked up so soon after it was discovered that he had misappropriated the Rock Island bonds was due neither to the police nor to the Pinkerton Detective Agency, but to the bank officials and clerks themselves, who, under the leadership of Mr. Thorne, organized themselvee into an emergency detective force and forthwith got on the trail of the fugitive. There was a bank official or a trusted employe stationed at every railroad station and ferry in New York, Jersey City, Hoboken, and Weehawken, the man in charge of the watchers at tho Grand Central being Mr. Thorne himself. It was the Grand Central squad that finally caught Douglas.

Mr. Thorne's Story of the Capture.

Yesterday afternoon Mr. Thorne told the story of the organization of the Trust Company of America's detective bureau.

"Douglas," said Mr. Thorne, "is the first of our boys to go wrong, and you cannot imagine how sincerely I regret his misfortune. He had been with us since the amalgamation, and we had every reason to trust him, and that his failure to live up to his trust was discovered is due entirely to the intuition of A. M. Ostrom, the loan clerk, to whom Mr. Douglas was assistant. Here is the whole story of the unfortunate affair:

"It was about ten minutes to 8 o'clock Saturday morning when Douglas arrived at the bank and took his accustomed place behind his desk in the loan cage. He apparently did his work in the usual way, and there was not the slightest cause for suspicion until at 10:40 o'clock in the morning Douglas surprised Mr. Ostrom hy suddenly announcing that he was going to lunch. It was such an unusual hour for him to eat lunch that Mr. Ostrom could not help hut note the fact, and asked him why he was in such a hurry.

"Douglas gave some plausible excuse, and Mr. Ostrom pleasantly requested him to hurry hack. In three-quarters of an hour, when Douglas failed to appear, Mr. Ostrom thought the incident so unusual that he left the cage and went into the office of Col. Heman Dowd, our Vice President, and told him about the incident. Col. Dowd did not share Mr. Ostrom's suspicions, and told him not to worry, as 'all will turn out right.'

"Mr. Ostrom followed Col. Dowd's advice, but he could not get the incident off his mind, and when, ten minutes later, Douglas was still missing, he returned to Col. Dowd's office and told him that he was sure something was wrong, and suggested that Douglas's books be gone over. Col. Dowd then took the same view as Ostrom, and the clerks were called in for the purpose of checking up the securities. In a little while it was discovered that $50,000 worth of Rock Island 5 per cent. bonds, which we held as collateral for a loan, were missing, the bonds being 'collateral trust bonds of 1913.'

"As soon as the discovery that the honds were missing was made I was notified, and at my suggestion the Pinkerton Detective Agency was notified and asked to watch Douglas's home at 180 Elton Avenue, Brooklyn. Then I ordered all the securities checked up, the result heing that despite the statement Douglas is reported to have made to the police that he got away with securities valued at $250,000, in fact only the $50,000 Rock Island bonds referred to were taken. These were the only bonds to which he had access.

The Douglas Home Watched.

"We soon learned from the Pinkertons that Douglas had not gone to his home in Brooklyn and also that his wife had left the house over there about 1 o'clock in the afternoon. I realized that no matter how perfect the description we might give of Douglas he was unknown to the police and the Pinkertons, and that despite the greatest watchfulness on their part it would not be an impossible task for him to get through any dragnet that they might establish for the purpose of capturing him. This is where we decided to do detective work ourselves.

"Most of our men knew Mrs. Douglas as well as her husband. Twenty-eight men were assigned to watch the ferries and railway stations to see that Douglas did not get out of the city. I, myself, was one of the Grand Central watchers and was on duty alone there when the 7:02 o'clock train, which is the Montreal Express, left. Douglas was not on that train nor any of the others that left in the houre that followed up to midnight.

"At midnight, when the last of the trains that Douglas would have been likely to take had gone, I left the station and went to a cable office near by to send a cablegram. On my way to the cable office I saw several of my men, including W. F. Black, our auditor, and Mr. Ostrom, entering the Subway. As the last Grand Central train had gone, I told them that we would go home, and resume the search early in the morning.

"Black, Ostrom, and the other men then went into the station and were just about to board a southbound train when one of them saw Mrs. Douglas and a man, not her husband, leave the train. Their orders were to catch the husband, if possible, and, failing in that, not to lose sight of the wife. They followed Mrs. Douglas and the stranger into the street and saw them enter a cab that was waiting for them in Forty-second Street, near Madison Avenue. The cab drove away immediately, and Ostrom and Black jumped into another and told the driver to follow it, no matter where the journey ended.

"The Douglas cab turned north at Sixth Avenue and Forty-second Street and continued uptown to Forty-seventh Street, where it turned west. It stopped a few doors down, and as soon as the occupants got out and entered, my men followed, but made the mistake of entering the hotel next to the Portland, which is the St. Francis. When they were satisfied that the Douglas party had not entered that place, they went next door and found on the register the freshly written names of 'Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Gray, Boston,' who had been assigned to Room 9, and who, according to the register, had entered the hotel at 12:50 A. M., the exact time that the Douglas party had left their cab.

"In the meantime I had been notified, and when I arrived I looked over the register, and guessed that Mr. and Mrs. Gray were Mr. and Mrs. Douglas. We had taken the precaution to call in the policeman who was on duty outside and, backed by him, I demanded that we be allowed to go to Room 9. The woman who runs the hotel at first refused to allow this request, and it was not until the appearance of Detective Quinn of the West Forty-seventh Street Station that she gave in.

"When I knocked on the door a voice that I recognized as Douglas's asked, 'Who's there?' When I told him, he opened the door.

"'Heavens!' he said; 'has it come to this? Can't it be stopped?'

"'Douglas,' I answered, 'where are those bonds?'

"'I have not got them,' he answered, 'and I can't tell you.'

"'Douglas,' I repeated, 'where are those bonds?'

"Then the poor fellow broke down and told. He said that a broker had them, and that he had expected to get them back in the bank on Monday. He had taken the bonds, he said, to put up as collateral security for a stock loan.

Broker's Name Known.

"I know the name of the broker who has the bonds and I expect to get them all back to-morrow morning. As far as I know, the broker may be perfectly honest, and until the reverse is proved I won't say a word about his share in the transaction. The broker lives in New Jersey, but is in New York to-day, and if he is not on the square he could not get away if he wanted to. I never, personally, had any dealings with the broker, and as for the police story that he may have been the stranger who left the subway with Mrs. Douglas, I know nothing at all about it. Neither I nor the other officials of the bank who were engaged in the search know who that person was.

"As for Douglas, personally, his reputation has always been of the best, and he was well and favorably known to all of us. Several of the other men in the company belonged to the same Brooklyn organization as he and Mrs. Douglas did, and that was why most of them knew Mrs. Douglas. Had not this been true, the man would probably still be free. The fact that we are now making an examination of our books and securities preliminary to our amalgamation with the Colonial Trust Company, of course, made the detection of the Douglas wrongdoing much ellmpler."

It was late Saturday night, the police of the West Forty-seventh Street Police Station said, when they were told of the theft of the Rock Island bonds. Word of the affair came over the telephone presumably from Mr. Thorne. Detective Michael Quinn was assigned to the case and proceeded at once to the Portland, where he found Mr. Thorne, Patrolman Nelson, and Messrs. Black and Ostrom waiting.

Quinn informed Mrs. Fritz, the proprietor of the Portland, that he desired to go to the Gray apartment, and Mrs. Fritz, the police say, just as promptly told Quinn that she would not permit her guests to be disturbed. Then Quinn informed her that unless she consented it might be necessary to break in the door, whereupon Mrs. Fritz gave in and the policemen and bank officers were taken up to Douglas's rooms and the arrest followed.

While the bankers and policemen were in the apartment Douglas went into an adjoining room and had a talk with Mr. Thorne, in the course of which he begged that he be given until to-day to make good, which request Mr. Thorne naturally refused to grant.

"Put me in jail," Douglas said, "and I'll serve my time, and when I get out the bonds will have been converted into money, and I can use it as I see fit."

Mrs. Douglas wept bitterly when she realized the plight that her husband was in, and begged him over and again to tell her why he had done such a thing. Douglas did not answer her questions.

Douglas's Story to the Police.

Two hours later in the station house Douglas talked of his troubles to the police. Wall Street and the race tracks, he said, got him into trouble.

"You talk about raiding poolrooms and places like that," he said, "but you are after the wrong crowd. You ought to raid Wall Street, for a fellow, when they get him down there, hasn't a chance in the world of ever getting out with as much as his skin left."

Then it was that the prisoner volunteered the information that he had taken $250,000 instead of $50,000, as the trust company asserts. He said it all went in speculation and horse racing. He would not go into the details of the theft.

As for the broker, who is said to have handled the bonds for Douglas, the prisoner refused absolutely to tell his name. The broker, the police said, was being shadowed yesterday, principally as a matter of precaution. His name they refused to give out. He was well known along that section of Broadway that is known as the "Great White Way," they said. Beyond this they would not talk of him.

Douglas was in the West Side Court before Magistrate Finellte yesterday morning. He was remanded back to the West Forty-seventh Street station, without bail, for a hearing this morning. After the arraignment Douglas was taken to police headquarters, where he was photographed and his measurements taken. His lawyer is Robertson Honey of 35 Nassau Street. Mr. Honey had nothing to say in behalf of his client yesterday.

Mr. Honey called on Mr. Thorne at his home, 290 Madison Avenue, yesterday afternoon. After Mr. Honey had gone Mr. Thorne said that the Douglas case was now in the hands of District Attorney Jerome.

William O. Douglas lives on the second floor of a modest two-story frame house at 180 Elton Street, East New York. His father was a well-known physician who died many years ago. His mother then married Frank Mosley, a jeweler. William Douglas married Janette Lewis, the daughter of James Lewis, who for twenty-five years ran a large dry goods store in Atlantic Avenue, near Pennsylvania Avenue, in the East New York section. Mr. Lewis, who retired after having made a fortune, lives at 121 Pennsylvania Avenue. His home, which is surrounded by spacious grounds, is one of the finest in the neighborhood.

The family that occupies the first floor of the Elton Street house moved in only a week ago, and know little about Douglas and his wife. They said the couple left the house early Saturday morning. Mrs. Douglas had not returned there last night, nor had she shown up at her father's home.

Mr. Lewis, who is an invalid and was greatly upset by the news of his son-in-law's arrest, said he knew nothing about Douglas's business. He said he felt convinced that there must be a mistake somewhere, and that everything would be all right in the end.

The accused bond clerk was prominent a number of years ago in amateur theatricals in East New York. He also belonged to several social organizations and lodges. He has been a member of Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church, Arlington and Schenck Avenues.

Yesterday morning two detectives from Manhattan and an official of the trust company where Douglas worked called at his home and made an inspection of his rooms. They left without saying whether they had found anything of importance.

CARNEGIE HERO ARRESTED.

Entered Burning Building to Save Life and Was Locked Up.

A disposition that had won Michael O'Brien of 4935 Third Avenue a Carnegie medal for an act performed three years ago got the possessor of this distinction into trouble early yesterday morning and eventually resulted in his arrest and confinement in the East 126th Street Station. O'Brien, who is a plasterer, in May, 1904, climbed up the front of a burning tenement house and rescued a woman and two children from the top floor. For this he received a Carnegie medal last March.

So this morning, when he was passing the three-story building in Third Avenue, near 125th Street, and saw that there was a smoldering fire on the top floor, he looked at it with more than ordinary interest. On the second floor is the candy store of T. Tiebeman. In the crowd that gathered before any one had sent in an alarm was a man, who shouted:

"'Tiebeman's family is on the top floor."

O'Brien pushed his way through the crowd.

"'Here, boost me up," he said to the speaker.

"'How is it your butt in?" the man asked.

O'Brien took his medal from his pocket and waved it.

"'I've got a Carnegie medal. I'm an old hand at this business," he returned.

The other bent and allowed O'Brien to stand on his back. The building is low, so this elevation enabled O'Brien to reach with his hands a cornice below the second story windows. While the whistles of approaching fire engines were sounding in the distance O'Brien got to his feet directly beneath the windows. As an engine swung around the corner he had burst the window, lacerating his hand in so doing.

Batallion Chief O'Connor arrived with the engines. Soon the firemen were swarming into the building. After a short interval there was a call for a policeman. Steiger of the East 126th Street Station went in and returned with O'Brien, whom he took to the station, where he made a charge against him of being a suspicious person. O'Brien indignantly pulled a bundle of newspaper clippings from his pocket and his medal.

"'I'm a Carnegie man,' said he, 'here is my picture in all of the papers. You can see who I am. There was nobody about when the fire broke out, and so I went in.'"

Lieut. Lake questioned Steiger, who made the arrest. The policeman said that Chief O'Connor had asked that a policeman remove a stranger from the building. He had taken O'Brien to the ground, where he saw Capt. Buchanan of the East 126th Street station.

"'Lock him up. He's a suspicious person,' he says Capt. Buchanan told him.

So O'Brien was led to a cell.

Afterward Battalion Chief O'Connor appeared at the station house, saying that he had not ordered O'Brien's arrest, but had merely requested that he be removed from the building. After O'Brien had been locked up, the firemen discovered that the fire, started in some cardboard boxes on the top floor, amounted to nothing.

P. J. KENNEDY DEAD; BODY FOUND IN BAY

Theatrical Manager Disappeared Last December After "Mizpah's" Failure.

GAVE SUICIDE WARNING

His Wife Didn't Believe He Had Killed Himself, but Identified Body Yesterday.

The body of Peter J. Kennedy, the well-known theatrical manager, was discovered yesterday floating in Gowanus Bay, near the foot of Van Brunt Street, Brooklyn. This clears up his disappearance on Dec. 27 last.

Although Kennedy sent a note to his wife, which reached her on the morning of Dec. 28, stating that she would find the evidence that he had committed suicide on a Thirty-ninth Street ferryboat, and this evidence was subsequently found in the form of his hat and fur-lined overcoat, much doubt has been cast on the probability that he had drowned himself. Since the day of his disappearance all sorts of rumors have been current, especially among theatrical people. He was at various times reported to have been seen in Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, and other places. As late as yesterday morning some one asserted that Kennedy had been seen walking about the streets of Brooklyn.

The body was seen floating in Gowanus Bay yesterday afternoon by two boatmen. A steamboat had passed them a minute before, and the swell of it had evidently forced the body to the top of the water. The boatmen hauled the body ashore. They found Policeman Flanigan of the Hamilton Avenue Station, and the body was taken to the station. Some papers were found in the waistcoat, and also a Masonic identification card with the name of P. J. Kennedy upon it. Because of the numerous articles which have appeared in the papers about Kennedy and his disappearance the police were satisfied it was his body they had.

Late in the afternoon Mrs. Kennedy, who was visiting friends at Bath Beach, was located and she was asked to go to the police station. She went there with Dr. John Voorhees of Bath Beach and promptly identified the body as that of her husband. It was then removed at her request to an undertaker's establishment in Brooklyn. Aside from the other clear evidences of identification its condition showed to Dr. Voorhees that it had been in the water about the length of time Kennedy has been missing.

Kennedy's state of mind which prompted him to take his life was brought about through the failure of "Mizpah," a play which he himself staged at the Academy of Music. It ran from Sept. 24 to Oct. 20 of last year, and was a dismal failure. Kennedy had staked his all on the play, and had lost.

At the time of his disappearance Kennedy had an office in the Broadway Theatre Building. He left there on the afternoon of Dec. 27. Since his disappearance it has often been stated that his mind never had been the same after his play at the Academy closed its run.

Kennedy was 45 years old. He lived with his wife and son at the Bennington Apartments, 144 East Twenty-seventh Street, Manhattan. He had been a theatrical manager for about twelve years. His first theatrical work was done as the manager for John L. Sullivan, the pugilist. He afterward was a manager for Sam Thall, taking the play "Yon Yonson" over the road. Besides these he was manager for many other plays, exclusive of the fatal "Mizpah."

Since Kennedy's disappearance Mrs. Kennedy, with her son, has been living with her parents at 153 Bay Thirty-third Street, Bath Beach. Mrs. Kennedy was herself an actress, known on the stage as Beatrice Norman. She was born in the West. Kennedy met her while he was managing the play "The Railroad Ticket," in which she had a part, about ten years ago. She had all along clung to the belief that Kennedy would some day turn up alive.

you reconcile your business methods with God? A ministry which does not force these questions home is sawdust and chaff."

The man who sat back of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., put on his horn-rimmed eyeglasses and looked at the tops of the hats of the women in the choir.

The sermon was in a way a notice of what Dr. Aked will try to do in New York. He said:

"To-day I enter upon my ministry to your great church, and, if it be the will of God, upon a larger ministry in the city and in the Nation. Henceforth I occupy as pastor—your servant for Christ's sake—a pulpit consecrated by the genius of Dr. Armitage and the lofty devotion of those who are still leaders of the Church on earth. I have come in the honest belief that the best work of my life is to be done in your land. I have come believing that I can serve our Lord best by joining you in the effort to get God's will done here, in the broad fields of your National life, even as it is done in heaven.

The Danger of the Aliens.

"I have come in the hope of discharging a ministry of reconciliation. To this ministry no limits can be set. There is one precise and specific application of it to which no American who loves his country, no man or woman between the Atlantic and the Pacific who cares for his country's flag and his country's honor, her fame and her future, can afford to be indifferent.

"The most thoughtless onlooker from the Old World who has ever read a page of history knows that, in the rush to your shores of millions upon millions of the European peoples, you are confronted by a problem such as no nation has ever yet had to solve since history began. I read the figures which set this problem visibly before the eyes of men, and I am lost in amazement.

"This is an ethnic question, a race question. It is a question as to the kind of people the American people is to become. It is a question whether the primal American stock is to be vitiated by the inter-permeation of an inferior race. It is something still nearer; it is a National question, a question of political equilibrium, of the stability of social order and the sovereignty of law. For you know from what starts of society in the European countries the mass of these immigrants is now being drawn.

Solution in Christianity.

"And as the more restless and enterprising among them spread over the country, you know how, delivered from the despotisms of the old lands, they are ready to abuse the liberty of this, or, on the other hand, fall a ready prey to shameless spirits who would make their traffic out of their country's loss.

"And to this you will agree, that the man who for selfish ends would set flame to the ingratitudes, discontent, and envy, to the slumbering anarchic passions of these undeveloped souls, would be a traitor to the Republic and an enemy of the human race.

"The deepest truth of all is this, that the best Christian citizen is the best citizen, and that the surest way, the quickest way, the most economical and the most permanent way of making these people good Americans and good patriots is to make them good Christians."

ROCKEFELLER, JR., TALKS.

Discourses to His Bible Class on Daniel's Courage.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., had some 150 men, young and old, at his Bible class in the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church yesterday morning, and talked to them about the duty of always adhering to principle, no matter what others may say or do or think. As a basis for his talk he took the incident of the prophet Daniel, refusing while in captivity, with his people at Babylon, to eat the forbidden meats of the Babylonians, and in consequence prospering physically better than those who had eaten of the viands.

"What is the lesson here?" asked the young leader of the Bible class, looking at his watch. "The lesson is that Daniel stood out for principle against hard pressure, and that we should also do the same, being sure that the reward for it will come. Daniel might have said to himself: 'Oh, you are far away from home, and few of your people will ever know about your doing as the King bids. Those few are here with you, and most of them are doing the same thing. They will never tell.'

"How often, when far away from home, have we ourselves yielded to temptations to do things which we wouldn't think of doing if we were at home. We think that no one will ever know about it but ourselves. But do not forget, my friends, that God always knows. His eye is everywhere.

"Again, Daniel might have said to himself: 'Oh, what does this little thing amount to? This eating of what the King asks, even though it be sacrilegeous to do so? Maybe by yielding this small point I may put myself higher in the favor of the King and thus be able to help my people in some large matter.'

"How often have we argued in that way to ourselves that we might sooth our consciences as we yielded to temptation. But Daniel, waiving all considerations except principle, stood out against the smallest thing that was against that principle. So should we always. Principle first, come what may.

"And then Daniel might have feared that he would be different from the others, and would be held up to ridicule. Why are we so afraid to be different, so afraid that some one will call us peculiar? We all try to put on the same kind of clothes. When a certain time of the year comes we put on straw hats, regardless of what the weather may be. We are always fearful of what other people will say. Great men are not that way.

"I once attended a garden party in London at which was Lord Salisbury. Everybody, of course, went in the most correct evening costume except Lord Salisbury. He was there in a square-topped derby and a cut-away coat, and was splendid in it. What did Abraham Lincoln care what other people thought? He did what he wanted to—what he thought best. And so if we follow principle, like Daniel, even in small things, we can thus make a start towards greatness."

In his opening prayer young Mr. Rockefeller thanked God for the blessed sunshine, which he said poured its rich blessings upon all. Next Sunday his associate, Mr. Richardson, is to draw more lessons from the life of Daniel.

TICKET SPECULATORS' WAR.

Independents Begin Fight on Favored Ones and Hire a Lawyer.

The ticket speculators of New York are at war among themselves. Yesterday the "independent" speculators got together and came to the conclusion that they were downtrodden, and must do something to defend themselves from the "house speculators." The "house speculatore" are a certain favored few who are alleged to have made arrangements with the managers and owners of certain theatres for the exclusive privilege of handling their tickets on the sidewalk.

These so-called "house speculators," it is alleged, share profits with the theatrical managers controlling theatres and opera houses. In front of the theatres where the house speculators operate the independent speculator is forced to buy his seats, not from the box office, but from the house speculator, at prices which increase his hazards and minimize his profits.

George Betts, who says that he is an independent speculator, says that tickets for a large portion of the houses are controlled by about five or six men. He says that there are in all about 112 speculators in the business, and that about thirty-five of these are either "house speculators" or men allied with them. He says that the independents would engage as their lawyer Norbert Blank of 33 Park Row.

The independent speculators have called a meeting at the corner of Broadway and Sixty-third Street this morning. They propose to have eight men parade the city streets with signs. The first sign will notify the public that "all choice seats are sold to house speculators." On each of the other signs will be the name of a theatre.

INFERNAL MACHINE FOR LAWYER BLAU

Box of Black Powder and Matches Sent to Julius Mayer's Former Deputy.

MEANT AS A JOKE, HE THINKS

Inclosure Said: "For Him Who Sent Us to Prison"—Mr. Blau's Parents Alarmed.

Lawyer William Blau, who was a Deputy Attorney General of this State under Attorney General Julius Mayer, had an "infernal machine" sent to him yesterday at his home, 325 East Fourth Street, and the entire East Side for a while was in a ferment over the incident. The machine is supposed to have been sent to Mr. Blau by some person with a crose-eyed sense of humor, who thought that it would be funny to scare the wits out of Mr. Blau. It failed in this, but Mr. Blau's aged father and mother were very much alarmed. Detectives from Police Headquarters are looking for the supposed funny man.

The infernal machine consisted of a cigar box filled with a black powder, several small cartridges, and some iron or lead tubes. Beside these were laid two or three matches, and in the tubes more matches. They were so placed that they might or might not have ignited when withdrawn. Accompanying the outfit was a card on which a black hand had been crudely drawn, the index finger of which pointed to this message:

"As a token of esteem for him who sent us to prison."

While acting as Assistant to Attorney General Mayer, Mr. Blau had but little to do with the prosecution of men charged with crimes against the election laws, and he understood immediately that he was the subject of a practical joke. But both his father and mother believed that the machine was real and had it immersed in the bath tub. They then sent to Police Headquarters and Detectives Dondero and Micelli responded. They took it away for examination.

Mr. Blau talked with a TIMES reporter later at the convention of the Free Sons of Judah, in Beethoven Hall. He declared that he did not know who the joker could be. The package was delivered by a young man to a servant about 2 o'clock. After he had opened it he looked for the messenger, but he could not be found.

Mr. Blau is now engaged as legal expert for the Building Code Revision Commission, is President of the Hungarian Republican Club, and a member of the Federal Republican Club. He is popular on the East Side, and at the last Presidential election was an elector on the Republican ticket.

LITTLE HOPE FOR GIMBEL.

Stimulants Were Used to Prevent Him from Collapsing Yesterday.

The chances of the recovery of Benedict Gimbel of Philadelphia from his serious injuries were said at St. Mary's Hospital, Hoboken, last night to have perceptibly diminished. Mr. Gimbel has lost so much blood and was so much weakened that it is hardly believed now that he can survive.

Stimulants were used yesterday to keep him from collapsing. One of his physicians was quoted last night as saying that there was not "one chance in a thousand" of his surviving.

Early this morning it was said, however, by the Sister of Charity in charge of the hospital that Mr. Gimbel was in no immediate danger, though his ultimate recovery was, of course, in doubt.

CONEY ISLAND AWAKE.

Big Crowd There Yesterday, but It Was Still Cold by the Sea.

It wasn't exactly an Independence Day crowd that visited Coney Island yesterday, but the hundred or more thousands that ventured out were not disappointed.

Every concert hall on the Bowery was running full blast. Japanese roller ball games, shooting galleries, chop suey restaurants, scenic railways, were at their best. And even the insinuating barker, who stays under cover in Winter, managed to extract a few nickels from some of the younger set.

Acting Inspector Patrick J. Harkins was much in evidence, and if he did allow the lid off just a little bit he didn't allow any liberties to questionable amusements.

Usually at this time the bathing houses begin business, but on account of the unusually cold Spring there have been no applicants for bathing suits.

ROOSEVELT LEADS IN POLL.

Michigan Republican Committeemen Favor Him—Democrats Want Bryan.

DETROIT, April 21.—The Free Press to-day printed statements from twenty-eight Republican and Democratic State Committeemen, replying to inquiries regarding the next Presidential nominees, the probable predominant issues of the campaign, and the preferable city for holding the National Convention.

As to candidatee, most of the Republicans confined themselves to President Roosevelt. One committeeman mentioned Secretary Taft as first choice and one mentioned him as second choice after President Roosevelt. One committeeman said, "Roosevelt or Hughes."

Of the Democratic committeemen, all named Col. Bryan as first choice for the nomination, except Dr. D. L. Treat of Adrain, who said: "Give us a Democrat—Folk, Bryan, or one of the Tillman kind." George P. Hummer of Grand Rapids mentioned Mayor Johnson of Cleveland as second choice.

Manufacturing Openings In the Middle West.

The manufacturing trend is westward. The actual capital invested in manufacturing industries in the States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota and Missouri was 42% greater in 1905 than in 1900—

KILLED IN TUNNEL SHAFT.

"Sandhog" Crushed While Being Hoisted to Surface in a Bucket.

Joseph Quirk, a "sandhog" employed in the Hudson Tunnel Company's workings at Fulton and Church Streets, was crushed to death there last night while being hoisted to the surface with two other workmen in an iron bucket. The sandhogs in the various caissons were coming up for supper.

Quirk, Thomas Kirby of 106 West 137th Street and Charles Brennan of 2,782 Eighth Avenue were the last sandhogs left in Caisson No. 9 B when the big iron bucket was lowered for them to ascend.

It is a well-known rule of the O'Rourke Construction Company, which is doing the excavating work and building the foundations, that only two men are permitted to ascend at one time in a bucket, but Quirk, being in a hurry to get out, climbed in after the two other men and pulled the signal wire.

Quirk's head and part of his body were above the edge of the bucket as it swung up to the iron "deck" inclosing the tube. The side of the bucket struck the edge and Quirk's head came in contact with the deck, rendering him unconscious. His body then swayed over the edge of the bucket, while the engineer above made another effort to hoist up the big bucket.

After three attempts, through which Quirk's body was crushed, the other men pulled him down on top of them, and all were hoisted up into the lock above. Kirby and Brennan were white when they struggled over Quirk's remains, and got out on the working platform.

Patrick O'Neill, foreman, of 274 West 123d Street, was arrested and locked up, charged with homicide.

Quirk lived with his mother in Chatham Square and had been a sandhog for ten years.

DROWNED STUDENT BURIED.

Flag at Columbia Half-Masted for Sandler—More Details of Drowning.

The funeral of William Sandler, the Columbia University sophomore who was drowned in the Columbia swimming pool on Friday, was held yesterday at 12:30 o'clock from his late home, 76 Orchard Street. The Columbia Faculty were represented by Dean Goetze, Profs. Seligman and Davis, and H. L. Norris, Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds. President Butler was represented by F. P. Keppel, Secretary of the university.

The flag on the campus at Morningside Heights flew at half mast yesterday in respect to the memory of the student. This is the first time in the history of the university that such an honor has been shown for an undergraduate. In the chapel service yesterday afternoon the Prayer for the Afflicted was read by Canon Jones.

Further details of the drowning were made known yesterday afternoon by Dean Goetze. Principal among these was a denial of the statement that Guiteras and Howe, the two sophomores mentioned in yesterday's reports as having seen the last to see Sandler alive in the tank, had gone away and left him alone. Dean Goetze said that he had had a talk with Howe and that the latter said that there were from ten to twelve swimmers in the pool when they left after asking Sandler if he was all right. This would tend to substantiate the belief held by Dr. Meylan, head of the gymnasium department, and Coroner's Physician Lehaue, who examined the body as soon as it was found, that the swimmer had been seized with a sudden weakness and had sank without making any outcry.

Sandler was a quiet boy, who kept much to himself, and not many of the students knew him. With ten or twelve men splashing about it might easily be that no one should have missed him. Had he been a student who did not live at home his absence for several days might not have caused an investigation.

Asked as to the arrangements for safeguarding swimmers in the pool, Dean Goetze said: "There were three men employed to look after the pool, besides a swimming instructor. One of these men is supposed to be on duty all the time at the side of the tank. He may have stepped out for a moment, but the fact that, according to Howe's statement, there were ten or twelve men in the water at the time shows that lack of supervision could not at all have been responsible for the accident."

ANOTHER MATE FOR "POLLY."

New Orang Introduced to the Pet of the Bronx Zoo.

"Polly," the pet of the monkey house in the Bronx Zoological Gardens is to forget her former mate, the much lamented Dohong, and re-enter the social arena where she formerly reigned supreme. Such is the gossip that has gone the rounds of the cages for the last two days. The inmates of the primate's house were much pleased by the news.

The arrival of a little red-headed orang-outang from the wilds of Africa is responsible for all the talk. Keeper Reilly, the steward of the establishment, who is said to understand monkey talk as well as he does baby talk, confirmed the rumors yesterday that Polly is to have a new mate. The monkeys were introduced on Saturday. Polly was distant, while the stranger was extremely shy, and sought the topmost bar of the cage.

By the time the new orang is educated up to Polly's standard it is hoped that she will look with more favor upon him. Polly and Dohong frequently dined in public, using plates, knives, and forks as though it came natural to them, but since Dohong's death she has not performed. Keeper Reilly says that the visitor is young and quick to learn, and that before long he hopes to teach him good manners, the use of a knife and fork, and numerous other tricks for which Dohong was famous.

Just a month ago to-day there appeared at the Bronx Zoo three little European brown bear cubs. The keepers knew they were there because they could be heard, but the mother refused absolutely to allow the keepers to come near the den. Yesterday afternoon, when the sun was strongest and the crowd largest, she appeared at the mouth of the den carrying two of the cubs in her mouth.

She carefully deposited these on a ledge of rock, well back from the crowd, but full in the sun, and then returned to the den for the other, which she gently put beside the others. After a half hour in the warm sunlight, she picked them up again and took them back into the den. This was their first public appearance.

EX-SENATOR CLARK'S LOSS.

He Seeks Deeds Worth Several Hundred Thousand Dollars.

Special to The New York Times.

TRINIDAD, Col., April 21.—Coal land deeds and conveyences of water rights valued at several hundred thousand dollars were lost by ex-Senator Clark of Montana, while on his recent visit here. It is supposed that he dropped the wallet containing the papers when he was thrown into the Las Animas River, by the upsetting of his carriage.

Mr. Clark's confidential agent here, W. A. Bretherton, has been actively searching for the wallet, and has had men traverse the river banks for fifty miles below the ford where the accident occurred, without success. To-day he advertised for it, offering $1,000 reward for the return of the papers in the wallet.

The water rights were purchased jointly by Senator Clark and C. F. Adams of Boston, and as they are not on record, their loss means that Trinidad will obtain ample water for the new $350,000 waterworks system, which will be worthless if Clark and Adams recover the conveyances before the city enforces its previous contract with the owners of the water rights.

"With Harvard, Vassar, Columbia and Amherst making daily use of Pianolas in connection with their musical courses, the reign of the piano-player may well be said to have arrived."
—New York Globe, March 30, 1907.

The THEMODIST is the great

Improvement in Piano-player construction that critics have been waiting for

EVEN the original appearance of the Pianola itself, ten years ago, did not create a greater enthusiasm than the marvellous "Themodist." It has taken over six months to catch up with advance orders for this new model of Pianola, and even now the supply is limited.

In bringing out the melody and subduing the accompaniment, the "Themodist" obliterates the last possible ground for criticism upon the Pianola and places the instrument upon a still higher artistic plane. The "Themodist" is

Exclusive With The PIANOLA

The reign of the Pianola is established more securely than ever by the production of this radical improvement. The "Themodist" accomplishes the seemingly impossible and further emphasizes the great difference between the Pianola and the host of other Piano-players.

You owe it to yourself to call at Aeolian Hall and hear the Themodist Pianola or Themodist Pianola Piano produce results that heretofore only the great virtuoso could accomplish on the piano's keyboard.

FEAR SHAKE-UP IN TREASURY.

Cortelyou's Inspection of Various Divisions Causes Uneasiness.

Customs officials and employés in the various divisions of the local Treasury service are fearful that the recent visit of Secretary Cortelyou will result in a "shake-up" of large proportions. Mr. Cortelyou spent three days in this city inspecting the offices of the Collector, Appraiser, Surveyor, and Naval Officer. He also visited the Sub-Treasury.

Some of the Republican district leaders who have held official positions in the service for many years are uneasy, owing to rumors that the new head of the Treasury Department wishes to have men in their places who will pay more attention to Government business, and less to politics.

Other officials have heard that their services, in the estimation of the Secretary, could be dispensed with, without embarrassment to the conduct of public business.

Employés in some of the divisions, who are holding down easy berths, have the fear that they may be sent from their present places to the docks, where the work would be much more arduous. Altogether a small panic reigns among the local Treasury workers.

Mr. Cortelyou has declined to discuss possible changes in the personnel of the force at this port.

Funeral of Ferdinand Greenbaum.

After elaborate funeral services at the family home, Ferdinand Greenbaum, President and Manager of the Naseau News Company, was buried in Woodlawn Cemetery yesterday afternoon. Thousands of friends, including representatives of the editorial and business departments of many newspapers, attended the funeral. The services were conducted by Rabbi Krauskopf, his assistant, Rabbi Veoto, and J. Ripon, and Masons of Franklin Lodge, No. 417, F. and A. M.; officers of Ayreh Free Sons of Israel of the United Brethren, and of the Greenbaum Benevolent Association participated. Timothy D. NOT MARVIN BOY, STANDISH DECIDES Romps a Long Time with Lad at Gloversville Before Being Certain.

SUSPECTS MAN AND WOMAN

Believes There Is an Organized Band of Kidnappers—Woman Takes the Boy Away.

Special to The New York Times.

GLOVERSVILLE, N. Y., April 21.—Myles Standish of New York, brother-in-law of Dr. Horace N. Marvin of Dover, Del., arrived in Gloversville this morning but failed to identify the boy held by the police of this city as Horace Marvin, Jr. He believes, however that the man and woman who brought him here could give some clue to the Marvin kidnappers.

Notwithstanding the suspicions of Mr. Standish and the police the woman was permitted to leave the city with the boy late to-day.

Mr. Standish spent two hours with the boy to-day, and it was only after he had made a most minute examination that he determined the lad was not his nephew The resemblance was so close, however, that Mr. Standish finally had to romp with the lad for a full half hour before reaching a conclusion.

Mr. Standish stated that while Horace Marvin's hair was the same color, it was several shades lighter than that of the boy here. Each had the scar over the right eye, a strong point of identification, but investigation showed that the scar on the boy here resulted from a burn. Horace Marvin had fine teeth, while this boy's were poor and irregular, and while this boy's face was elongated, young Marvin has a full round face. The Marvin boy was ticklish; this one was not. After the examination, Mr. Standish sent to Dr. Marvin this telegram:

"Dr. H. M. Marvin, Dover, Del.:

"Child held is not Horace. Suspicious circumstances surrounding his identity convince me these are the parties Murphy trailed. Murphy should be sent here to watch. They know much more than has been disclosed and are evidently members of organized band. Wire me here your conclusions.

"MYLES STANDISH."

The persons whom Detective Murphy trailed were a man, woman, and child who stopped over night at Mechanicsville about six weeks ago at a house conducted by persons named Barber. After their departure the Barbers remarked on the resemblance of the boy to the Marvin boy, and a letter was written to Dr. Marvin stating these suspicions.

Detective Murphy was sent to Mechanicsville, but he was unable to pick up the clue, and after working on the case for several weeks was finally called off by Dr. Marvin last Friday. Deputy Sheriff Hubbs, who worked with Murphy, was in Gloversville yesterday, and said there was little doubt that the man, Al H. Allen, and the woman and boy held here were the ones that were in Mechanicsville.

There is no doubt in the minds of the police that the boy in the custody of these people is not their son. He bears no resemblance to either, and evidently came from a higher place in life than they. They fail to identify themselves or the boy to the satisfaction of the police. There are many suspicious circumstances in the case, and the police, assisted by Deputy Sheriff Hubbs, are working hard to get something out of Allen before the arrival of an officer from Catskill to take him back to answer to the charge of jumping a board bill.

Allen and the woman tell conflicting stories. She says they spent a night in Mechanicsville, and he states they only stopped there one day.

Detective Murphy is expected to reach Gloversville soon, and he will make an effort to get at the bottom of the child's identity as well as that of the man and woman. Mr. Standish will remain in Gloversville until he hears from Dr. Marvin.

Mr. Standish states that several blackmailing letters have been received by Dr. Marvin, the majority of them from points in Northern New York. One recently came from Louisville, Ky., where Allen says he has been, although it is not known how recently.

At the request of President Roosevelt these letters have all been turned over to him for use by Secret Service men. Mr. Standish is convinced that there is some connection between the Gloversville case and the Marvin case.

BODY OF A BOY FOUND.

Pennsylvania Lad, Thought to Have Been Kidnapped, Wandered Away.

TAMAQUA, Pa., April 21.—The body of John Sobel, six years old, who disappeared from Hauto a week ago, and who was thought to have been kidnapped, was found to-day lying beside a mine breach on the Lansford Mountain. He had been dead at least four days.

It is believed that he wandered away and succumbed to hunger and exhaustion. It was at first reported that he had been enticed away by a man.

HEAVY FRUIT CROP DAMAGE.

Missouri Valley Growers Tell of Destruction of Many Varieties.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 21.—That 95 per cent. of the peach and apple crop was destroyed by recent cold weather is the opinion of the members of the Missouri Valley Horticultural Society, which met yesterday. The fruit growers who attended the meeting submitted branches from fruit trees. Cherries, plums, and pears are almost a total loss. There will be an 80 per cent. crop of berries. Only 15 per cent. of the grapes was destroyed.

OMAHA, Neb., April 21.—As a result of the unprecedentedly warm weather which prevailed during the greater part of the month of March and the freezing weather and heavy snowfall of the last few days, early fruits, such as peaches, plums, and cherries, in this region have been injured, but the general opinion among those who have the best means of informing themselves is that the damage is not as great as has been reported.

Indeed, many are of the opinion that, while early fruits have been injured, and in some instances killed, and possibly some of the later varieties have been hurt, the benefits resulting to the grain crops from the snowstorm more than offset the damage.

DENVER, Col., April 21.—A sharp drop in temperature followed the snowstorm last night. 14 degrees above zero being recorded by the Weather Bureau in Denver and Pueblo, and fruit of all kinds in Eastern Colorado, according to reports, was nipped in the bud. While the damage to fruit in this State will be heavy, nearly all other crops will be greatly benefited by the moisture.

JERSEY FIREBUG CONFESSES.

One of Two Prisoners Admits Setting Morristown Fires.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., April 21.—Thomas Fitzgerald, who, with Frederick Schwickhardt, is in the Morris County jail charged with setting the fires that have caused Morristown people to live in fear for some months, has made a statement over his signature to Prosecutor Charles A. Rathbun. In it he confesses to the fires he and Schwickhardt set.

Schwickhardt still denies setting the fires. He says Fitzgerald's confession is untrue. The men are held in $10,000 bail for the Grand Jury.

WOULD VISIT MRS. EDDY.

Proposal of Counsel of "Next Friends" Meets with No Response.

CONCORD, N. H., April 21.—Counsel for the plaintiffs in the suit brought by relatives as "next friends" of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy against Calvin H. Frye and others, including officers of the Christian Science Church, to obtain an accounting of Mrs. Eddy's estate, made public to-night a letter sent by them to Mrs. Eddy's counsel, Gen. Frank S. Streeter, on March 12. No answer to this letter has been received.

The first part of the letter refers to the assertion made by the "next of friends" that Mrs. Eddy is of infirm mind and unable to understand and protect her property rights, and contains some quoted denials from Gen. Streeter and others of this allegation. The letter then continues:

In view of these denials we have the honor to ask you to assent to certain steps designed to ascertain the truth concerning Mrs. Eddy's present and past condition and to expedite litigation.

Unfortunately we have not free access to Mrs. Eddy's presence as you have, and we should reluctantly undertake to force our witnesses into her house under circumstances which might prove disturbing or injurious to her, notwithstanding the confidence of yourself, Mr. Baker, and other gentlemen that she is capable of so much labor and endurance as you have described.

But you have the free right of entrance to Mrs. Eddy's house, and can readily secure admittance and considerate interviews with her of the witnesses by whom her condition of body and mind is to be established in the pending legal proceedings.

We therefore propose that you select three competent gentlemen and that we select three others, and that at various convenient hours the six be allowed to visit Mrs. Eddy, and by observation and conversation qualify themselves to be witnesses for or against our contention, no one but these six persons to be allowed to talk to her, and not more than six additional persons, selected in the same way, to be permitted to be present. Shorthand writers may attend to take down all that is said, or may be excluded and nothing taken down, as you prefer. Of course we do not suggest that other proper persons shall not see Mrs. Eddy at suitable times.

We are confident that you and the counsel for the defendant will welcome the offer of ours as proposing a wise and considerate method of expediting litigation.

The letter is signed by William E. Chandler, Martin and Howe, and John W. Kelley, as counsel for the "next friends."

Gen. Streeter, when asked to-night about the letter, said that he did not care to make any comment on it.

MEET PILOTS HALF WAY.

Coastwise Steamship Lines Agree to Conference to Avert a Strike.

It looked yesterday as though the officers of some of the coastwise steamship companies would try to avert a strike on their lines by a conference with Luther B. Dow, General Manager of Harbor No. 1 of the American Association of Masters, Mates, and Pilots, who sent a letter last week to seventeen companies tendering the resignations of their first, second, and third officers, to go into effect on May 1. A strike at that time is threatened to enforce demands for higher wages which were made in the form of a petition sent to the companies last week.

Capt. Dow said yesterday that the Brunswick and the Luckenbach Steamboat Companies, through their representatives, had signified their willingness to confer with him as a representative of the men. So far these were the only companies heard from in this city. The Merchants and Miners' Steamship Company of Baltimore had not only refused the demands, but refused a conference. Its men were solid on the proposition to quit work failing a change of heart on the part of the company, he said. As the company is engaging men this does not seem likely.

"If a strike is precipitated, it will not be because it is sought by the men," said Capt. Dow. "The advances must be granted, however, or the men will quit. We are willing to go so far as to let the question of my going as the representative of the union go by the board if the companies object to that. I must be recognized, however, as the representative of the men."

LOP-EARED WOMAN, HE SAYS.

F. L. Kahle Sharply Criticises a Portrait by Olga de Boznauska.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 21.—In a public letter addressed to John W. Beatty, Director of the Carnegie Art Galleries and President of the International Jury of Awards, Frederick L. Kahle, a prominent lawyer and recognized art connoisseur, to-day severely criticises the action of the art jury in awarding the third prize this year to Olga de Boznauska, the famous French portrait painter, for her "Portrait of a Lady."

Mr. Kahle declares that the drawing in the picture is so bad and the head of the lady so horribly distorted that the picture should be labeled "A Lop-Eared Woman."

The woman's ears, Mr. Kahle says, are very much out of place, one being one inch below the other, while the forehead is out of plumb.

KILL WOMAN MASQUERADER.

White Boys in Virginia Kill Negress Dressed as a Man.

Special to The New York Times.

DANVILLE, Va., April 21.—While masquerading in male attire, Ellen Elliott, a young negro woman, was killed late last night by a crowd of white boys. The woman was walking down a road in a negro settlement just beyond the corporate limits with a negro man when the white boys came up. A few words passed between them, and stones were thrown.

The woman, it is declared, pulled a pistol and began firing. One of the white boys felled her to the ground with a beer bottle, and she was then stoned and kicked. Joseph Baugh acknowledges that he plunged a long dirk several times into her, but asserts that he acted in self-defense. The companion of the woman ran away.

Thomas Walker, J. Baugh, Oscar Neatherly, and John B. Talbott are in jail charged with the murder. They confess that they were implicated.

Rocky Mountain Club Gets Going.

The Rocky Mountain Club of New York was organized here yesterday to promote good fellowship among its members and to further the interests of the Rocky Mountain States in the East. These officers were elected: John Hays Hammond of California, President; Albert J. Seligman of Montana, Vice President; William B. Thompson of Montana, Treasurer; Frank W. Holmes, Assistant Treasurer, and James J. McEvilly, Secretary.

Fire Routs a Dinner Party.

A fire in the house of James Deering Fessenden, 911 Park Avenue, a lawyer, at 31 Nassau Street, threw his dinner guests into a panic yesterday morning. Women and men in evening dress ran into the street until assured that there was no danger. The firemen put out the blaze without difficulty.

RIOT IN BAPTIST CHURCH.

Fierce Pitched Battle in Presence of Rival Pastors.

Special to The New York Times.

PORTSMOUTH, Ohio, April 21.—Men and women were knocked down and trampled upon and women fainted during a pitched battle in the Free Will Baptist Church here this morning. Hymn Books were hurled back and forth and the pews and other church property were demolished. The police finally quelled the riot after a number of persons had been badly hurt. The women engaged in the Hymn Book hurling, but when the men clashed in a hand-to-hand conflict, some of them were knocked down, while others ran screaming from the church. No arrests were made.

The riot was the result of one faction bringing in the Rev. George Vance of Galford to conduct the services. His appearance in the pulpit was the signal for the followers of the regular pastor, the Rev. Freeman Chase, to begin battle. They started for the pulpit, and when Vance's supporters intercepted them the riot followed.

WATCHMAN HELD FOR THEFT.

Charged with Stealing Faucets from Houses He Was Supposed to Guard.

Max Levy, 50 years old, who gave his address as 228 East 100th Street, and who up to Saturday was employed as night watchman for three flathouses at 216, 218, and 220 East Sixty-seventh Street, was held in $1,000 bail yesterday by Magistrate Baker, in the Yorkville Court, for examination to-day, charged with larceny, and in $1,000 for examination on a charge of carrying a loaded revolver. Levy was arrested late Saturday afternoon by a City Marshal, after a lively chase through the streets.

According to the story told by the City Marshal in court yesterday, Levy was relieved at noon on Saturday by a man named Ungor, the day watchman of the flathouses. He failed to turn over the keys to the houses, however. Soon after Levy's departure Unger heard the sound of running water in the flats. He forced an entrance, and found that the faucets had been removed from every water pipe in the three houses and that the water was running at full force from all of the openings.

A few hours later Levy returned and handed over the keys to Unger. The latter asked Levy what he had done with the faucets, and he said that Levy took to his heels without replying. Unger followed Levy, and a crowd joined in the chase. Among the number was City Marshal Angerman, who finally caught the fugitive in the basement of a house in Second Avenue.

Missing Nyack Boy Found.

Special to The New York Times.

NYACK, N. Y., April 21.—Alfred Holly, the 17-year-old son of Capt. William H. Holley, who disappeared from his home at Nyack on Tuesday last, was discovered in Peekskill to-day. Word was telephoned from that place to Chief of Police Fury in Nyack. The Chief sent word back for the Peekskill authorities to hold the boy, and an older brother went this afternoon to fetch him. The cause of his disappearance has not yet been learned.

Free Postal Delivery for Nutley, N. J.

NUTLEY, N. J., April 21.—The Post Office authorities have notified the Nutley Town Council that free delivery would be installed in that town on July 1, providing the houses are numbered and street signs placed at all intersections of streets by that date. The latter will be accomplished by the passing of an ordinance. Free delivery has been the dream of Nutleyites for the last five years.

HAITI'S GLORY MAY DIM NAVAL LUSTRE

Her Gorgeous Vice Admiral on a Raft Would Take Precedence in the Jamestown Parade.

BLACK REPUBLIC'S TROUBLE

Absconding President Stole Her Navy, but She May Borrow Something to Represent Her Here.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—There is consternation in naval and diplomatic circles because the Republic of Haiti is trying to beg round trip transportation for one Vice Admiral from Port-au-Prince to Jamestown. All bids must guarantee the arrival of this dignitary in time for the opening of the Exposition on April 26. Haiti will, if necessary, concede the point of the return trip ticket. The main thing is to have the majesty of the republic represented at the naval pageant in which all the great powers of the world are to participate.

If the Haitian Vice Admiral gets there in time for his saluts of nineteen guns and all the champagne he can drink at the inevitable banquet to follow, he is willing to work his passage home on a banana boat. His Government won't worry overmuch if he never comes back, for that will mean one prospective revolutionist the less in Haiti. But it is a serious matter for Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans and the bold and bluff old seadogs who will come to Jamestown in command of the towering warships of Europs and Japan.

The difficulty is that Haiti, being a full-fledged nation, can con Admirals, who must be accepted as legal tender, with the same facility as England or the United States. By the sacred statutes of international law and ironbound naval etiquette it is the parchment commission with red seals that makes an Admiral, not his ships, otherwise Admirals would have to be rated by the naval strength they commanded. England would have the only thirty-third degree Admirals and the representative of Chile would be crowded out on the back stoop. If the Vice Admiral of the Haitian Navy, which doesn't exist, sails proudly into Hampton Roads on an excursion boat with a rusty shotgun for a saluting battery, they will have to stand for him, and ask him to a seat in the end of the hall where the Admirals sit, and pass him their own plugs if he asks for a chew, as one Admiral to another.

Would Rank Them All.

Indeed, it is even worse than that. Haiti proposes to send a Vice Admiral, and a Vice Admiral would rank every grads in the naval parade. The highest rank in the American Navy is that of Rear Admiral, one step below. George Dewey is the exception, but he was made a full Admiral by Congress at a special convocation, and this degree will be conferred on no others. In polite recognition of this circumstance, Great Britain, France, Japan, Germany, and all the great powers having Vice Admirals will keep them at home and send Rear Admirals to command their fleets at Jamestown in order that "Bob" Evans, who will act as bost, need not be embarrassed by the presence of officers of higher rank.

But if some rolling, tossing, pitching little soft-coal burning tub tumbles into that harbor flying the flag of a Haitian Vice Admiral, the other old seadogs must call on him first, and ask him what he will have, and generally kow-tow. Naval etiquette and the sacred statutes of international law demand this thing, and naval officers the world over can give the Ladies' Chautauqua Circle of Keokuk, Iowa, cards and spades when it comes to etiquette.

Naval officers have had ample experience before now with the Admirals of jack rabbit republics in Central America and the West Indies. Their usual uniform is the discarded blue coat of the drum major of a band, baggy red trousers, and a dilapidated cocked hat with a plume made out of a parrot's tail feathers. They are barefooted, these Admirals, and they wear a big tin cutlass that was left in their town by the property man of a melodrama. Haiti is a black republic, too, and, with President Roosevelt and Senator Foraker vying in courtesy to this race, the arrival of a Haitian Vice Admiral is likely to complicate Presidential politics. When you suggest these things to people in the Navy Department they bark at you and growl:

"See here, you. This is no joke. This Haitian Admiral is a serious problem."

The Navy Department has dragged Secretary Root into the game, and he is trying to hold off the would-be guest of honor. There is some talk of an appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury, but Cortelyou, after an unofficial examination of the Dingley tariff, has hinted that there is no protective duty on Admirals.

A Double-Dyed Traitor.

There is a sad story that explains why the Vice Admiral of Haiti must get free transportation or swim. Once Haiti had a navy, as Santo Domingo and Nicaragua and Honduras and other comic countries on the Caribbean have. The Haitian Navy was like theirs, and used for the same purpose. It consisted of one second-hand steam yacht, and it was kept at Port au Prince to enable Presidents of the republic to beat it with the contents of the Treasury when a successful revolution broke in the back door of the palace. It was a point of honor for the fugitive ruler to send the navy back in good condition when he reached a port of refuge, usually in Cuba or Porto Rico. But there came a President of the republic whose ancestors were pigs and whose soul was devoid of honor. When he got his cue for a quick exit and made the usual slide to safety, he sold the Haitian Navy to a banana trader. The valiant and patriotic officers and crew would have resisted, but the banana trader offered to pay them their salaries, which Haiti had neglected to do, and they submitted to this treason.

Still the Vice Admiral of Haiti thinks he can hold up some fruit company's line for a pass if no substitute for the lost navy can be improvised in time.

THE EXPOSITION NOT READY.

Grounds and Buildings at Jamestown About 80 Per Cent. Finished.

NORFOLK, Va., April 21.—Despite the efforts of officials and thousands of carpenters, masons, cement-walk builders, and landscape gardeners, the Jamestown Ter-Centennial Exposition will be opened this week unready.

The grounds and buildings are about 80 per cent. finished. Although a hasty glance over the grounds would lead the uninformed to doubt this, closer observation and the opportunity of examining the great mass of boxed exhibits waiting to be installed would convince the early visitor. No exposition has presented such a permanent appearance, and this in a great measure is responsible for the delay. Several of the most important buildings are built solidly of brick, cement, and iron, and these are intended to remain on the grounds as a nucleus of a great park. Regardless of the permanency of the work, however, the exterior of most of the buildings will be ready when the exposition is formally opened on Friday next.

The unfinished state that annoys the eye at the present time is due almost wholly to unsightly débris of all kinds with which the exposition grounds are strewn. No effort has yet been made to clear away surplus building material, but hundreds of wagons and men will be engaged to-morrow and continue through the succeeding days and nights until Friday, when assurance is given that there will not remain a trace of unnecessary material.

USED OUR COSULS'S IDEAS.

Foreigners Availed Themselves of Points Checked by Mr. Carson.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—The Department of Commerce and Labor believes that it has at last hit on a plan that will effectually prevent the extsnsive and valuable research by the United States Consuls, Consular Agents, and Special Agents in every quarter of the world in exploiting commercial opportunities and markets for American goods being turned to good account by foreign manufacturers, who in many cases have made use of the information so secured and won the benefits intended for the producers and manufacturers of the United States. Steps have been taken to prevent this as far as possible in the future.

As Major Carson, Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures, expresses it, the distance from New York to Liverpool or Berlin is no greater than from New York to Chicago, and the telegraph covers the distance in the same time. When the daily Consular Reports gave notice in the now regularly established department of "foreign trade opportunities," that a certain man in the East Indies wanted machinery for a fertilizer factory; or a firm in Rhodesia wanted mining machinery, or that a chance offered to sell steel rails in China, or any of a thousand other trade opportunities existed in foreign lands, the American firms who sought to sell the goods often found that some German or French or English firm had stepped in and made the trade.

It was sought to cut off the foreign Consuls and Governments who were on the mailing list, but this was found impracticable, for wherever it was tried protests were entered and the State Department would not permit the reports to be withheld from friendly Governments. Then agencies abroad who were using information gathered by this Government through its numerous Consuls for the benefit of their subscribers were cut off the list. They protested, and one of them in Germany threatened to bring suit. They have been unable to get the reports.

For a time it was thought that the issue had been met, but before long it was discovered that trade opportunities published in the Consular Reports disappeared again before the American manufacturer could avail himself of them. Major Carson discovered that the reason was that foreign manufacturers had agencies in this country and that they immediately cabled to their houses any opportunities which came within their scope. Finally this leak was also met by leaving out the names of the persons desiring the product of American factories, and now the following line is run in the Consular Reports under the heading "Foreign Trade Opportunities": (Inquiries in which addresses are omitted are on file at the Bureau of Manufacturers. In applying for addresses refer to file number.)

The Consular Reports also give information of contemplated public improvements where material made in this country may find a market. They have resulted in the sale of steel bridges in distant lands, in the sale of rails and locomotives, of mining machinery, and almost every sort of manufactured product.

A recent number of the Consular Reports (2,849) tells of inquiries in the Levant for American dental supplies; of a request in Italy for names of makers of celluloid; of an East Indian city which wants 300 street lamps; of a demand for paper sacks for cement in Italy; of electric cranes wanted in Lorenzo Marquez; of a tugboat required at Bahia.

It reports that the Chamber of Commerce of Reggio Calabria, Italy, has appropriated $3,474 for an outfit for a chemical laboratory, with a view to promoting the citrus industry. Among other chances named are the sale of 1,000 to 20,000 tons of steel rails, agricultural machines, fertilizer-making machinery, and many other things, including the chance to do street paving and putting in an electric light plant in a Spanish-American city.

EXPLOSION IN CHIHUAHUA.

Fireworks Factory Destroyed—Entire City Shaken—Loss, $200,000.

CHIHUAHUA, Mexico, April 21.—An explosion which is attributed to a lighted cigarette stub carelessly thrown aside yesterday destroyed La Sultana, an extensive fireworks factory. The explosion caused a property loss of $200,000, and fatally injured two of the employes of the plant.

All the buildings of the city were shaken, and the people were terrified by what they thought was an earthquake.

The injured persons, neither of whom can recover, had lingered after the other employes had left the building.

SWEDISH PRINCE COMING.

Grandson of King Oscar Will Visit This Country in the Summer.

STOCKHOLM, April 21.—The Swedish cruiser Fylgia, commanded by Prince Wilhelm, Duke of Sodermanland, King Oscar's grandson, will visit the Jamestown Exposition for a week in July, and then will go to New York, Boston, and other American ports.

Prince Wilhelm is the second son of Crown Prince Gustaf of Sweden. He is in his 25d year.

Notes of Foreign Affairs.

MADRID, April 21.—The physicians in attendance upon Queen Victoria are most satisfied with her condition. Her Majesty took her usual morning and afternoon drives to-day. Her accouchement is probable this week.

DUNKIRK, France, April 21.—The three-masted Italian ship Fenice put in here to-day after a voyage from Taltal, Chile. The mixed crew of Germans, Italians, and Scotchmen, shipped in America, quarreled all the time and terrorized the Captain, and forced him to keep an unpopular Italian named Vincenceso in irons for two months. The ship is now in the hands of the dock police.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 21.—M. Hedentsoff, a millionaire, who recently died abroad, bequeathed $250,000 to the Moscow University, and a similar sum to the Instituts of Technology.

CLOTHING OF PAPER; RUGS AND SHOES, TOO

Consul Tells of a German Yarn That May Work a Revolution.

NOT AFFECTED BY WATER

Can Be Dyed with Better Effect Than Silk—Moths Do Not Attack It.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—According to a report by Carl Bailey Hurst, Consul at Plauen, Saxony, it is possible that before many years we shall be wearing clothing made of paper, using paper rugs and carpets, enjoying paper slippers and shoes, and making sails of paper canvas. The manufacture of paper "yarns" has progressed so far that many careful housewives last year bought paper towels under the impression that they were getting bargains in linen, the articles selling at wholesale for 24 cents a dozen, medium size. Enough "paper" cloth can be bought for $1 to make a three-piece suit.

The attention of the Bureau of Manufactures having been directed to this new branch of industry, it made inquiries of the consuls in Saxony regarding it, and Mr. Hurst has made an interesting report on the subject. He states that "Xylolin," as the article is called, was invented by Herr Emil Claviez of Saxony, after many and long continued experiments, and that the processes are patented in all civilized countries. Moreover, the "yarns" of paper fibre, consisting of 95 per cent. paper and 5 per cent. cotton, are made somewhat extensively in England, Bohemia, and Saxony, and factories are to be established by the inventor in the United States.

Xylolin may be woven into any desirable fabric. It is primarily a thread or yarn, and is employed exclusively in weaving. The thread is not brittle, and it does not have a hard surface, and if neither shrinks nor stretches to any appreciable extent. Having certain resilient qualities, it cannot readily be crushed or dented like paper, and on it moisture has practically no effect.

Among the other many good qualities claimed for it is that it is a serviceable substitute for cotton, jute, linen, and even silk. When bleached the yarn or thread is of a snowy whiteness, and at first glance cannot be distinguished from cotton. It is said to combine the good qualities of cotton and linen at one-third the price of cotton and one-tenth the price of linen.

It can be more readily dyed in delicate shades, far outmatching the range of colors to which cotton or silk are susceptible, and, it is asserted, vastly more than those of linens. The process of dyeing the thread or yarn is patented, and appears to be of such perfection that no colors from the daintiest nuances to the richest hues are affected by strong light.

Rugs and carpets of this material, woven like ingrain carpets, are being imported into the United States. They are said to be elastic to the tread, easily cleaned by beating and washing and not retentive of dust. Moths do not attack them.

The paper yarn is much used for making bagging instead of jute, or used in combination with it, one thread of jute with two of paper. It is used for outing hats, canvas shoes, and slippers, towels, which are usually taken for linen, wall hangings, upholstering for veranda furniture, as it is not affected by the weather, and for outing suits. It is said to be particularly suited for underwear.

The processes used are said to be secret, and no information is given regarding them.

PEACE PLAN NOT ABANDONED.

Powers Still Negotiating as to Discussion of Armaments.

ROME, April 21.—Official denial is given to the rumors that Italy has withdrawn her compromise proposition concerning the manner in which to deal at the coming Peace Conference at The Hague with the question of the limitation of armaments.

It is asserted that negotiations are still going on, especially with Great Britain, with a view to reconciling the opinions of the powers for and against the proposition.

KILLED BY KHEDIVE'S UNCLE.

Woman and Child Run Down by Ibrahim Pasha's Motor Car.

NAPLES, April 21.—Ibrahim Pasha, an uncle of the Khedive of Egypt, while driving a motor car here to-day, ran over a woman and a child, mortally injuring both of them.

CAPTAIN DIES OF GRIEF.

He Commanded the Sirio, Which Was Lost with 300 Lives.

GENOA, April 21.—Capt. Piccone, the commander of the Navigazione Italia Line steamer Sirio, which was lost with 300 passengers on the rocks of Hornigaa Island, Spain, last August, died here to-day of a broken heart.

Trouble at Drury College Settled.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., April 21.—Both sides having reached an amicable settlement after mutual apologies, the juniors at Drury College, who went on strike when accused of purloining ice cream intended for a reception to the seniors at President Kerbye's house, will return to their duties this week.

CAMORRA CHIEF'S FLIGHT.

Alfano Reached America After Many Adventures in Italy.

NAPLES, April 21.—Details were obtained to-day of the escape from Italy of Enrico Alfano, known as "Erricone," head of the Camorra secret society, who was caught in the general round-up of armed Italians in New York, and whose extradition is sought for by the Italian authorities.

The local police authorities, who had long suspected him of being connected with the Camorra, ordered a squad of gendarmes to arrest him, but Alfano, having associates among all classes of the population, was notified of the intention to take him into custody and succeeded in leaving Naples. He went from village to village under various disguises in his efforts to elude capture.

At San Leucio, near Caserta, the gendarmes surrounded a house in which Alfano was concealed, but the Camorra chief succeeded in escaping and took a train for Rome. On arriving in that city Alfano consulted a lawyer and remained hidden for a week at the capital, but, lacking the certain protection of the Camorra, which is a Neapolitan organization, Alfano returned here.

The gendarmes again began closing in on Alfano, who eventually obtained a false passport and escaped to the United States disguised as a stoker.

BARCELONA ELECTION RIOT.

One Man Killed—Polling Elsewhere in Spain Quiet.

MADRID, April 21.—The election for members of the Chamber of Deputies opened quietly to-day, and, thanks to the precautionary measures of the authorities, the only trouble was at Barcelona, where voters came to blows at the polls and one man was killed and two were injured.

At Madrid the vote shows that the Republicans have made a material gain. Returns from the provinces show that 119 Ministerial candidates and 34 Liberals were elected without opposition.

VIENNESE SINGERS COMING.

Famous Chorus to be Heard Here and in Other Cities.

VIENNA, April 21.—Over 300 members of the Vienna Mannergesang Verein left here to-day, accompanied by their famous conductors, Kremsor and Heuberger, for Genoa, whence they will sail on board the German steamer Oceana for the United States.

A great crowd of enthusiastic admirers was at the station to bid them farewell, and representatives of the municipality delivered speeches. Concerts will be given in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and elsewhere.

The above body of male singers is one of the most famous organizations of its kind in Europe. The society was organized in 1843, and has a full chorus of 380 voices. Twenty women singers will accompany them. The members of the choir are of the highest business and social standing in Vienna. Among them are Government officials, artists, professors, financiers, lawyers, and merchants. Their American host will be the Liederkranz Society of New York.

CUBANS PRAY FOR RAIN.

None Has Fallen for Six Months—Forest Fires Raging.

HAVANA, April 21.—Prayers were offered in all the churches throughout the island to-day for rain, which has not fallen for six months.

The country is parched, many cattle are dying, and forest fires are devastating various sections.

José Miguel Gomez, the Liberal leader, in a statement published to-day, protests against the purchase of church properties by the Government for $2,000,000. He gives as his reasons that the Church titles are questionable and that the price is far in excess of the value of the property. The buildings are in bad condition, he declares, and it would be better to replace them with modern buildings at the same price. He urgently recommends that the Government of intervention defer the purchase and leave the matter in the hands of Cuba's future Government.

NEVA BOAT SINKS; 31 ARE MISSING

Antiquated Steamer with Inexperienced Crew Strikes an Ice Floe.

THREATS TO LYNCH OWNER

Vessel Was Condemned Last Autumn, but He Had the Ban Removed—Captain Formerly a Baker.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 21.—Thirty-one persons are believed to have been drowned by the foundering of the river steamer Archangelsk while she was crossing the Neva near the suburb of Irinowka late last night.

The accident occurred in a snowstorm when the steamer was two-thirds across the river, and was caused by the vessel striking an ice floe. Numbers of floes remain in the river despite the lateness of the season.

Owing to the thickness of the weather the accident was not seen from the shore, but the shouts for help of the victims attracted the crews of two steamers, which went to the scene, only to find that the Archangelsk had foundered. A number of her passengers, mostly workingmen, were rescued, but owing to the swiftness of the current many others were swept under the ice floes.

There is no means of establishing definitely the number of victims. The passage across the river is short, and no count is made of the passengers, but according to the police of Okhta, the suburb for which the steamer was bound, thirty-one persons are missing, all workmen or small merchants of the humbler class.

The Archangelsk was an old iron steamer, open forward and roofed over astern in the form of a cabin. She was condemned as unseaworthy last Autumn, but the owner was able to have the ban removed and the vessel placed in service. The crew consisted of three inexperienced men, the Captain and pilot having formerly been a baker. The three men were saved.

The steamer had scarcely any ballast, and when she ran sidewise on a big floe she careened and immediately filled and sank. The catastrophe was over inside of three minutes. Those who were not picked up immediately sank beneath the icy water. One man scrambled on an ice floe and was carried down stream for a mile. The wreck was found this afternoon, lying on the bottom of the river, scarcely a hundred feet from the shore, whither it had been swept by the swift current. It was impossible for divers to descend owing to floating ice.

The banks of the river were crowded all day with friends and relatives of missing persons looking for bodies, but none was recovered. It is probable that the dead have been carried down stream for miles.

Feeling against the owner of the ferry line runs high, and threats have been made to lynch him.

PRISON GOVERNOR SLAIN.

Twelve Persons Assassinated in Lodz in Three Days.

ROSTOFF-ON-DON, April 21.—The Vice Governor of the prison was shot dead in the street here to-day.

The assassin was arrested.

LODZ, April 21.—In order to put an end to conflicts between Socialists and Nationalists, which in the last three days alone have resulted in twelve men being shot dead and sixteen being wounded, the local labor organizations have issued proclamations condemning murder and appealing for a cessation of the fighting.

The Tel-Electric
Piano Player

—as the name implies—is operated by electricity—but, an electric current in the house is not necessary.

With electtic power the fatiguing task of foot pumping is eliminated—leaving the mind of the operator entirely free for interpretation and enjoyment.

You do not have to sell or exchange your present piano—because the Tel-Electric Player can be easily attached, without disfigurement, injury or interference with the key board. The Tel-Electric is the only Player which can be attached to a grand piano.

There is complete control of expression and tempo. With the slighest pressure of the fingers one can interpret and render an intricate composition with the technique and touch of a finished pianist.

Or, without any human aid, one may enjoy a Beethoven Sonata or a Sousa march, played exactly as marked by the composer. When playing itself the time is perfect—therefore, for dance music not even human hands can equal the TEL-ELECTRIC PIANO PLAYER.

The tempo may be retarded or accelerated at will or the shading may be as delicate or as pronounced as desired—making the TEL-ELECTRIC an ideal instrument for song accompaniment.

The Tel-Electric produces the highest quality of music. It is a high-grade instrument, the product of men of pronounced electrical and mechanical genius, and is worthy of a place in any parlor or music room. There is seemingly no limit to its possibilities. The results it accomplishes are simply marvellous.

We respectfully invite visits from musicians and all lovers of good music—especially owners of old style players. Recitals daily between 9 A. M. and 5:30 P. M. We have just issued an interesting illustrated booklet, a copy of which will be mailed upon request.

JUSTICE BREWER SEES NEW ERA DAWNING

Strong Words Against Bad Corporation Lawyers in Ethical Society Talk.

RICH MEN "MONEY MAD"

A Higher Standard of Ethics in the Legal Profession Needed, He Says.

United States Supreme Court Justice David J. Brewer and Prof. George Kirchwey, Dean of the Columbia Law School, pleaded for a higher standard of ethics in the legal profession in addresses before the Ethical Culture Society in Carnegie Hall yesterday morning. Neither admitted that the ethics of lawyers were very bad, but they acknowledged that the public seemed to think that they were not of the best. There was some suppressed laughter when Dean Kirchwey acknowledged that there were corporation lawyers whose moral ethics did not seem to be above suspicion, that there was a class of lawyers known as "ambulance chasers," and that there were criminal lawyers who were criminal in more senses than one.

Justice Brewer acknowledged the public's bad opinion of the profession also in the opening remarks of his speech, saying that no profession was so often and so wrongfully attacked as was the legal profession. He cited an occasion at a dinner given recently in honor of the members of the bar, at which he said the toast had been announced: "An Honest Lawyer, the Noblest Work of God." Quick as a flash, the Justice said, a voice from the end of the hall had been heard to say: "And the scarcest."

At the conclusion of both speeches Felix Adler, who presided, suggested that a society be formed within the Ethical Culture Society which should, from the layman's side, strive and work for a higher moral standard among the members of the bar.

Very near the beginning of his address Justice Brewer also said that he didn't quite agree with his friend Lyman Abbott, who had in a recent address described the advance of the race in three stages: "First, despotism; second, individualism, and, lastly, the coming age of fraternalism."

"I do not quite like his division," Justice Brewer went on to say. "I think there are really but two steps, despotism and individualism. Despotism, where one man controls others; individualism, where each man controls himself. There is, of course, a difference in the quality of the despotism, as well as of individualism. One despot may be selfish, saying, as did Louis XIV., 'The State! I am the State,' and regard the services of all as designed to be utilized for his personal aggrandizement and glory, while another may aim to improve the welfare of his subjects. In like manner, there may be a selfish and benevolent individualism.

New Social Era Coming.

"Now the day of selfish individualism is passing away and that of the benevolent is taking its place. Society is no longer regarded as a collection of independent and isolated particles, but is an organism, each member of which is doing not merely the work of an individual, but the work of society, the community.

"Society owes to every one of its members justice. But society seeking justice can never ask for wrongdoing to accomplish it. It does not call upon a lawyer to be dishonest and play the scoundrel in order to secure to his client vindication and justice. Now, as I said, there is no profession to which a stronger appeal is rightfully made. In every community the lawyer is a leader. He is a trusted counselor. If he fails, who shall stand? The ideal of professional life is loyalty to the common welfare, and not pecuniary or political success. The old idea that a lawyer must be all that his client wishes is passing away. He has no right to barter his own integrity, to sell his honor or his conscience.

"A lie has no place in a courtroom, and half a truth is, as we all know, often the worst kind of a lie. A verdict won by a falsehood is a disgrace to the counsel, and equally so a verdict won by a trick. That success is really a defeat, for it makes a profession consecrated to the pursuit of justice an instrument of injustice.

The Scramble for Wealth.

"In the present day of intense commercialism, the lawyer cannot escape its temptations. Indeed, in some aspects, he is more exposed than others. The rapid accumulation of money is a mania. Money-mad was the criticism placed upon a gentleman who personally, socially, and in the ordinary affairs of life was kind, considerate in his treatment of those in his employ, generous, and, according to purely legal standards, honest, but in the domain of business had acted apparently upon the theory that whatever is not positively prohibited by statute, is morally right, and so in many ways, some of which were certainly open to criticism, had accumulated a large property. That man will seek the brainiest counsel, one who can advise correctly as to the precise limits of the law, but his only thought is of the brains and knowledge, and the lawyer who best answers that thought will get employment and compensation corresponding to the pecuniary returns which follow the advice.

"Counsel responding to such a client may in one sense of the term be honest, but it is a negative honesty. It is an honesty which regards simply the client, the statute, and the pay. It is an honesty which ignores the fact that both client and counsel are members of society, and assumes that there is no moral obligation upon either to respect the general welfare.

"Is it strange that there should be so much criticism of the bar? We must remember that the wisdom of the lawmaker can never keep pace with the ingenuity of trained minds seeking to evade legal limitations. The old saying that holes may be found in every law means simply that an ingenious lawyer can often find either in the statute itself or in the mode prescribed for its enforcement some way of escape from its penalties. It is this which provokes the frequent remark that the law so seldom reaches the rich, for the rich can pay for the brainiest, and the brainiest most certainly and quickly discovers the means of evasion. As against this, I appeal for a higher standard of professional ethics. I appeal to every lawyer to put his heart alongside his head, to mix his conscience with his brains. Let him have the courage to say to his client: 'It may be legal, but it is dishonest, and I will have nothing to do with it.' Is this asking too much of the profession?"

Dean Kirchwey spoke of the public's standard of ethics and morals. "The public has two standards of morals," he went on to say; "one for use and the other for ornament. They are as far apart as the ethics of the Stock Exchange and the Sermon on the Mount. Excuses are found for the minister who week after week faces his congregation with a lie in his heart, but for the lawyer there is none."

Car Crushes a Funeral Coach.

Henry Volkers, a coach driver for Frank Montenes, an undertaker of 155 North Third Street, Williamsburg, was badly injured yesterday at Noble Street and Manhattan Avenue by the coach he was driving being run into by a car of the Crosstown line, in charge of Motorman Samuel Hamson. The car was going down a grade, when the crash came. Volckers was pitched to the pavement, sustaining concussion of the brain. The coach was badly damaged.

TOOK T. L. WOODRUFF FOR A SMUGGLER

Customs Man Wanted to Know What He Had in the Black Bag He Carried.

ROUGH TRIP OF 3 LINERS

Amerika, Philadelphia, and the Etruria Well Buffeted in Passage Across.

Ex-Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff was taken for a smuggler at the Hoboken pier of the Hamburg-American liner Amerika yesterday, and held up by a customs official, who wanted to know what Mr. Woodruff had in a black handbag he carried.

Mr. Woodruff had gone down the bay on Saturday night to Quarantine to meet his wife on the Amerika and come up the bay with her. When the vessel got to her pier the customs officer stopped Mr. Woodruff and said he would like to look into the bag, to see that no smuggling was being done. Mr. Woodruff told the customs man who he was, and the two parted with a hearty laugh.

Mrs. Woodruff and her sister have been abroad for several months, and Mr. Woodruff spent the night with Health Officer Doty, and was out on the Amerika long before the revenue cutter, with the customs officials, came alongside. When the Amerika reached her pier Mr. Woodruff had a surprise for his wife in the shape of a large new automobile as a present for her. Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff and Miss Morrison drove away in the new machine.

Three Liners in a Storm.

The Amerika, with the liners Philadelphia, from Southampton, and the Cunarder Etruria, all of which arrived on Saturday night, brought reports of rough weather met with on the North Atlantic track.

The Amerika ran into the storm on Thursday, and it attained its height about midnight. The high wind kicked up a terrific head sea, through which she could only make about three-quarters of her regular speed.

The Etruria met the storm on Wednesday when some 200 miles south of the Banks. For the twenty-four hours ending at midnight Thursday she had to plow her way through high seas and to the accompaniment of gales and rain squalls. One man, a seaman, was injured. He was going forward when the vessel gave a lurch. He grabbed a line for support, but was hurled against the deckhouse and picked up with collar bone broken and shoulder dislocated.

A host of passengers arrived on the America, among whom was Baron Lagercrantz, the new Swedish Minister to the United States. This is his first appearance in America as a diplomat, and he has the distinction of being the first Minister since the separation of Norway and Sweden.

New Swedish Minister.

Minister Lagercrantz, who was careful to explain that he was not a Baron or even a Count, was met by A. C. Johnson, Swedish Consul; Count Taub, and Charles W. Kohlsaat, Commissioner General to the Jamestown Exposition. Sweden's new representative is a wealthy iron manufacturer, and he has a large estate at Wirsbo, near Stockholm. He said that he was much interested in the working people of his country.

"I want to see the working classes of Sweden on the same plane with those of the United States," he said. "This is the greatest country in the world for labor, and the working class has won splendid recognition. I believe one reason for the great progress the workers have made is due largely to the systematic way in which work is planned and carried out.

"I have looked forward with pleasure to coming here. I am to meet the President on Thursday. Mr. Roosevelt is greatly admired in my country, and he is the ideal of more than one Swedish boy."

On Wednesday, while the Amerika was laboring through a storm, Mrs. B. Decknald of Brooklyn died of apoplexy. Her body was brought to port.

HOLES IN STREETS A MENACE.

Auto Club Gathers Evidence of Danger to Patients in Hospital Ambulances

The Automobile Club, which has been gathering evidence and statistics about the condition of New York's streets, in the hope that radical and permanent improvement will follow a full exposure of present conditions, has found that some of the big hospitals have had their ambulance service seriously hampered by the ruts and holes in the streets, which often make the trip to the hospital a great hazard for emergency patients.

Surgeons doing ambulance duty at Roosevelt Hospital declare that the wretched condition of the streets, especially between Fifty-ninth Street and Twenty-third Street, both east and west of Fifth Avenue, is seriously interfering with the ambulance service of their institution and is endangering the lives of not only the ambulance patients, but also surgeons and drivers. Ambulance Surgeon Sammis says that ruts and defects in the street pavement have recently caused the ambulance to break down twice. In one instance a patient was shaken up badly.

"Among the worst sufferers from the bad streets," said Dr. Sammis, "are patients brought here suffering from peritonitis, appendicitis, and similar diseases. The ruts and holes cannot be avoided, and the jolts and jars to the patient cause the inflammation which accompanies peritonitis to spread all over the abdominal regions."

Probably one of the worst sufferers among the hospitals has been J. Hood Wright, in Harlem, which has been compelled to abandon Lawrence Street, its regular ambulance route to the east side, and take a longer way. Lawrence Street is practically impassible, and in one short block 108 holes have been counted in its asphalt surface.

One of the hospital surgeons said:

"In emergency cases, such as hemorrhage, drowning, and poison, to run over those holes, even at a moderate speed, would involve great shock to the patient. In this class of cases every minute counts. Frequently the surgeon is obliged to send the ambulance at high speed, even though the patient is jolted."

JERSEY COCKFIGHT RAIDED.

Orange Police Get Sixteen Game Birds and Two Onlookers.

Sixteen game cocks crowed shrill challenges at each other in Police Headquarters in West Orange yesterday. The place resembled a poultry show and sounded like Bedlam, though the police called it by a shorter name. The game cocks were the "evidence" collected in a raid on a cock fight in the Orange Mountains by Chief Bamford's men early in the day. But two out of the crowd of fifty or more men who went to see the fight were captured. They are James Wilkinson, who says he lives in 165th Street, New York, and James Kiefer of Orange. They will be held on a technical charge of participating in a disorderly assemblage on Sunday.

Policemnn Danglar, who was patrolling along Valely Road at the foot of the mountain, had his suspicions aroused about 11 o'clock by a throng of men who were climbing the mountain. Danglar notified Chief of Police Bamford. Bamford ordered McGuirk, with Patrolmen Daly Danglar, Dignum, McCormick, and Kunz, up the mountain. The policemen followed the crowd for two miles over the brow of the mountain and saw them enter a field back of the old Spottiswoode quarry. The policemen surrounded the crowd, but just as the first fight was about to start some one discovered them, and all but two of the men escaped.

LOVE OF HIS KIND ALL HE HAD TO LEAVE

Lounsbury Was Poor and Insane, but the Memory of Happy Days Remained.

Joys of Childhood, Happiness of Lovers, and the Calm of Old Age, All Pictured in It.

Justice Walter Lloyd Smith, who presides over the Third Department of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, brought with him to the dinner of the New York University Law School Alumni Association Saturday night what he said was the most remarkable document that ever came into his possession. Others who read the document, the last will and testament of Charles Lounsbury, who died in the Cook County Asylum at Dunning, Ill., were disposed to agree with him. Here it is:

"I, Charles Lounsbury, being of sound mind and disposing memory do hereby make and publish this, my last will and testament, in order as justly as may be to distribute my interest in the world among succeeding men.

"That part of my interest which is known in law and recognized in the sheepbound volumes as my property, being inconsiderable and of no account, I make no disposal of in this my will.

"My right to live, being but a life estate, is not at my disposal, but these things excepted all else in the world I now proceed to devise and bequeath—

"Item: I give to good fathers and mothers, in trust for their children, all good little words of praise and encouragement, and all quaint pet names and endearments, and I charge said parents to use them justly and generously, as the needs of their children may require.

"Item: I leave to children inclusively, but only for the term of their childhood, all and every, the flowers of the fields, and the blossoms of the woods, with the right to play among them freely according to the customs of children, warning them at the same time against thistles and thorns. And I devise to children the banks of the brooks, and the golden sands beneath the waters thereof, and the odors of the willows that dip therein, and the white clouds that float high over the giant trees. And I leave the children the long, long days to be merry in, in a thousand ways, and the night and the moon and the train of the Milky Way to wonder at, but subject nevertheless to the rights hereinafter given to lovers.

"Item: I devise to boys jointly all the useful idle fields and commons where ball may be played; all pleasant waters where one may swim; all snowclad hills where one may coast, and all streams and ponds where one may fish, or where, when grim Winter comes, one may skate; to have and to hold the same for the period of their boyhood. And all meadows with the clover blossoms and butterflies therein, of the woods and their appurtenances, the squirrels and birds, and echoes and strange noises, and all distant places which may be visited, together with the adventures there found. And I give to said boys each his own place at the fireside at night, with all pictures that may be seen in the burning wood, to enjoy without let or hindrance and without any incumbrance of care.

"Item: To lovers, I devise their imaginary world, with whatever they may need; as the stars of the sky; the red roses by the wall; the bloom of the hawthorn; the sweet strains of music, and aught else by which they may desire to figure to each other the lastingness and beauty of their love.

"Item: To young men jointly, I devise and bequeath all boisterous, inspiring sports of rivalry, and I give to them the disdain of weakness and undaunted confidence in their own strength, though they are rude; I give them the power to make lasting friendships, and of possessing companions, and to them exclusively I give all merry songs and brave choruses, to sing with lusty voices.

"Item: And to those who are no longer children or youths or lovers, I leave memory, and I bequeath to them the volumes of the poems of Burns and Shakespeare and of other poets, if there be others, to the end that they may live over the old days again, freely and fully, without tithe or diminution.

"Item: To our loved ones with snowy crowns I bequeath the happiness of old age, the love and gratitude of their children until they fall asleep."

INDUSTRIAL ART EXHIBIT.

Chance for Prizes for Pupils at Brooklyn Show Next Month.

The Brooklyn Chapter of the American Institute of Architects will hold its seventh annual exhibition at the Pouch Gallery in Clinton Avenue from May 6 to May 18, inclusive. Exhibits of drawings, photographs, sculpture, and objects of industrial art are desired from all interested.

To stimulate the artistic development of the pupils in the art schools of Brooklyn the Chapter has instituted a competition for a cover design for the catalogue of the 1907 exhibition, to be limited to the pupils of these schools. A prize of $25 for the first, and $15 for the second best designs will be awarded.

All competitive designs should be sent to Walter L. Cassin, 375 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, Secretary of the Exhibition Committee, who will also furnish detailed information to all intending competitors and exhibitors.

The Chapter will give an invitation reception and press view on the evening of May 6, and the exhibition will be open to the public free on May 7.

METZ KILLS A BOOM.

Says He Wouldn't Do Well as Bryan's Running Mate.

Controller Herman A. Metz told many things concerning the inside workings of his office at the annual dinner of the Newark High School Alumni Association Saturday night at the Continental Hotel, Newark.

In introducing the Controller Toastmaster Harry P. Havell referred to a rumor that Mr. Metz was being mentioned as a possible running mate with Bryan in the next campaign. Mr. Metz said he had heard of it, but did not think they would be a harmonious team, as there were some policies of Bryan he could not accept.

In speaking about the Controller's office in New York he stated there were many improvements to be made in its administration, but under the present civil service system the work would be difficult.

Mr. Metz also touched upon the present transportation problem that is worrying the municipal authorities, and hinted that the solution was very remote. He startled his hearers by saying that the municipality of New York spent annually more than London, Paris, or Berlin, and more than Holland, Switzerland, Italy, and Sweden, China and Japan. The yearly payroll of New York is $70,000,000, and the number of city officials 15,000.

Mr. Metz said the city officials were underpaid. Talking about the police force, he said that the pay of Police Inspector was only $3,500. This amount, he said, no Inspector could live on and be an honest police official, as it took the whole amount to live up to his position. He said there was hardly a clerk among the thousand in his department who did not do business on the outside, many of them realizing far more than their salaries. "I called a man into m office one day," he said, "and told him I was going to promote him, which meant an increase of $1,000 in his salary. He declined the promotion, and when I asked him why, said that his position in that particular department was worth $10,000 a year to him." He was immediately transferred to another department.

He told of another clerk that had been in his office four years and had reported but 141 days in that period. He was promptly bounced. These instances were related to illustrate the condition of the office when he became its head. The Controller seems to have it in for Brooklyn, for his references to it were clothed with sarcasm.

STREET CAR WRECKS FLYING AMBULANCE

Surgeon Saves Sick Mother and Baby in Smash-Up at Crowded Crossing.

WARNING GONG NOT HEEDED

Vehicle Containing Woman Critically Ill Cut in Two When Motorman Fails to Come to a Stop.

A Roosevelt Hospital ambulance, in which Mrs. Leonardo Varmargello, critically ill of pneumonia, and her ten months' old infant, were being transferred to Bellevue Hospital, was run into and wrecked last night by a Thirty-fourth Street crosstown car where that line crosses Broadway. That neither the woman nor her child were seriously injured was due in a large part to the presence of mind of Dr. Donald Gordon, the ambulance surgeon, and Policeman Livingston of the West Thirtieth Street Station.

The ambulance was cut in two and the woman jolted about until she became unconscious. The baby might have been seriously injured had not Dr. Gordon forgotten his own danger and held her with one arm, while with the other arm he held the mother to keep her from being thrown out of the ambulance.

The horse, which was badly injured about the forelegs, tried to run away with what was left of the ambulance, but Policeman Livingston, who was on post near by, made a jump, caught the horse's bridle, and managed to keep him from running up on the sidewalk.

Like Dr. Gordon and Livingston, James Dwyer, the driver of the ambulance, kept his wits, and, although he was bruised in the collision, he helped Dr. Gordon care for the sick woman and her child pending the arrival of another ambulance from the New York Hospital. Mrs. Vamargello and her baby were hurried off in a few minutes to Bellevue, where the doctors said that they hoped to save the woman's life. The baby, they said, was unhurt.

The West Thirty-seventh Street Police Station was notified yesterday afternoon that Mrs. Varmargello, the wife of a poor Italian laborer, was critically ill in a little flat in West Thirty-seventh Street. Her case was diagnosed at Roosevelt Hospital, and her transfer to Bellevue was then ordered.

Owing to her serious condition, Driver Dwyer was told to make the trip to Bellevue in as quick time as possible. Clanging his foot bell vigorously, Dwyer drove the ambulance down Broadway. At Thirty-fourth Street, thinking that the motorman of a west-bound car would heed his warning gong, Dwyer did not slow up, but continued at full speed in the direction of the crossing.

When the crash came Broadway was thronged at that point, and an immense crowd gathered around the wreck of the ambulance, denouncing the motorman.

FAST EXPRESS DERAILED.

Defective Engine Gear Supposed to Have Caused Pennsylvania Wreck.

PITTSBURG, April 21.—The fast Buffalo express on the Allegheny Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad was derailed while approaching the station of Woods Hill, north of this city, to-day.

The derailment is said by the railroad officials to have been caused by some of the engine gear dropping in front of the wheels of the pony trucks on the engine. The engine and tender, one baggage car of theatrical properties, a mail car, and a combination baggage and smoker left the track. No one was injured.

WRECKING TRAIN WRECKED.

Runs Into Cars Thrown on Second Track by a Collision.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 21.—As the result of a wreck on the Southern Railway a short distance east of Woodlawn, a suburb of Birmingham, early to-day, two men are dead and seven persons injured.

The dead are Cal B. Harris, a fireman, and Tom Beverly, a brakeman. James Wages, S. H. Hill, and Thomas Powell, engineers of the three trains concerned, were badly hurt.

A freight train with a dead engine on the rear was coming toward Birmingham and a fast train was permitted to enter the block. It crashed into the dead engine, smashing both engines and demolishing several cars. Three cars of the freight train were thrown across the eastbound track almost at the instant that a wrecking train passed. The wrecker struck them and practically the whole freight train piled into the ditch.

The men who were killed were on the wrecking train.

WRECK NEAR OSSINING.

Milk Train Runs Into a Freight Train on the Central.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., April 21.—A southbound milk train on the New York Central crashed into a freight train at Crawbuckie Switch, between Croton and Ossining, late to-night.

Many cars are reported wrecked and burned. No lives are reported lost, and only one man was injured. Traffic will be blocked for many hours.

PLEA FOR NEGRO COLLEGE.

Meeting of Negroes Here to Aid Colored Institution in Georgia.

Several speakers pleaded fervently for the negroes of the South, more particularly for the younger generation who are being educated in Morris Brown College, at Atlanta, Ga., at a mass meeting held in Bethel Church, in West Twenty-fifth Street, yesterday afternoon. Bishop Derrick of Ohio and Pennsylvania presided.

"The fight to free the black man in the past was a great one," the Bishop said. "It will be as nothing to the conflict of the future. The future will be a fight of ideas. In the future the aim of the black man must be to render skilled service, not to work merely. Any horse can work. The thing is to work with skill—have mind behind it.

"Don't ask for sympathy; demand justice. If any man offers to let you carry some coal into his cellar for a dime or go to his back yard and get a meal free, carry down the coal. Be a man. Earn your money, then demand it.

"Don't be ashamed of your race or your color. I found a young man blubbering in a Southern city once. When I asked him what he was crying about he answered, 'Because I'm black.'

"'I'm sorry you were ever born,' I replied. 'You might be as white as the driven snow and he just as big a fool as you are now.'"

The Rev. R. D. Stinson, Vice President of the Morris Brown College, explained that the Morris Brown College was founded in 1881 by the colored people of the State of Georgia for training colored youths and girls. The institution, he said, was located in the eastern section of Atlanta.

"The object of Morris Brown is to reach the boys and girls from the plantations," Mr. Stinson explained. "It is not our intention to make society people or to prepare young people for social functions or rush them into the cities, where they are too often destroyed by the temptations, but return them to their homes in the country from which they came, that they may become tillers of the soil. The poorest boys and girls as a rule prove to be most worthy in our schools, especially those who have been reared upon the farms with good, honest, Christian parents. The girls as a rule make the best women, housekeepers, or domestics not only for themselves, but in the service of others."

It was explained that $40,000 is greatly needed for a dormitory for the boys and a model home and laundry for the girls, and that Mr. Carnegie has already promised $12,500 if the remainder of the $40,000 is obtained. A collection for the fund was taken up.

STOLE CHURCH CRUCIFIXES.

Policeman Catches Three Young Burglars with $1,500 of Loot.

Policeman English of the Vernon Avenue Station, Brooklyn, was going along Marcey Avenue near Ellery Street early yesterday morning when he saw three young men about a block away, each carrying a heavily filled bag.

They saw him coming and dropping the bags, ran. English called upon them to halt, and fired several shots when they refused to obey. At Nostrand Avenue and Ellery Street the fugitives jumped into a wagon drawn up at the curbstone and hid in the bottom. It was there that English caught the trio, and kept them there at the point of his revolver until Policeman Hein, who was attracted by the shooting, ran up.

The prisoners were taken back to where they had dropped the bags. They contained the costly brass and copper goods and ornamental work, chiefly crucifixes, and other religious emblems. The prisoners refused to tell where the property had been obtained. They were taken to the police station. There they gave these names: Adolph Frank, 17 years old of 36 Floyd Street; William Callahan, 19 years old, and Thomas Rosso, 22, both of 24 Hopkins Street. The three were held on a technical charge of vagrancy.

Several hours later S. Markowsky, a manufacturer of ornamental brass and copper goods, at 477 Marcy Avenue, reported that his factory had been entered and property valued at $1,500 stolen. He identified the plunder as his. The prisoners will be arraigned in court.

During the absence of David Oppenheimer of 343 Bedford Avenue, Williamsburg, and his family, at a theatre on Saturday night, burglars jimmied their way into their flat and stole property valued at more than $500. The robbery was discovered on the return of the family after midnight.

MISS SHOEMAKER TO WED MR. WAGSTAFF

Guests Will Be Confined to Relatives, as the Bride's Family Is in Mourning.

ARRIVALS FROM EUROPE

Col. and Mrs. Watterson, Baron Lagercranz, and Gen. Kokoschinegg Reach Port—Mrs. Mackay Entertains.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Blanche Le Roy Shoemaker, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Shoemaker, to Alfred Wagstaff, Jr., eldest son of Col. Alfred Wagstaff and Mrs. Wagstaff of New York and Islip, Long Island.

Miss Shoemaker is a sister of Henry Wharton Shoemaker, whose engagement to Miss Beatrice Barclay, daughter of George B. Barclay, was announced in THE TIMES on Friday. Mr. Wagstaff is a brother of David Wagstaff, whose engagement to Miss Pauline French, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Tuck French, was announced some months ago. He is a Columbia graduate, a member of the Union and St. Anthony Clubs, and has recently returned from an automobile trip through Europe.

Miss Shoemaker, who made her début two years ago, is highly cultured and exceedingly handsome. Soon after her début she published "The Song of Youth," which received much favorable criticism. A later book of verse, "Woven of Dreams," written by her, is being brought out by John Lane.

Miss Shoemaker has traveled extensively abroad. Two years ago she was presented at the English Court. Two dances were given for her at her coming out, one at the St. Regis and the other at the Metropolitan Club. She is a sister of the late William B. Shoemaker, who married Miss Ella de Peyster.

On her mother's side, Miss Shoemaker is a granddaughter of the late Mr. Quiggle of Philadelphia, at one time Minister to Belgium.

Her father, H. F. Shoemaker, who retired from business three years ago, was for seventeen years Chairman of the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroad. The Shoemakers are an old Philadelphia family. Peter Shoemaker settled in Germantown in 1683. One of his descendants, Samuel Shoemaker, was three times Mayor of Philadelphia before the Revolutionary War.

The wedding of Miss Shoemaker and Mr. Wagstaff will take place soon. It will be celebrated at the Shoemaker home, 26 West Fifty-third Street. Relatives only will be asked, as the family is in mourning. Col. Wagstaff has already presented his son with a handsome country place at Islip as a wedding gift.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Barnes Boardman will go abroad on Wednesday next for a short trip on the Continent. They expect to open their house at Southhampton in July.

Among those who have recently taken cottages for the Summer at Lawrence and Cedarhurst, L. I., are Mr. and Mrs. Percy Hall Jennings, who have taken a house at Lawrence, and Mr. and Mrs. Davis Johnson, and Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Evans Mehan, who will be at Cedarhurst.

Mr. Charles B. Curtis, who has recently been appointed as Second Secretary of Legation to the Russian Embassy at St. Petersburg, will sail on Tuesday next for Russia.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Freeman will sail for Europe on Tuesday for an automobile trip in France and on the Continent.

MANY AUTO ARRESTS.

Long Island Police Take in Robert Goelet Among Others.

The Brooklyn Police Motor Squad from the Central office lay in wait at dusk yesterday at the Nassau County line on Long Island and captured many automobile chauffeurs for exceeding the speed limit. The majority of the arrests were made on the Hoffman Boulevard. In several cases the persons arrested were young men of wealth and social position.

The first person captured was Robert Goelet, who was guiding his own automobile containing a party of friends. He was heading for Hillside Avenue, and the policeman who arrested him said he was sending his machine along at the rate of thirty-two miles an hour. Mr. Goelet was taken to the police station at Jamaica, where he said he was twenty-eight years old and lived at Newport, R. I.

The motor police next stopped three automobiles containing men prominent in the affairs of the Standard Oil Company. There was a doubt about their cases, and they were permitted to go with a warning. Young Morris Pratt, steering a touring car, however, gave the police a long run, and was arrested charged with speeding at a rate of 33 miles an hour. He gave his address as 241 Clinton Avenue.

George Bodman, 28 years old, of 835 Madison Avenue, and George F. Baker of 258 Madison Avenue, each guiding a racing car filled with friends, were arrested, charged with running at 30 miles an hour. All of the persons arrested were released on bail and went on to Manhattan. Today they will be before Magistrate Healy in the Far Rockaway Court.

POLICE STILL ANXIOUS.

No Transfers Yesterday, but Many More Are Looked For.

So far as anybody could know, yesterday went by at 300 Mulberry Street without even the transfer of an ordinary patrolman, much less the reduction of an Inspector. Some of the force who haven't been touched by the lightning so far had fears on Saturday night that maybe Commissioner Bingham would put in the Sabbath arranging transfers.

New York was closed pretty tight yesterday, particularly in the precincts to which new commanders have been sent. In the divisions where the commanders haven't been touched—yet—there was a good deal of soldiering. Neither the commanders nor the men will do much hard work there until things are settled.

Capt. James McCafferty, the new head of the Detective Bureau, was early at Headquarters yesterday morning. An unusually large number of the staff was present. He gave out his assignments and then went home.

Special discount sale still in progress.

NEW YORK TEAMS PLAY FAST GAME

"Yankees" and "Giants" Make Good Early Season Showing with Excellent Prospects.

THREE SUNDAY GAMES

Chicago and Pittsburg Win in National League, St. Louis Defeats Chicago Americans.

The past week in baseball has afforded an opportunity for estimating the playing etrength of both New York clubs. The Yankees, owing to the defeat of Chicago yesterday by St. Louie, are now tied with Chicago and Cleveland for the lead in the American League race.

The Chicago champions still retain the lead in the National League, with New York a close second. Upon the form displayed so far this season the race for the pennant ehould lie between these two clubs, but early form is frequently deceptive, and later results do not alwaye bear out the earlier prospects.

St. Louis Defeats Chicago Champions In One-Sided Game, 9 to 1.

CHICAGO, April 21.—The St. Louis team reversed yesterday's result at the American League Park to-day, batting the Chicago pitchers at will and winning easily by the score of 9 to 1. Chicago's tally was the result of errors by Isbell and Rohe, and Howell, who was at his best, held the Chicago batters safe at all stages of the game. An immense crowd that overflowed the seating capacity of the park witnessed the contest. Whlte pitched eight lnnings for Chicago and wae hit safely eleven times, while three hits were made off Smith in the inning in which he pitched. Score:

Chicago Defeats Cincinnati Through Minahan's Wildness.

CINCINNATI, April 21.—Before the largest crowd that ever attended a baseball game in the Cincinnati ball park today Chicago defeated Cincinnati by the score of 5 to 3. Minahan's lack of control of the ball gave Chicago a winning lead in the early part of the contest. Cincinnati, by a batting rally, scored three runs in the sixth inning, but could not overcome Chicago's early lead. Chicago's victory was largely due to the batting of Schulte, who made two three-base hits at opportune times. Score:

NEWARK DOWNS "YANKEES."

Castleton Was Batted Hard and the Jersey Team Won, 12 to 3.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., April 21.—The New York Americans were defeated by the Newark Eastern League team in a one-sided contest at Weldenmayer's Park, Newark, this afternoon, by the score of 12 to 3. The "Yankees" were outplayed from the start, and the errors only added to the humiliation.

The Newark batters landed on Castleton from this out, and the scores were frequent for the home team, while the good fielding on the part of the locals kept the visitors from scoring any mure runs. Castleton finished the game for New York, while McCafferty took Pardee's place in the box in the fifth inning. Score:

Mertes Signs with Minneapolis.

CHICAGO, April 21.—Samuel Mertes, a controversy over whose services caused the National Baseball Commission to declare him a "free agent," has signed with the Minneapolis team of the American Association. He left for Louisville to-night to report to Manager Cantillon.

Police Raid Prevents Prizefight.

Acting Inspector Burfiend, accompanied by Detectives Feigel, Silk, Monahan, Enwright, and Coleman, descended upon 200 sports who had gathered in a hell on Cannon Street yesterday afternoon to witness a fifteen-round prizefight between "Sammy" Smith of Philadelphia and "Lew" Meyers of this city.

The Inspector and his men made their entrance into the place by smashing down the doors. Nobody was arrested because the contest had not been started and the police could not identify the two principals who were in the hall.

AUTOISTS ANXIOUS FOR CUP RACE NEWS

Conditions for Long Island Event May Be Announced This Week.

MORE STATE ASSOCIATIONS

Energetic Work Accomplished in West by Secretary Elliott — Pennsylvania Returns to A. A. A.

President W. H. Hotchkiss of the American Automobile Association and several other officers will be in town this week to attend the regular meeting of the Executive Committee. The meeting will be important in several respects, for besides the election of four or five new State organizations that have been formed within the laet two weeks and a few clubs, it is expected that some statement will be made by Chairman Frank B. Hower of the Touring Board regarding the objections that have been made aganst the rules for the Glidden Cup contest. It le not at all improbable that some information may also be vouchsafed to the American manufacturers who are preparing to build and enter cars for the Vanderbilt Cup contest of the changes contemplated in the rules to govern this year's contest.

Jefferson De Mont Thompson, Chairman of the Racing Board, said tbat he hoped to call a meeting of his committee thle week, and, if poselble, he will arrange it so that President Hotchkiss may attend. A meeting of the Long Island Motor Parkway will also be held this week. Plans were discussed at the meeting of the Plan and Scope Committee last week for building a slightly longer course for the big cup race than had at first been deemed poselble, and as practically all the details have been completed, a definite announcement may be made this week of the exact route for the racing circuit.

It was learned last week that, owing to the lack of positive information concerning the conditions for the race and the course, some manufacturere who had etarted to build new racing cars have etopped all work on them, pending more definite instructione about the race. The members of the Racing Board and the Directors of the Parkway have repeatedly stated that everything was progressing satisfactorlly for the big event, but the public, or that part of it which supports the event by entering cars, would like to know a few solid facts as to where and when and how it le proposed to hold the race.

The greatest work that has been done thus far by the new officere of the American Automobile Association has been in organizing and stimulating State work in different parts of the country. Secretary Frederick H. Elliott will return to the city to-day, after an absence uf nearly two weeks in the West. He has visited over a score of clubs, and succeeded in organizing State associations in Meryland, Indiana, Missouri, and Michigan. The Louisville Automobile Club of Kentucky held its annual meeting during the visit of Mr. Elliott, and voted to join the national body. As three clubs are necessary for a State organization the Louisville autoists are now endeavoring to secure the cooperation of other clubs in Kentucky for the purpose of joining the A. A. A. as a State body next month. Missouri has three clubs, St. Louis, Macon, and Kansas City. Maryland has three clubs, Baltimore, Hegerstown, and Roland Park, while Indiana has four, the Indiana Club of Indianapolis, Kokomo, South Bend, and Richmond.

RACING CAR FOR VANDERBILT.

Cup Donor Orders High-Powered Runabout in France for Parkway.

William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., during his recent visit to Europe, ordered a runabout that is guaranteed to maintain a speed of seventy-five miles an hour. Fifteen of these cars are now under construction, and it is said that ten of them have been reserved for Mr. Vanderbilt's friends. It is expected that they will be delivered early in the Fall, and the prospective owners are preparing to engage in a number of impromptu automobile brushes on the new Long Island Motor Parkway.

"It was at the suggestiun of Mr. Vanderbilt," said Paul Lacroix, the New York agent for the Renault cars, last week, "that the Renault Freres factory in France has decided to build this speciel type of racing runabout, developping sixty horse power. Only fifteen will be made and they will be similar in mechanical construction to the Grand Prix racer driven by Szisz last year when he won the trophy."

Automobile Notes of Interest.

Increased registration of automobiles has been noticed at the office of the Secretary of State in Albany for the first three months of the year, the license fees exceeding by nearly $3,500 the amount received for the same three months in 1906. Similar conditions have also been reported from Massachusetts, where the total number of registered cars is now 18,645.

At the recent annual meeting of the Massachusetts Automobile Association plens were made to erect 1,000 new signboards on the popular touring routes throughout the State. Elliott C. Lee of the Massachusetts Automobile Club of Boston was re-elected President.

Benjamin Briscoe, who left New York a short time ago for a visit to the Pacific Coast, is now touring in California. Ho reports unusuel motor activity all along the coast, the long-distance run between San Francisco and Los Angeles being particularly popular for tourists.

A. E. Schwartz, the foreign representative for the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association, has formed the American Auto Supply Comoany in Paris. It is expected that the place will become the headquarters for Americans while in Paris.

The St. Louis Car Company has just delivered to the "Gipsy King" of Kansas a unique motor vehicle. It is a combination of the old gypsy wagon and the modern motor car, and will be used by the gypsy chief and his family on their itinerant travels. The motor is of immense power, and, owing to the car's great weight, the wheels have been equipped with solid tires.

EXCELSIOR HANDICAP NEXT.

$10,000 Race at Jamaica on Friday Will Be Week's Feature.

The young racing season of New York, going into its second week to-day, brings the second of the important Spring handicaps as its racing feature on Friday, when at the opening of the Metropolitan Jockey Club's meeting the $10,000 Excelsior Handicap will be run. The Excelsior, like the Carter, has grown in importance, and this Spring promises to attract to the post the best field in its history. Like the Carter, it gives the promise of being a contest for seasoned horses from the Winter tracks, but there will be added to it horses trained on the Long Island tracks that have had the benefit of some little racing at Aqueduct, and the most prominent of these at present appear to be Dr. Gardner, a winner at Aqueduct, and De Mund, which, in epite of bis poor showing in the Carter, still holds a high place in the eeteem of horsemen. Other horses that are new to racing this Spring that are regarded as likely starters are Dandelion, Hot Toddy, and J. C. Core.

It has been decided by the Farrell-Sullivan-Johnson stable, trained by F. D. Weir, that Roseben shall not bo sent out for the Excelelor, the preference being for Dr. Gardner, which is intended to carry T. D. Sullivan's jacket in the race, while Roseben will be reserved for the Metropolitan, to be run at Belmont Park two weeks later. The determination concerning Roseben does not mean, however, tbat the great sprinter will remain in retirement until the Metropolitan, as the stable has an idea of sending Roeeben for the Storling Stakes, in wbicb he will have to carry 127 pounds, and the prospects are that only a moderate field will oppose him, the best of the horses that seem likely to start including Don Delgo, Ampedo, and Oxford, with a possibility tbat Jamee R. Keene may send out Superman or Zambesi.

Gaelic Football at Celtic Park.

Gaelic football was the feature at yesterday's second annual picnic of the County Louth Young Men's Football Club, held at Celtic Park, Long Island, when the Meath Football Club defeated the Armagh Football Club by the score of 8 to 1, and the Louth Football Club won from Kildare by 4 to 1.

Camerons Win Close "Soccer" Game.

The Cameron "soccer" football team yesterday defeated the steamship Philadelphia eleven at Van Cortlandt Park in a well-played game by the score of 1 to 0. Neither side scored during the first half, the goal being negotiated by Goodman near the end of the game.

Sailors No Match for Camerons.

The Steamship Carmenia Association football team was no match for the Cameron Reserves yesterday at Van Cortlandt Park and suffered defeat by 6 goals to 1. Tho sailor players led at the end of the first half 1—0, but went to pieces in the second half.

Handicap Shoots at Larchmont Traps.

The weekly competition for the Sauer and Fleishmann Trophies yesterday at the Larchmont traps brought out a big squad of gunners. E. L. C. Robins, with a handicap of 2, won a leg on the Sauer Trophy by breaking 45 targets out of 50. The shoot for the Fleishmann Cup resulted in a tie between A. B. Alley and E. G. Unitt, both of whom broke 43 targets. The summary:

Sauer Trophy, Handicap, 50 Targets.—E. L. C. Robins, (2,) 20, 23—45; A. B. Alley, (4,) 17, 22—43; R. Cobden, (8,) 21, 13—34; E. G. Unitt, (4,) 20, 20—44; J. A. Pisani, (2,) 20, 17—39; E. S. Ballou, (scratch,) 20, 18—38; F. W. Perkins, (2,) 14, 22—38; Van R. Wheeler, (14,) 8, 10—32.

Fleishmann Cup, Handicap, 50 Targets.—A. B. Alley, (2,) 21, 20—43; E. G. Unitt, (5,) 18, 20—43; J. A. Pisani, (0,) 21, 21—42; J. B. Collins, (2,) 22, 17—41; F. W. Perkins, (0,) 18, 18—36; E. S. Ballou, (0,) 22, 16—38; E. L. C. Robins, (0,) 16, 17—33; R. Cobden, (5,) 17, 14—31; F. F. Proctor, Jr., (14,) 10, 9—33; W. C. Doane, (14,) 8, 6—28; T. S. Flint, (14,) 12, 12—38; J. A. Morrison, (8,) 12, 15—35; Van R. Wheeler, (19,) 9, 10—33.

"MATT" HICKS DEAD.

One of the First Catchers to Get Under the Bat.

"Matt" Hicks, an old time baseball player, who played with the old New York Mutuals and the Cincinnati Red Stockinge, and who is credited witb being the first man to catch off the bat, was found dced in a room in Naegele's Hotel, at Third and Hudsbn Streets, Hoboken yesterday morning. He lived at 926 Garden Street, Hoboken.

He was in charge of the billiard room at the hotel. He went to bed at the hotel Saturday night about 11 o'clock. In the morning a strong odor of gas was detected and traced to the room Hicks occupied. One jet was found burning and the other turned on full, but unlighted. It le supposed he turned on both and lit but one. Hicks was 62 years old.

Marshall Plays Against Thirty-four.

Frank J. Marshall, who will represent the United Statee in the forthcoming masters' championship tournament at Ostend, gave his farewell performance at the rooms of the Lyceum Chess Club in the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum, Willoughby and Myrtle Avenues, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon and evening, when thu young master encountered no less than thirty-four players simultaneously. Play lested from 3:30 P. M. to 7:30 P. M., and at the close of the four hours' session it was found that the expert had won from 28, lost to 3, and drawn against the remaining 3. Those who won their games against the master were D. Jaeger, J. Baum, M. Jacobs, R. Mayer, and F. Biedenkapp. Drawn games were scored by C. Benedict, J. Norwood, and C. Marshall, a brother of the star. The others who took boards were C. Schneider, W. Thumann, R. Albert, M. Ferle, C. P. Swaffield, A. Buerger, S. B. Brennan, H. C. Davis, B. Marshall, N. Buehler, A. Steer, S. Schlesinger, I. Annaple, E. Partsnheimer, A. Bonsel, G. Greger, J. Norton, C. Chaper, A. Beylich, R. Hogan, B. Franklin, I. F. Wenzel, J. McNally, and C. Martin.

Picked Up from the Diamond.

"Jimmy" Callahan, manager of the Logen Square semi-professional baseball team of Chicago, has completed arrangements by which Mike Donlin, formerly with the New York Giants, will become a member of his team during the present season. A waiver on Donlin's services, which was held by Manager Kelly of the Artesians, has been secured by Callahan, so that nothing prevents Donlin from playing with the Logan Squares.

Manager "Connie" Meck of the Athletics has already had a Spring housecleaning, and as a result four of his young players will go back to the minors. The four include Lelivelt, Nebring, and Cunningham, who go to Hartford of the Connecticut League, and Foster to Harrisburg of the Tri-State League. O'Connor, the pitcher, who was injured at Woodbury, is again around and in good shape.

"Cap" Anson is to be a real "semi-pro" baseball magnate, despite the efforts of Chicago property owners to stop the completion of his new ball park. Judge Honore has dissolved the injunction by which the old Chicago first baseman and Captain has been restrained from completing his grand stand, and the work of completion has been resumed with double force. As a result of the trouble and inconvenience he has been put to by his opponents, Anson says he has bsen damaged to the extent of $11,800, for which amount he has brought suit.

Since the opening of the present baseball season the players of the two leagues have scored 337 runs and 605 hits, with a total of 164 errors. The American League leads with 189 runs, against 148 by the National League. In hits the Americans lead by the totals of 349 to 256. The American League players have hed 84 errors charged up against them, whils the Nationals have been guilty of 80 misplays.

BANKING SUGGESTIONS.

There is no precedent for the last fortnight's increase of $62,300,000 in the loans of the Associated Banks. If the bank statement were a reflex of conditions in trade or upon the Exchanges it would be necessary to look for some great disturbance, but nothing of the sort is known, and the changes are inconsistent with an inactive and declining stock market, and a relaxing money market. There appears no reason to doubt that the bank statement indicated no corresponding change of conditions, but merely an alteration in the official report of them. That is to say, there was no such increase in loans, but merely a transfer from non-reporting to reporting institutions.

Such incidents have been too common for this one to call for especial notice were it not that no opportunity should be lost to impress upon all concerned the necessity that New York should have a Clearing House which should fairly report New York's monetary conditions to the Nation, and, indeed, to the world, for the world takes note of New York now as never before. It is this which lends such timeliness to Mr. SCHENCK'S article in THE TIMES'S Financial Review of the 15th. The London Clearing House was organized only twenty years before our own, but while the London Clearing House has added to its duties the New York Clearing House has lessened its own. The London Clearing House has known how to attract to itself both the Bank of England and the joint stock banks, and to extend its functions to the clearing of both local and country banks, this last having been accomplished within a month. The New York Clearing House, on the other hand, has driven out the trust companies, and has neglected to extend its functions to the clearing of country checks.

We have never questioned the motives with which the banks undertook to discipline the trust companies, and we assume that even the promoters of the plan which divided New York's financial community regret the results. It is another error of judgment, we think, which leads the banks and trust companies alike to buy deposits by paying interest upon them, rather than by enlarging the banking service rendered to depositors. Perhaps it is a counsel of prefection that no deposits should be bought with interest, but at least they should be bought prudently. It would be interesting to know upon what theory a fixed rate is paid for deposits, regardless of the money market. The banks cannot welcome millions thrust upon them simply because the institutions depositing them in the banks cannot make them profitable in the money market. How, then, can the banks make them profitable? It would be simple and rational self-defense to mark down the rate upon deposits with the money market. Also, it would be good business to attract deposits by banking service which should cost the banks less than it would cost their customers, the margin affording a good profit. But, instead of attracting deposits by banking service, they are repelled by excessive charges upon check collections, to the annoyance of individual depositors, and, in the aggregate, to a diminution of New York's banking resources. New York is the natural clearing centre of the United States, but New York banks, instead of fostering a natural advantage, adopt a policy which drives New England banks to deposit in Philadelphia, and which enables even Pittsburg banks to canvass New York for business repelled by the policy under criticism.

It can hardly be necessary to contend in support of banking practices timeapproved in England, and which have precedents in the United States as well. The Boston Clearing House clears for New England. The Cleveland banks credit country checks as cash for the banks in several adjoining States. They find it profitable. The Cleveland banks in 1906 earned 3.67 per cent., and the Philadelphia banks 3.06 per cent., against 2.94 per cent. earned on the same items by New York banks. Undoubtedly it would be expensive and troublesome for the New York banks to do as the banks of other cities do. But they ought not to complain of trouble in the way of business if it is profitable, especially if it strengthens a banking situation which has elements of obscurity, if not of weakness, in its constitution. A united Clearing House, embracing all the city's financial institutions, and methods of banking approved by experience, are the best remedies for bank statements which are not disturbing only because they are everything bank statements should not be.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

Many of us are scandalized and somewhat horrified by the duration and the cost of the Thaw trial, and revolted by its lame and impotent conclusion. Some of us have been holding up for admiration the British procedure. The London newspapers are unanimous, and doubtless correct in saying that such a failure of justice as the Thaw trial, with the introduction of impudent and illegal irrelevancies by counsel, could not have occurred in Great Britain.

It is just at this time that a bill introduced into the House of Commons by the British Attorney General lets us know that the British procedure is by no means completely satisfactory at home. The Attorney General introduces it with the confession that "justice had blundered. Enterprising newspapers had rushed in where jurists feared to tread. Retrial by newspaper had taken the place of a rehearing before a judicial tribunal." The proposal is for the establishment of a Court of Criminal Appeal. It will have power, if the bill becomes law, to go over the whole case, not to order a new trial, but to determine whether, upon a review of an entire case, taking into consideration issues of fact and law, a conviction ought to stand.

It is plain that such a tribunal is needed. We have it. Our complaint is that there are too many chances for appeals and reviews, not too few. The British complaint is that there are practically none, excepting an appeal to the Home Secretary. That appeal will still remain. But the Home Secretary will be so fortified by the judgment of the new tribunal that his duties will be less onerous and less responsible.

Apparently the new tribunal will be able to repair the admitted miscarriages of British justice. Such a case as the Maybrick case, in which the presiding Judge was of unsound mind and shortly after became a downright lunatic; as the Edalji case, in which there is grave reason to believe that the police were able to force the conviction of an innocent man, and many others attest the necessity of some appellate tribunal in criminal cases such as already exists in civil cases.

SAPIENCE FROM ST. LAWRENCE.

Assemblyman MERRITT comes from St. Lawrence County. He addressed the Westchester County Bar Association at Delmonico's Saturday night, stoutly defending the Public Utilities bill and advocating its enactment without any change whatever, to the end that the perfect work of the wise authors of the measure may not be marred. From Mr. MERRITT'S speech we make one extract that bears the stamp of current up-the-State philosophy and embodies the seminal principle of prevailing political and economic thought:

> The cry against these bills does not come from the operating departments of railroads or public service lighting companies to any great extent. It comes from the financial district—from what we know as Wall Street—a region in which men deal and speculate in profits; where they hold the skimmer and take off the cream of every enterprise. Those of us who live outside the City of New York, up the State, appreciate as men in the City of New York do not appreciate that every county in this State pays tribute to this magnificent city. All the wealth here is produced outside. Our farms and factories and mines and quarries and water powers are making a ceaseless effort to add to the greatness and the splendor of this imperial city. Sometimes gentlemen who speculate in profits imagine that they are doing business. This is a harmless hallucination.
> Four million and a half city drones supported by some four million country workers. Here the opera, the playhouse, the dance, jewels, and foaming wine, a ceaseless round of pleasure and idleness. Outside the bent and aching back, the stiffened muscles, the painful toil of farm and shop, of mine and forest that pays all the bills and keeps us going. Are these conditions real or imaginary?
>
> New York is the greatest manufacturing city in the United States. In 1905 there were in the city 20,839 manufacturing establishments, with a capital of $1,042,946,487, employing 465,366 wage-earners, to whom $248,138,259 was paid in wages, using materials costing $818,029,267 and turning out products valued at $1,526,523,006. In that year the manufacturing products of the entire State were valued at $2,488,345,579. Three-fifths of that great total was produced by the idlers and parasites of New York City.
> Now, as to the acquiescent silence of the operating departments of the public service corporations. The operating force is not concerned with the law. Fair wages and reasonable salaries will secure men to run a railroad or a lighting plant under any sort of law. In the mind of Mr. MERRITT the atrocious crime of owning bonds or shares or of being an officer or Director of a service corporation is inseparably connected with flagrant frequentation of Wall Street and hourly companionship with the ticker. Let them rave, they are only dealers and speculators in profits. We of the yeomanry produce their wealth and we are going to force them to adopt our ideas in running their business.
>
> A good many of the men engaged in managing service corporations are not speculators, not habitués of Wall Street, not idlers, not lawbreakers. They are sober-minded, just, industrious, experienced, and they believe that Mr. MERRITT'S Public Utilities bill should not be rushed to enactment upon the sole assurance of its authors that it is perfect and salutary. It brings into existence new and untried powers of regulation and control and it intrusts these powers to newly created administrative bodies with legislative and judicial functions, whose orders, it is intended, shall not be subject to court review save on grounds of constitutionality. A change of State policy so sudden and violent, under the guidance of men quite unacquainted with corporation affairs and management, is a matter of grave concern to the owners of hundreds of millions of property. Their disquietude is increased when suggestions of amendment to the bill are met with sneers about the non-producers of New York City and the speculators in profits of Wall Street.
>
> The plain truth is that the legislators who drew this bill much underestimated the importance of their work. These broad powers, vitally affecting the public welfare and vast property interests, they would commit into the hands of third and fourth rate men, for only third and fourth rate men could be got to accept an office short in its term and ill-paid, of which the incumbent would be subject to arbitrary removal whenever a scheming partisan Governor might want to make these powerful Commissions a part of his political machine. As it now reads, the Utilities bill is a blind, reckless, dangerous project of law.
>
> The amendments proposed by the City Club not only embody wise changes, but constitute a telling criticism of the defects of the measure. If adopted, they would lift the Commissions to a position of dignity, independence, and stability. They raise the salaries to $15,000, increase the term to ten years, with the age limit now applicable to judicial offices, and give a Commissioner the right to appear and make answer to charges before an order of removal can take effect. This would stay the hand of a Governor planning to make vacancies for his political retainers, compelling him to give valid and sufficient reasons for removal, reasons that would stand public examination as to their truth and good faith. The other amendments, providing a method of determining the amount of penalties for disobeying orders of the Commission and making penalties collective in the First District payable into the City Treasury, are equally just and reasonable. It is not easy to believe that either Gov. HUGHES or the legislative leaders will fail to give open-minded consideration to amendments that would correct manifest defects of a measure of which the structural principles are so widely opposed.

ONE OF THE DREAMS OF PEACE.

Discussions here preliminary to the second Hague Congress have thrown much light on international arbitration, but the ultimate purpose of the peacemakers, revealed in an unreported portion of Representative BARTHOLDT'S address, means more than arbitration, more than academic arguments for peace, interrupted by occasional warfare. Mr. BARTHOLDT was discussing international law, which, he declared, was non-existent:

> What is called international law is nothing more than a compilation by GROTIUS and others of axioms and precedents which may, indeed, serve as a guide, but which no nation is bound to observe, and which is not law at all, because it has never received Parliamentary enactment anywhere. What we must secure is a codification of this so-called law which every Government shall participate in, and ratify by Parliamentary enactment; and the establishment of a court by which they shall be bound hereafter.
>
> Establishment of a Central Government which might be called "The United States of the World" would seem to be the crux of the peace movement, since the codification and enactment of international law by the nations to govern an international court in which all should be represented can mean no less. This suggestion, as was logical, preceded Mr. CARNEGIE'S proposal of a world police to enforce the law of nations.
>
> This magnificent project, seen as in a dream, vaguely, will hardly be realized by the next Hague Congress, which will not even be permitted to consider such vital matters as the limitation of armaments, or the Drago Doctrine, but it is worth setting forth, and will doubtless be cherished carefully by those who prefer lofty ideals to practical matters of fact.

THE ITALIAN IMMIGRANT.

In these times, when wholesale arrests are being made among the armed Italian population, an article in Appleton's Magazine by GAETANO D'AMATO, Deputy Chief of the Bureau of Licenses of this city, deserves more than passing notice. The article has been read in manuscript by the Italian Ambassador in Washington, Signor DES PLANCHES, and bears his indorsement. The writer is an American citizen of Italian birth. His whole theme is built on the proposition that the prejudice of the Italian to-day is a survival of Know-Nothingism. He cleverly argues against the accepted theory that the educational test for immigrants is the best protection for the United States.

There is no doubt that the Northern Italian seeking admittance here is on a par with the best immigrants from other countries. The illiteracy of the Southern Italian is offset, Signor D'AMATO thinks, by his love of home and family, his loyalty to employer, his honesty in his business dealings, his natural genius of adaptability, his joy in work, and his splendid health, strength, and physical endurance. In other words, he is the raw material out of which the best citizen may be made. His womankind, in love of home, domestic industry, and faithfulness, the author considers above reproach. No Italian woman, he declares, has ever been arrested in New York for street walking. Their children, under proper guidance, may become the most valuable supporters of American institutions.

But this raw material should be quickly taken in hand, for it brings with it the perilous assumption that individual thought and action are more effective than, if not superior to, the law of the land. For the eradication of this error the methods of Italian life in this city are not inviting. Italians colonize in tenement districts, and there maintain "Little Italies" in which the criminally skillful wield a power never exercised on the Peninsula or in Sicily. The Italian Government knows the name, occupation, and family history of every subject. The immigrant in coming here passes from under the paternal Government of his native land and accepts as a necessity that of the criminal padrone, whose object it is to keep him in ignorance of the protection extended to the individual under American laws and the advantages which may be derived through contact with American institutions. American Italian colonies thus become fruitful fields of operation for those intelligent Italian criminals who over here are more or less free from police surveillance.

The Italian of Southern Italy is, according to Signor D'AMATO, worthy of a better fate. He digs our tunnels and ditches, cleans our streets, and performs the menial tasks which forty years ago were done by the Irish. His one crime of quick anger, unpremeditated and open, is inherent in the Southern blood and breed, and may be eradicated in time, under the influence of the lesson that an appeal to law is better and nobler than an appeal to personal passion.

THE BRONX SEWER JOKER.

Are there, or are there not, brackets around certain words in the proposed amendments to the law regarding the sewer altering the drainage of the Bronx Valley from the Sound to the Hudson? There is a pretty game of hide and seek going on between the two houses of the Legislature to find where the brackets were inserted, and where they were dropped, and why. Words have been juggled with often enough, or rather too often, but now, by the manipulation of punctuation, laws are altered affecting important matters.

New York City's chief interest is that filth shall not be dumped into New York's harbor and rivers, but matters of pure water and navigation are not thrilling, and New York may not wake up to what this law means before it is too late.

This merry jest about the brackets possesses a certain piquancy. The joke is likely to cost the taxpayers a quarter of a million dollars, or perhaps $750,000, but that is a mere detail. The supporters of the scheme, which is objectionable on sanitary grounds, are asking for more money, enough to carry the assessments of the places concerned in the Bronx Valley up to 30 per cent. in some cases. Knowledge of this fact may perhaps induce them to be merciful to others, inasmuch as it would be a result of being merciful to themselves. Town's which might be entirely willing to divert their sewage upon other communities, at an economy to themselves, may develop other views if they find that the cost to themselves is more than they had reckoned, and more than the cost of being decent. It is not neighborly to shake carpets in back yards in the open-window season, and there are similar ethics about the disposal of sewage.

KNIVES NOT YET SEIZED.

The alarming and alleged fact that 16,000 aliens in New York carry deadly weapons finds support in the collection of a cartload at Police Headquarters. The universal approval of this contribution to the safety and sanity of daily life leads to the hope that something similar might be done in the political world.

New York is not the only State where deadly political weapons should be gathered in. The knives that the friends of FORAKER and TAFT are swinging so wildly in Ohio are dangerous to the very life of the Republican Party. The internecine combat between Messrs. BRYAN and HEARST is tearing the Democracy to pieces in every State where Mr. HEARST is incorporated, and it is shocking to think of the dollars he may be compelled to shed if somebody does not do something in aid of Mr. HEARST'S exhausted editors. It would probably be impossible to check Mr. LA FOLLETTE long enough in his career around the circle to disarm him, but unless something is done in Wisconsin the result may be disastrous. All these cases—and there are others—are difficult to deal with, because they are so far from coming under the concealed weapons law. The knives, axes, and big sticks are carried upon the most protuberant parts of the respective proprietors, and their threats are bloodcurdling. Let us have peace, at least until 1908.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Hearing Good Advice.

It is hard to see how the Board of Education can refuse to admit the adequacy of the arguments against supplying free eyeglasses to the public school children that have been submitted to it. When men who speak on such questions with the authority of Dr. DEVINE and Dr. FRANKEL declare that assistance of this sort would be "unnecessary, unwise, and demoralizing," it ought to carry great weight with all who have given less thought to the involved problems—and that means almost everybody.

None should forget, however, that these antagonists of free spectacles from the city were in full agreement with Supt. MAXWELL and the others advocating the plan in recognizing the importance of rectifying eyesight defects in the young. About that there is no doubt whatever, since inability to see clearly and easily has most disastrous consequences, many direct and many more indirect. The only controversy is as to whether the city should provide the needed glasses at public expense, or whether the parents should be educated into realizing, or coerced into meeting, their obligations toward their offspring. If one or the other of these things cannot be done, then the duty of the city will be plain—it simply cannot afford to let something like 30 per cent. of the public school children grow up under a serious handicap—a handicap that not only will deprive them of their rightful share in the education offered to all, but may injuriously affect for life their health, their character, and their industrial efficiency. If the parents will not buy the glasses, the city should; if they will, then it shouldn't.

And it is no wonder that the representatives of the big charitable organizations are alarmed by the announcement that children can get properly adjusted glasses at an expense of about $1 each. It would be interesting to know who has offered to do the work at that price, and then to hear what a board of competent oculists would say about the way in which it would probably be done. Many glasses would be required which simply could not be made for two or three times that amount, even after the right prescription had been obtained. "Beware the optician!" is a cry that should be constantly sounded while this subject is under discussion—uttered, of course, with an understanding that the optician, while he remains in his own field, is an entirely commendable and necessary person, with great achievements to his credit and worthy of all honor and gratitude.

Warring on the Kindergarten.

One of the special cable dispatches printed in THE TIMES yesterday brought the certainly curious and perhaps amusing information that the Prussian Government has found it necessary to close the public kindergarten in Charlottenburg, a suburb of Berlin, because of the discovery that the children attending it were becoming infected with—the doctrines of Socialism!

Our correspondent strongly intimated that the Government's action was much more in the way of punishing the parents than of protecting the children, for the latter, in the kindergarten, learned nothing except games and the simpler mechanical arts, and, therefore, must have acquired their Socialistic notions, if they had them, somewhere else. This, it seems, they might easily have done, to the extent of their infantile ability, for Charlottenburg is not only the seat of a great porcelain manufacture, but it contains a big technical academy, most of the students in which are devoted followers of Herr BEBEL, as are a large majority of the porcelain workers.

Just what is to be effected, therefore, by closing the kindergarten, it is hard to see, since even if the teachers in it did lecture their toddling charges on the theories of MARX and LASELLE, they would hear nothing which they did not hear at home. It looks a good deal as if the closing of the school were the work of some particularly stupid member of the bureaucracy, incapable of distinguishing between defense of the State and the petty persecution of those whom he considered its enemies.

As the Prussian Government is itself not a little Socialistic in its tendencies, at least as judged by such conservative countries as the United States, it might be expected to approve of a kindergarten where the children were prepared for a life passed in dependence on the Government in many fields of activity which an American feels capable of cultivating for himself. There are in Germany, however, two kinds of Socialism—that of the Government and that of the people. There is no very obvious difference between them, and yet they maintain an air of deadly hostility, as if they had nothing in common!

Sicilians and Calabrians.

"Sicily," according to one of our correspondents, "has always been a great and glorious country, and a great factor in the welfare of Italy," and then, for the purpose, no doubt, of bringing to a close the current controversy over the relative merits of the different brands of Italians, he added, "All those qualities attributed to Sicilians must instead be attributed (and so are in Italy and out of Italy) to that disgrace of Italy, the Calabrian Provinces, whose history has nothing to compare with the glorious past and present of Sicily."

All this, it seems to us, is a rather unnecessary complication of the fact which our correspondent really wanted to present—the fact that there are some good Sicilians. We do not know that anybody has been absurd enough to deny that. Of course there are, lots of them.

Nevertheless, neither the island nor the islanders, as a whole, have the best of reputations, in or out of Italy. It and they have not a little history, but we do not recall any of it, even in the early Greek days, that was particularly "glorious." As for the Calabrian Provinces, they are not close to Sicily or inhabited by much the same sort of people for nothing. In the one as in the other, there is a dreadful deal of surviving mediaevalism, and the passions turn easily and promptly to homicide.

Anti-Vivisection.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read with keen interest the paragraph in yesterday's TIMES in regard to the bill regulating vivisection, now before the Assembly at Albany. I was especially struck by the statement, quoted from a physician speaking against the bill, that if vivisection as now carried on were restricted, human vivisection would be likely to follow. There is already some startling testimony anent human vivisection in this and other countries, which I think can be had for ten cents by applying to Mr. Francis Rowley, 163 Winter Street, Fall River, Mass.

I cannot but think the physicians opposing this bill at Albany may be as little conversant with the abuses which have called it forth, as a thoughtful, humane, and highly cultivated physician whom I met recently, who had written an article defending vivisection, but who did not know of Mantegazza's "Machine of Torment," or the breaking of the backs of dogs by Dr. B. A. Watson of Jersey City. The latter experiments were condemned in the London Times, and by the then (1896) President of the American Academy of Medicine, who said that such experiments aroused in him "a sickening, goading sense of shame."

ASCENDING COAL PRICES

As a Reason for Not Opposing Mr. Roosevelt's Regulative Policies.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have been a constant reader of your paper for several years, but it seems to me you do not realize the force of sentiment behind the President in his action to attempt to regulate the Trust conditions, nor do you realize the exactions which these combinations are enforcing.

One of the worst of these combinations is the combination of coal carrying railroads, and unless something is done to stop the continued advance in price and the arbitrary methods of controlling the sale of the product, many of the large plants in the City of New York will be seriously crippled. The prices on coal have been raised almost every year in the past ten years, not only on sizes for home use, known as the prepared sizes, but also on the sizes for steam use. Pea coal, which seven or eight years ago sold at $2.90 a ton, now costs $3.85; No. 1 Buckwheat, which used to be $2.55, is now $3.35, and the smaller sizes have also been raised about 80 cents a ton during this period.

In addition to this, the railroads charge arbitrarily 3 cents a ton for trimming, where the cost in many instances is not over ½ cent. There is absolutely no competition as to price, and the terms of payment are rigidly fixed, a draft being drawn for the cost of the freight as soon as the coal has passed the scales.

Further than this, the railroad companies do not supply sufficient facilities to carry the coal to market, and for months this Winter it has been a case of "touch and go" to get any coal at all. Shippers complain that their boats have been waiting for weeks trying to get loaded, and few of them will make contracts for the coming year because they are unable to obtain any reasonable assurance from the railroad companies.

The conditions as outlined are a serious menace to the operation of power plants in New York, and unless we can obtain reasonable and prompt Government supervision, free from unnecessary delays in courts, it will become a matter of necessity to the people of New York to insist that the railroads and anthracite coal companies be controlled directly by their elected representatives.

In view of this condition of affairs, of which the coal companies are only a sample, it seems to me that THE TIMES is making a mistake in upholding those who are opposing the President in his efforts toward Government control.

CHANCE FOR SURPLUS WEALTH.

Some Might Be Sent to the Famine Sufferers in China.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your edition of April 13 I find a dispatch from Shanghai, to which your news editor prefixed these harrowing headlines: "Five Thousand Die Daily by Chinese Famine—Graves Rifled of Bodies—Parents Exchange Children to be Eaten—Corpses Lie by Roadside—Relief Funds Nearing Exhaustion—Ten Millions Needed!"

A second dispatch, dated at Shanghai yesterday, gives further sickening details—the peasants living on "the green scum from the ponds, white clay, and the hulls of rice; farmers falling down from weakness at the city gates and lying on the road an entire day before death put an end to their suffering, and villagers failing dead at their own doorsteps from starvation."

Turning to another page of Saturday's issue, I note how John D. Rockefeller has been saying "soft nothings" and sending his congratulations to his good friend, Andrew Carnegie, apropos of the successful dedication of the latter's Pittsburg institute, to which, of course, Mr. Carnegie responded in kind, with a reference to their common task of "distributing surplus wealth"!

While this is all very well, might one suggest at this critical period less pelting each other with flowers of rhetoric on the part of these earnest patriots, and the turning of their attention for a time to the terrible scenes in the East. What are ten million dollars to these plutocrats? Mr. Carnegie has just said that he could not realize that his institute had cost him six millions! Let him join hands with his "fellow-worker" in feeding these starving millions, and they will not only imitate the example of One who went about doing good, but bring down blessings upon the land whose free institutions made the accumulation of their wealth possible.

It is time that they should realize, if they have not done so already, what a fearful weight of responsibility is resting upon them. As regards these starving millions they literally hold, be it said with all reverence, "the issues of life and death."

If this suggestion should to some savor of Socialism, in the words of Patrick Henry, let them "make the most of it!"

OUR KINDLY CUSTOMS.

Plaint from an American Newly Returned to the Land of the Free.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I want to thank you feelingly for your editorial in to-day's issue "Baggage Examination." Its language is strong, but not strong enough to express my own feelings. I have just returned from a year's absence in Europe. While there we had the home Custom House served up to us an nauseam. Our English cousins, who have considerable relish for any American weakness, were untiring in their reminders of it.

When we arrived in New York, as I gave my "declaration" the official said, "I have a pleasant announcement to make to you. You are offered by the department the courtesies of the port." This was comforting, and I thought the Custom House is not so bad as it is painted. As a large family we had eight trunks for our year's service abroad. We reached the dock about 8 o'clock, and were kept there till midnight. Everything that we possessed was opened and gone through. A San Francisco friend who was called home hurriedly because of the earthquake requested me to get for her a dresssuit case she had left in London. The key had been attached to the case, but had been lost. I explained the circumstances to the officer, but there was no relenting. A mechanic was sent for, and that bag was torn open with hammer and chisel and then passed. I felt humiliated by the whole transaction, and I think every American citizen on the steamer felt in the same way. We were treated as a company of scoundrels who were bent on cheating the Government.

In a year's travel through Europe we suffered absolutely no inconvenience from the Custom House. Our first step into our own land plunged us at once into this shameful situation. You justly say the treatment is "serious enough to constitute a public abuse." I devoutly wish your protest might reach the ear of the authorities. If they knew the shame that all traveling Americans feel for their own Custom House something would be done about it promptly. C.

PEARL DUTY FIGHT AGAIN.

Appraisers to Hear the Tiffany and Citroen Appeals To-day.

Many witnesses from the Maiden Lane jewelry district have been summoned to attend the hearing which will begin today before the Board of General Appraisers on the protest of Bernard Citroen, the Parisian jeweler, against an assessment of $110,000 in customs duties on a collection of pearls which he carried with him when he arrived in New York in June of last year. This will reopen a new battle over the necklace question that in one form or another has for a number of years troubled the jewelry trade. The difference between the amount which the Government demands and that which the importers are willing to pay is one-half of the value of the articles imported. The full amount of the duty imposed by the Government has already been deposited.

William B. Leeds was the purchaser of the Citroen pearls and Morris Guggenheim of the Tiffany pearls. It is admitted that each assemblage of pearls, on reaching New York, was strung into a necklace for the purchaser's wife. Mr. Guggenheim has testified that he selected his pearls in the Tiffany store in Paris and that they were strung into a necklace in the New York store.

In the Leeds case, the Government believes that it has an additional strong argument in evidence that Mrs. Leeds wore the necklace in Paris before importation, and that the only time these pearls were not a necklace since they was when they were unstrung for the purpose of importation.

The Government claims that these collections of pearls, although not strung at the time of importation, really constituted necklaces, the mere omission of a string not being important, and that the duty should be 60 per cent.

W. Wickham Smith, who will appear for Mr. Citroen, will contend that the customs officers have no authority to pass upon imports except as to their actual condition at the time of importation, not being material what the articles were before such importation or what they become afterward, and that the duty should be only 10 per cent.

Reckless Drivers of Motor Cars.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Please permit me to indorse the letter published to-day, signed "Liberty Not License," concerning the speed of autos on St. Nicholas Avenue. As a resident of that section, I have continually seen, at all hours of the day and night, the ridiculousness and fiendishness of the autoists. Those familiar with St. Nicholas Avenue know it is a favorite route for driving of all kinds, and I will venture to say half the automobiles which pass exceed the speed rule and very many go at a terrific pace.

I would commend the good work of the bicycle policemen along that route, as many arrests are made and some at great hazard, but think special steps should be taken to check this dangerous practice on an avenue frequented so much by pedestrians and many children. WASHINGTON HEIGHTS.

Two Tax Rates on Mortgages.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Many weeks ago the Senate Committee on Taxation reported the bill permitting holders of mortgages recorded prior to July 1, 1906, to come in and pay a tax of one-half of 1 per cent. and thus exempt such mortgages from personal taxation. Since then nothing further appears to have been done by the Legislature in reference to this matter. As the session will probably end in a couple of weeks, would it not be well for those interested to wake up and urge this matter? Otherwise we shall continue to have two different rates of taxation upon mortgages, an absurd condition of affairs. Will you kindly call attention to this matter? GUARDIAN.

Inauguration of Washington.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There was a three days' centennial celebration in New York in the Spring of 1889 in connection with the erection of the arch in Washington Square. Will you kindly inform me, as no one in New York seems to know, what event was the object of the commemoration?

Camp John Smith, of Course.

From The Army and Navy Journal.

Col. Philip Reade asks: "What ought the name of the Twenty-third Infantry Regiment camp at the Ter-Centennial Jamestown Exposition to be? Answering my own question, I decide that the name shall be prominently identified with the early aboriginal occupants of that region, preferably a male individual, rather than a geographical division. No such name as 'Camp Robert E. Lee' should be given; too recent; might be deemed historically inappropriate, because identified with with a too recent period. Such names as 'Camp Washington,' 'Camp Mount Vernon,' savor of a period posterior to colonial occupancy. The names of Powhattan and Pocanontas have already been appropriated in connection with the exposition. Such names as 'Opequam,' 'Roanoke,' &c., are not as fitting as personal names like 'Opecancanough,' the Pontiac and Tecumseh of his period. If the duty devolves upon the undersigned of naming the area where his regiment is to encamp from the 24th of April to the 30th of November, 1907, he would like to give a name to the camp of historic accuracy and appropriateness. Help me out."

PAIN.

Earth, with her million swirling whirlwinds of love and passion and lust,
Earth, with her storms of billions of faces, souls in a cyclone of dust—
What does this Comedy-Tragedy mean? I cross your path, I, man,
You, woman, our lives thenceforth entwine—Is it chance, is it God, is it plan?

I am lost in a column of a human hundred, sucked streaming in the storm,
Torrents of Women and Men forever pouring in, swarm beyond swarm—
Whence is the drift, whither the flood? Through the millions of years that ran Since Earth was fire, was I borne on the tide that casts me up now, a man?

I have brain, I have heart, and I think I have soul: this world never lets me alone—
I must love and hate and scheme and sweat blood; I must loose my lusts and atone—
Men, women, sweet children drift round and round, a raging blizzard of life.
How they draw my soul!—it's my son, it's my friend, my mother, my brother, my wife.

And my soul craves down through my flesh for food and pleasure and vice and love—
Lo, you large stars in the Night's hand, worlds aloft, worlds, worlds above,
O suns, suns, suns, like our human storm, pouring through space with Earth—
Lusts fade, when I think how among these stars my mother cried at my birth.

I have risen from ape on this Earth that is swallowed in the whirling storm of stars,
Those million-million oceans of fire, that rain through heaven like chars
Of kindled sparks. And my ancestry through the million years of man
Is bloody black with crime and hate, with Cain's and Judas' ban.

Where's the escape? Where is there hope? The midnight sounds me this riddle.
How came I here, just now, alive, writing, yea in the middle Of a rhyme, with ink and pen and paper? Do I know that I do not dream—
That I live, that I truly am man—and man? What driftwood on what stream?

O, you gates of the Lord opened at night, O you merciful gates of the Lord!
I have toiled, I have suffered, yea, I have known Pain, Pain that has cut the heart'a cord!
Yea, Pain is our only Reality! And even now seared and scarred
By Pain, truth flashes: this moment bares Soul—and drowning doubt—bringe God.

HAMMERSTEIN TELLS OF HIS OPERA FIGHT

Impresario, Happy Over the Season's Results, Describes His Struggle.

'CARMEN' TURNED THE TIDE

Until That Piece Was Produced the Public Was Uninterested—Then Money Poured In.

Oscar Hammerstein was a happy man yesterday at the close of his first season at the Manhattan Opera House. He sat in his office at the Manhattan with the loving cup which his artists had presented to him the night before on his desk, receiving the congratulations of his friends on the success of the year. In the afternoon he made a statement about his last season.

"When last February I visited the musical centres and byways of music and grand opera in particular in search of artists for my contemplated first season of grand opera in my Manhattan Opera House," said Mr. Hammerstein, "my reception on the part of directors, agents, and singers of note was absolutely north poleon.

"In New York my very much advertised purposes and intentions met with fine sympathy; some advised the services of a specialist, others looking at the matter more seriously recommended the immediate use of a straitjacket. Worse than all of that, the musical world thought me too funny for anything. The wise ones said grand opera was a matter of fashion; the unwise said grand opera was a relic of barbarism. What New York really wanted was an academy of cakewalk or a subsidized college of ballads.

"It is the cause of much wonderment to me to-day that while in Europe I was not locked up on suspicion, either upon the charge of an attempt to kidnap singers or to inveigle them into going to America under false pretenses. I frankly said I was all alone in the undertaking, that I represented no corporation, that I had no backing of a dollar or millions; at any rate, I had the satisfaction of feeling that I was the most avoided impresario in Europe.

"On Sept. 15 last I opened my subscription list for a season of grand opera in French and Italian. I announced the engagement by contract of an imposing array of singers, most of whom stood in the front of the world's famous artists. The most notable feature of the opening for subscription was the absence of subscribers. Not wishing to give a violent blow to veracity, I will admit that the first day three elderly ladies and one less elderly gentleman made inquiries at the box office, eying the custodian of the subscription books with all the evidences of suspicion. After a few days this condition of things subsided, and a few courageous if not careless people really did subscribe, making small deposits at the box office.

One Tenor's Demands.

"In addition to this interesting state of affairs, one of my first tenors bluntly demanded the sum of $10,000 in cash as an evidence of operatic longevity on my part, before he would even deign to come to a rehearsal. He absolutely denied me the privilege to rehearse with my $10,000; he wanted an immediate performance.

"I had invested over a million and a half in the ground and building now known as the Manhattan Opera House. I disentangled an additional half-million dollars for costumes and scenery. And when, in addition to all this, I now calmly mention that I shouldered a responsibility of nearly a million dollars in season contracts with a small army of great artists and others, I, in duty to myself, am bound to add that I am neither a drinking man, nor addicted to the use of cigarettes or narcotics in any form.

"And when, three days before the opening night, my ledger showed a total subscription for boxes and seats for the season of 1906-1907, comprising twenty weeks, of $52,400. I was anything but happy. A subscription of $52,000 in my new opera house against the subscription of $400,000 at the Metropolitan Opera House! The only oasis in this desert of operatic bleakness was the fact that I had neither a partner nor board of directors, nor an accomplice, what or whomsoever.

"To drive away any possible dejection on my part I held a meeting with myself in my office, elected myself President, Vice President, and also a number of other offices, and respectfully tendered myself a unanimous vote of admiration and confidence. On December 3 the curtain rose for the first time on the opera 'I Puritani'; the box office showed receipts of $11,600. Enthusiasm ran riot. I was called out; I made a speech; I confronted an audience of 4,000 people, perhaps the Sheriff was one of them—perhaps to familiarize himself with the surroundings and the contents of the premises. On Wednesday, the second night, I presented 'Rigoletto.' It was the first appearance of Renaud—the great Renaud, the pride of the opera in France, if not in Europe.

"From a managerial standpoint, as well as from any other, it could reasonably be expected that a world-famous singer would arouse the habitual opera goer of New York to witness at least his opening performance. The house was nearly empty; $1,823 were the total receipts, derived mostly from the upper part of the house; and of this I paid Renaud eight hundred, his stipulated salary for each performance.

"Nothing illustrated the degree of culture as regards grand opera in New York better than this event. The educational results which many years of opera in New York should have effected were seemingly none. The justifiable inference was that the opera goer of New York considered the only existing opera house a musical clubhouse, restricted in membership and quality of dress. The new institution, the new opera house near Eighth Avenue, open to all, evidently could not interest these people any more than a trip to Chinatown with a slumming party. Further on I will explain why Renaud opened his New York engagement to a house of $1,800 and ended his last four performances to receipts of over $35,000.

Public Apathy Toward Opera.

"The Metropolitan Opera House, instead of popularizing grand opera in this city, involuntarily depopularized it. It could hold but a tiny fraction of those having a taste for grand opera. The inability to supply the demand had caused apathy, if not entire loss of interest. Time and again I have watched the audiences in vaudeville theatres in 'turns' smattering of grand opera; a quartet from 'Rigoletto,' a sextet of 'Lucia,' could always be relied on to bring forth deafening applause. These audiences are made up of people to whom opera is an unknown quantity. But in these demonstrations I detected the seed with which grand opera could be made to ripen into an everlasting plant.

"True, the fate of my predecessors in this field offered but a mournful spectacle. Col. Mapleson died very poor; likewise Henry E. Abbey, and broken-hearted Maurice Grau passed the last years of his life with but limited means. The present Director of the old Opera House in this city also succumbed in health to his labors.

"I gave my third performance on Friday night. It was 'Faust.' There were over 300 people on the stage, excluding a brass band and me. The receipts hovered between $1,630 and despair. It was at least plainly visible on the face of my Treasurer.

"With a repetition of 'Faust' at the Saturday matinée I intercepted $1,480, and in the evening with the repetition of 'Rigoletto' the receipts showed $1,866.30.

When the Tide Turned.

"Dec. 14, with 'Carmen,' the expected by me, and unexpected by others, at last took place. The house lost its morgue-like aspect. After the second act, during the intermission, members of the press and leading citizens visited the stage and congratulated me for the almost unprecedented excellence of the performance. From that night on, grand opera in New York, without the aid of society, became an institution for all time to come. Every performance thereafter brought larger and more enthusiastic audiences; what I always had believed in, New York began to believe in also. After this performance of 'Carmen,' the receipts for my performances began to increase rapidly. To most of my audience, high or low, grand opera was a novelty, a new sensation, an inspiring surprise.

"What does it signify when an opera like 'Carmen' can be produced in one season of twenty weeks nineteen times?

"It signifies that the new American operagoer wants a simple play, a simple story set to music of melodious character; and operas of such merit only can hope for appreciation in this country for a long while to come; the educational influences of such works will bring about the gradual understanding of the mythological themes and instrumentation of the German masters.

"The receipts of the season were nearly $750,000, overbalancing to considerable extent the expenditures. And often now there comes to me the tribute which is generally paid to men who by their own convictions have made the seemingly impossible possible.

"I am told I am lucky."

TEA WITH CAMPANINI.

Most of the Manhattan Opera Folk at an Informal Reception.

Signor Cleofonte Campanini gave a farewell tea in his apartments at the Hotel Navarre yesterday afternoon to the members of the opera company and a few of his friends. It was a tea in the Continental manner—that is, those who did not wish to drink tea had the privilege of drinking other things.

Among those who came were Mr. and Mrs. Bassi, Mr. Arimondi, Mme. de Cisneros, Arthur Hammerstein, Messrs. Gilibert, and Sammarco; Madames Pollock, Watson, Arta, Zeppilli, uss, and Janelli, and Messrs. Oscar Hammerstein, Max Bendix, and Charles Dalmores.

Concert to Aid German Hospitals.

The United German Singing Societies gave a concert last night in the Manhattan Opera House for the benefit of four German Hospitals. The choral societies were assisted in the programme by Mme. Arta, soprano; Elsie Fischer, violinist; Victor Oeeellier, baritone; August Fraemcke, pianist, and the Manhattan Opera House Orchestra under Carl Hein. The audience was not a large one.

Concert for Spanish Church Fund.

A concert will be given at the Waldorf-Astoria on May 7 in aid of a fund being raised to build a Spanish church in the vicinity of the building of the Hispanic Society of America. Mme. Emma Eames, Emilio de Gogorza, and Victor Herbert and his orchestra will appear.

Another MacDowell Fund Concert.

A concert will be given this afternoon in the Waldorf-Astoria for the benefit of the MacDowell fund. It will be under the direction of Mr. de Macchi. Mesdames de Cisneros, Susan Metcalfe, and Messrs. Sammarco, Egan, de Macchi, and Tew will appear.

NEW INDIAN DANCES.

The Scalp and Messiah Dances to be Added to Hippodrome Show.

The Hippodrome Indians in "Pioneer Days," beginning with the matinée this afternoon, will add two national dances in the second act of the big extravaganza. They have been doing the ghost dance all the Winter, and beginning with the matinée to-day they will also introduce the scalp dance and the Messiah dance, both of which were features of the Wounded Knee uprising of 1890-91, in which many of these Sioux Indians at the Hippodrome participated.

The scalp dance is a weird jollification given at the end of a battle. The Messiah dance was the cause of all the trouble in the uprising of 1890, as the Government troops endeavored to suppress this religious rite of the Indians.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

The Knickerbocker Chapter, Daughters of the Revolution, numbering seventy-five in all, will attend a performance of "The Road to Yesterday" next Wednesday evening, April 24.

Dore Davidson will sail for London on May 4, to be gone about ten weeks. The trip is a pleasure excursion, and his plans for next season will not be formed before his return to New York on July 15.

Mrs. James Madison Bass, Recording Secretary of the American Playgoers, has asked its members for donations toward a suitable gift from the club to the Actors' Fund Fair.

TO STOP SONGBIRD KILLING.

Zoological Society Begins a Crusade in the Suburbs.

Efforts are being made by the New York Zoological Society to prevent the annual slaughter of songbirds in the suburban sections of the city. President George O. Shields of the League of American Sportsmen and John Rose, a special policeman, started on a search yesterday for pot hunters. Both men are State Game Wardens, and have charge of the Bureau for the Preservation of Wild Life maintained by the Zoological Society.

At East Chester Road and Sawmill Lane the two officers saw three Italians with shotguns emerge from a house there. The two Game Wardens started for them, and two of the Italians went back into the house. The other took to his heels, and the officers went in pursuit, seemingly preferring to operate in the open. The louder they shouted to him to halt the faster he ran. They fired shots from their revolvers to frighten him, but he continued to run, and soon outdistanced them.

They telephoned for police aid then, and four patrolmen were sent to them from the Tremont Station. With these men, they searched the house, but the Italians and the guns had disappeared, of course.

The society proposes to prosecute the search for violators of the game laws with vigor, and Mr. Shields announced yesterday that in the future if he had to shoot after fugitives he would shoot to hit.

SIR HENRY S. KING HERE.

Ex-Member of Parliament Arrives on the Etruria—Name Not on List.

Sir Henry Seymour King, British banker, yachtsman, and Member of Parliament, arrived yesterday on the Cunarder Etruria. His name did not appear on the ship's list at his own request, because he desired to enter the country without attracting attention.

He was recognized, however, by an Englishman who boarded the vessel at Quarantine, and his surprise was great when addressed by name.

At first Sir Henry declared that he had simply made the ocean voyage for his health, but later he said that he had come over because a friend of his was seriously ill on this side of the Atlantic.

Apparently not many of the passengers were aware of the identity of the distinguished traveler.

Purser W. J. Wall declared that Sir Henry was not on board.

MME. ODA, A DANE, TO SHOW US IBSEN

Who Wasn't a Mystic and Wasn't Rough, Either, as She Saw Him at Home.

TO PLAY IN DANISH FIRST

And Try English Later—What It Means to be a Royal Actress Told by Herself.

Oda Nelisen, or "Mme. Oda," as she is called in her native Denmark, is now organizing her company for the production of Ibsen's "Little Eyolf," which she expects to offer in this city about the middle of next month. Though Mme. Oda has been in this country for the last four months, she has spent only eight days in town. Her time has been devoted to singing Danish songs at gatherings of her countrymen, and her tour has extended from Manhattan to San Francisco and Los Angeles. She is the first artist brought to this country by the new society of Danes formed for the purpose of inducing some of their noted native players and musicians to visit America.

Mme. Oda is a woman in middle life. Perhaps her most striking feature at first sight is a mass of blonde, curling hair. She speaks English with a marked accent, but with perfect intelligence, though obviously more at home in her native Danish or adopted French.

"I shall give my first performance in Danish," said Mme. Oda to a TIMES reporter yesterday afternoon at the Victoria Hotel, "so I can better give my whole soul to it. After I have done it once or twice thus, I shall try to do it in English. I have engaged a company of young people—all Americans. I know they may be too young, but I want them that way so they will do Ibsen's 'Little Eyolf' as I tell them, and not as they think it ought to be done. I have a lovely little girl to play the rôle of poor lame little Eyolf.

What a Royal Actress Is.

"It is not true that I am here on leave of absence from the Royal Theatre in Copenhagen. I left the Royal Theatre recently simply because my husband has two theatres of his own, and he cannot do without me. I went on the stage when I was 17, and the first rôle I played was Frou-Frou. I made an immense hit. Then I left the stage because I hate always to be at the theatre—never to be alone like the painter or sculptor.

"I married then, and spent five years in Paris with my husband, and while I was there I was permitted to go to the Academy to hear them teach acting and singing. Then I went back to Copenhagen and got a position at the Royal Theatre, where I was for seventeen years. At first I played a great deal the Danish poetic rôles, with songs, and all the French rôles, because I had just come from France. Then, seven years ago, I played my first Ibsen rôle—the rôle of Rita in 'Little Eyolf.' The only other Ibsen rôle I have ever played is Hedda Gabler."

Mme. Oda paused a moment and started in another direction. "I call myself Mme. Oda," she said, "because there are thousands of Nelisens in Sweden and Norway and Denmark. If you spoke of Oda Nelisen nobody would know whom you might mean. But if you speak of Mme. Oda they say, 'Oh, yes!' It is—I don't know in English—it is my 'nomme de guerre.'

"To belong to the Royal Theatre in Copenhagen—that is something. You have no King here, and so you don't understand what is the King in Denmark. It is as if Mr. Roosevelt were the King and he said only this one woman shall play these parts in my theatre. That is something! The King is somebody in Denmark and his theatre is something! Then to be a royal actress is yet something more. There are only two royal actresses—one other woman and myself. That is as if Mr. Roosevelt said Julia Marlowe should be a royal actress and the Senate also said so, and then it was settled. The King cannot say this all by himself. Because I am a royal actress I have a pension from my country all my life."

Ibsen the Good—and Ugly.

Mme. Oda was asked if she had ever met Ibsen himself.

"Ho was always so soft and so mild to me!" she exclaimed by way of answer. "He was the only one real great man I ever saw. You always see the small things in other great men after you know them. But Ibsen—he was always the same; always mysterious, always great! He was not rough at all, as people said. Of course, when all the people wanted to know him and see him and speak to him—even the ladies with their photograph things—then he was rough and would not see them. To me he was always so good!

"I have seen Ibsen in Copenhagen and two times at his home in Christiania. He stayed away from home most of his life because the people would not hear 'Brand' and 'The Pretenders,' and he hated them. It was only in the last ten years of his life that he came home and was a king in the country. I don't know that I ought to say it, but—Ibsen was an ugly man to look at!

"At his home in Christiania he had a beautiful big library where he worked. He had beautiful pictures, for he was fond of paintings. The first time I went into his room there I saw on his desk where he was writing a picture of me as Rita in 'Little Eyolf.' He loved me because he loved the play of 'Little Eyolf' and because he loved that I should have made a big hit in the part. It was only five years ago that I first saw him, when he was already very old, and he was so kind I loved him, too. I never saw Mrs. Ibsen. She was not ever in his room when I was there.

"No, Ibsen never came to see me act. That was because he never came to see any one act in his plays. He was a stage director in his younger days, but he did not like to go to the theatre. He never saw Bernhardt or Duse or any of the great actresses. More than all he did not like to go to the theatre when they did his own plays. He liked to have them succeed, but he never wanted or liked to see how they were done.

Don't Mention Him with Bjornson.

"I do not think it is true that Ibsen drank a great deal. Of course it is true that all Norwegians like whisky and drink a whole lot of it, a little at a time always. You must not speak of Ibsen and Bjornson in the same time. Ibsen was a great man like Shakespeare, and he made Bjornson look so little!"

Mme. Oda said she could see nothing mystic about the Ibsen dramas and she thought it was a mistake to act them in a mystic manner. She attributed her success as Rita to the fact that, unlike the other actresses, she played it like any other woman and mother.

"There is nothing anywhere so natural as Ibsen," said Mme. Oda, breaking into French as if at a loss to find the equivalent for her meaning in English. "One ought to play the Ibsen people just as they really are. All the Ibsen men are horrid. In the first act of 'Little Eyolf' Rita is just in love with that horrid man. In the last act she is just a poor mother. Ibsen himself always loved that rôle. I do not think even 'When We Dead Awaken' is mystical. We must all at least once awaken in our lives."

SEE "DEATH OF TINTAGILES."

Theatregoers' Club Stirred by Maeterlinck's Singular Drama.

The Theatregoers' Club held another meeting last night at 200 West Seventy-second Street and the members saw a presentation of Maurice Maeterlinck's singular little drama, "The Death of Tintagiles." Mr. Towne, President of the club, began by explaining the purposes of the organization all over again and by pointing out that the presentation of this piece was really a deviation from the path he intended to beat, since the play had been seen before and was not the original work of a member.

Mr. Maeterlinck does not belong.

The announcement read: "The Modern Theatre Presents Kate Parsenow in The Death of Tintagiles." It was not to be expected that the Modern Theatre could furnish a really professional company, but the fact remains that the audience of some two or three hundred people was much impressed by the rendering of this strange and terrible drama in five short acts. The story simply relates the death of the child, Tintagiles, at the provocation of a mysterious and terrible Queen who never appears. He is protected by his two sisters and taken from them in their sleep by three veiled women.

The manager announced that the lights would be kept out during the whole five acts in order to "preserve the atmosphere intact." Though the lights went out, the atmosphere, thanks to Maeterlinck, was too strong to be broken.

The final scene of the play, in which the courageous elder sister has climbed into the turret of the mysterious tower, hoping to regain possession of the little brother, only to hear him murdered on the other side of a mysterious and hingeless door, was played with sufficient effect to move the audience. The cries of the child inside the barrier and of the sister on the outside, driven to despair, were pitiful.

The elder sister was impersonated by Miss Parsenow, but the real star of the production was the child, who recited his lines with precision and seemed to appreciate better than any one the mystic character of the production. One could readily understand how heartrending a first-class production of the piece, such as has never been seen in New York, would unquestionably be.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Death of Lord Hallburton.

LONDON, April 21.—Lord Hallburton, for a number of years Under Secretary of State for War, is dead.

Arthur Laurence Hallburton, created Lord Hallburton in 1897, was born in 1832 in Nova Scotia, where his father was a Judge. He was educated in Nova Scotia, and afterward became a barrister. During the Crimean war he served on the commissariat staff of the army, and in 1870, after service in Canada and in London, was transferred to the civil service as Assistant Director of Supplies and Transport. In 1888 he became Assistant Under Secretary of State for War, and in 1895 Permanent Under Secretary. He retired in 1897.

Lord Hallburton leaves no heir.

Dear Sirs:—Permit me to offer my hearty congratulations on the fact that it has fallen to your lot to publish Norman Duncan's "The Cruise of the Shining Light." I took the book home with me on Saturday afternoon; read absorbedly until late night; and finished it ere doing anything else on Sunday morning. When I add that no modern novel has so gripped me for years, you will appreciate this book's triumph. If readers of fiction have not quite lost a taste for "style" in writing, poetry in description, and lifelike characterization, "The Cruise of the Shining Light" should take rank at once as the finest novel of recent years.

Yours sincerely,

Convertible Bonds

We have just issued the 3rd Edition of our 6-page circular describing practically all of the Convertible Bonds now upon the New York market.

The circular explains why such investments are especially attractive to well-informed and conservative buyers.

In our judgment, properly selected Convertible Bonds may be purchased with every reasonable degree of safety, the present low prices affording exceptional opportunities.

We shall be glad to furnish copies of this circular upon application.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION — THE MARKETS OF EUROPE

FINANCIAL SITUATION.

The Stock Market Dullness—Money Position Improving.

The dullness which marked the closing days of last week in the stock market was the logical sequence of the violent fluctuations and feverish trading which marked Stock Exchange business during the last fortnight of March and the opening week of the present month. It has usually been the case that, after declines so prolonged as those which reached their climax on March 25 last, stock markets demand a breathing spell in which account may be taken of losses and plans laid for the future. While this period of waiting is running on, the tendency of price movements is to narrow, trading in securities contracting as fluctuations diminish, until both trading and price movements appear to come to an almost complete standstill. This day, or this period of several days, as the case may be, almost invariably marks the end of one stage of a market movement and the opening of another. The new stage will have for its goal a higher range of quotations if basic conditions are favorable, and a still lower level if the same conditions are adverse. It is not always easy to analyze conditions existing at the completion of any stage of a market movement, and the financial community finds it particularly difficult to form fast conclusions at the present moment, when the market seems certainly to have halted awaiting the determination of this question. From the speculative point of view one of the factors preventing clearness of vision lies in the ignorance which still exists regarding the damage done in Wall Street itself by the recent fall in prices. The straws on the current, including the confessed embarrassment of a relatively unimportant house on Monday of last week; the persistent reports regarding the dissolution of other partnerships on May 1, indicate heavy casualties, and the early discouragement which has overtaken professional operators in the stock market points in the same direction. A matter which concerns both the speculative and the wider judgment of the situation is the complete indifference of the public to stock markets, this being only another way of calling attention to the reasons which underlie this public indifference. Whatever influence the Harriman investigation possessed in restricting outside investment; whatever power has been exerted in this direction by the Administration's plans in respect to the railroads or by State legislation, the stubborn fact confronts the observer of financial affairs that public support has been almost wholly withdrawn from the securities market. It is possible to illustrate this in a very effective way through a survey of the bond markets in the period from Jan. 1 to April 20 in the last three years. We find that in this period of three months and twenty days there were sold upon the Stock Exchange in 1905 $412,000,000 of bonds, par value; in 1906, $269,000,000 of bonds, par value, and in the present year in the same period $171,000,000 of bonds, par value. This shrinkage of practically $100,000,000 as compared with a year ago and $241,000,000 as compared with 1905 is a footrule by which we may measure the distaste of the public for securities. It is necessary to go back a full decade in order to find a period between the opening of the new year and the middle of April in which the sales of bonds were so meagre as in the present year.

It is difficult to see just how this situation is to be changed. There is hope, of course, in another season of splendid crops, for forming, as they do, the groundwork of our material prosperity, they may also this year work a miracle in the minds of the public, bringing it to a more careful discrimination between the good and the bad in railroads and in corporations of all kinds, or, to put the matter in Wall Street'a way, to so soften the prejudices of investors that good railroads and good industrial concerns will not have to beg from door to door for money at the present onerous rates. There has been much talk of devastation in certain parts of the Winter wheat territory by a new pest called simply "green bugs," but it is worth noting that, although Kansas is one of the States mentioned as suffering severely by the ravages of this insect, the Director of the Free Employment Bureau of that State announced that it will need 40,000 extra harvest hands this year, although three weeks ago he considered 25,000 extra men sufficient. A harvest of wheat, corn, and cotton at all comparable to that of last year, or the year before, bespeaks a continuation of business upon a large scale, but unless money can be found to sustain this business, and unless the corporations engaged in advancing it are permitted to operate unhampered by ill-advised restrictions, the greatest of crops will avail little. There are from time to time mysterious rumors from Washington regarding the plans for a valuation of railroad properties upon which rates may be based; of a renewal of investigations into this and that railroad corporation, and of divers other unsettling enterprises, and all this, by its very indefiniteness, creates and maintains a widespread feeling of anxiety and uncertainty, which, in its milder form, prevents the investment of money by ordinary business men, and in its most exaggerated form finds expression in the prophecies of business depression made by railroad and other corporation executives. It is extremely doubtful if the bond market will have any other story to tell than that set forth above until so intolerable a situation is completely ended.

Although the Bank of England found it inexpedient to reduce its official discount rate at Thursday's meeting of the Directors, the Bank of the Netherlands, which raised its rate to 6 per cent. on March 12 last, when our bankers engaged $1,000,000 gold in Holland, recovered confidence sufficiently to reduce this quotation to 5½ per cent. There were other evidences of relaxation in the European money markets, as in the lower private discount rates in London, Berlin, and Paris, the rate in each city being well below the official figure of the bank. The hesitation of the Bank of England to lower its rate was obviously due more to the fact that Paris is calling back from London the gold it released earlier than to any lack of confidence in the general money situation on the Continent. In Berlin the Reichsbank still maintains its 6 per cent. rate, but market discounts are now 4½ per cent., and in that city there was successfully floated last week two issues of Treasury bills, one by the German and one by the Prussian Government, amounting in all to $100,000,000. It is not too much, therefore, to look for early reductions in the official rates at the three great money centres of Europe. Our own money market continued so easy that interior banks felt impelled again to withdraw funds out in loans here, leaving these in part with their local agents, who pay 2 per cent. upon such deposits, withdrawing the balance for use at home at higher rates than can now be obtained here. This movement led to comparatively heavy shipments of funds to inland cities during the week, but the real strain will be postponed until the unseasonable weather ends and the normal Spring currency demands appear in their full strength. The easy money here led to some talk of the possibility of a withdrawal by the Treasury of some part, or possibly all, of the $50,000,000 of special deposits made some time ago, but no definite announcement of the Treasury's policy in this respect has as yet been made. It might very well recall a large part of these funds later, when it becomes necessary to complete the reduction and refunding of the maturing 4 per cent. Government bonds. This transaction will be finally completed on July 1, and the prospect now is that some $36,000,000 will be disbursed by the Government at that time, when, it is interesting to note, the heavy half year interest and dividend disbursements occur.

POSITION BETTER IN LONDON.

Times Says Foreigners Must Not Be Allowed to Increase Credits.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

LONDON, April 21.—The Times in its financial supplement to-morrow will say:

"There is now no foreign competition in the bullion market and there seems a fair prospect that the gradual return of gold to France will be more than offset by receipts from South Africa, so the Bank of England ought to be able to go on with its obvious task of strengthening itself for the Autumn demand.

"In order to reach this end, however, it is essential that foreign attempts to increase credits here be met by a polite refusal. The London money market has to imitate the pathetic but salutary example of the Frenchman who ended by falling in love with his own wife. Tempted by the high rates offered by foreign borrowers, it has for years been financing outsiders, while the claims of trade at home have been regarded as secondary. Outsiders have taken advantage of the opportunities so freely given to them by taking gold away in shiploads when it suited their convenience to do so, with consequent spasms in the London money market and famine rates for credit imposed on British trade.

"Now we want a spell of easy money, strengthened gold reserves, and recuperation all round. So far the position is favorable enough, but the big accumulation now to the credit of private depositors in the Bank of England is a dangerous temptation to low discount rates and the path is thrown wide open to the foreign borrower."

BERLIN BOERSE VERY QUIET.

Market Is Still Suffering from the Troubles of Last Month.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

BERLIN, April 21.—Business on the Boerse last week continued to be extremely quiet. There continued to be evidence that the after effects of the series of shocks the market sustained in March had not been completely overcome and that the market was still disorganized. Political apprehensions caused by the newspaper discussion of the royal meeting at Gaeta also unfavorably affected the Boerse. Still another ground for anxiety was the fear that the United States might take advantage of the momentary relaxation in the money market to approach the Continental centres with fresh financial demands.

Foreign securities were favorites throughout the week and some of them closed higher.

The relaxation of the strain in the money market finds corresponding expression in the Imperial Bank's return. The Bank's status is considerably improved, and though it is still much behind the condition of a year ago, the hope is entertained that it will continue to improve and that ultimately it will be possible to reduce the 6 per cent. discount rate.

PRICES DROP IN PARIS.

Many Recently Introduced Stocks Practically Unsaleable.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cablegram.

PARIS, April 21.—There was a general dullness on the Bourse last week. French rentes lost a quarter of a point, Spanish and Turkish Governments about half a point, and Russians three-quarters of a point. Spanish rails were generally lower. Rio Tintos closed at an advance. South African mining stocks were in small demand. Speculation in the outside market greatly toned down. Many recently introduced stocks were practically unsalable except at a great sacrifice.

German bankers are making strenuous efforts to place here a portion of the new Government loan. French financiers are not disposed to participate in the issue, which they do not consider a good investment for persons desiring to hold quick assets.

PROFITS OF THE BIG ATLANTIC LINES

Hamburg-American, North German Lloyd, and Cunard Lines Report Returns.

RISING TIDE OF TRAVEL

Hamburg Line Reduces Dividend Because of Poor Showing in South Atlantic and Far East.

The returns for the year 1906 of the Hamburg-American, the North German Lloyd, and the Cunard Line, the principal foreign steamship companies in the transatlantic trade, show the largest profits from this traffic in their history, although the Hamburg-American Line reports an actual falling off in total profits due to an unfavorable showing in the West Indian and the South American service and to Japanese competition in the Far East.

The Hamburg-American Line was able to pay a dividend of 10 per cent. on its $26,500,000 capital, which, however, is 1 per cent. less than was paid in the previous year. In 1904 the dividend was 9 per cent. The gross profits were $9,325,000, as against $9,075,000 in 1905, and the net profits were $8,075,000, compared with $9,025,000 in the previous year. The amounts charged off to the reserve fund, the fund for new construction and for writing down the value of the fleet totaled $975,000 less than in 1905, being $5,025,000, against $6,000,000 in the previous year.

The North German Lloyd, which increased its capital during the year from $25,000,000 to $31,250,000, paid an 8½ per cent. dividend on the original capitalization, as against 7½ per cent. in 1905. The gross profits of the North German Lloyd were $9,075,000, as against $8,250,000 in 1905, and the net profits last year were $3,175,000, compared with $2,750,000 in 1905. The North German Lloyd, though agreeing with its rival on the losses due to Japanese competition in the Far East, does not make the same complaints of a falling off in revenue from South American trade.

The Cunard Steamship Company increased its dividend from 4 to 5 per cent., though the increase of 70 per cent. in net earnings warranted a much larger disbursement. The gross earnings of the Cunard Line show a gain during 1906 of $3,740, chiefly due to the excellent return from the line's Mediterranean service, which, though only established three years ago, has developed to a phenomenal degree. The net earnings for the year, including $36,425 brought forward from 1905, amounted to $2,822,790, meaning a net increase in income of $1,225,000. In addition to charges for depreciation, amounting last year to $1,098,910, as compared with $910,305 in 1905 and the usual allowances for taxes, insurance, and reserve, the company set aside $600,000 as the nucleus of a new fund which in effect will be an extraordinary insurance fund to provide against unexpected contingencies such as the sudden loss of a ship or such a catastrophe as overtook the North German Lloyd and the Hamburg-American lines in the great conflagration which destroyed their Hudson River piers and several steamers half a dozen years ago.

All of these lines found handsome returns from the North Atlantic trade last year, both from the tourist traffic to Europe, the steerage decks crowds of immigrants, as well as from outgoing freights from these shores, and in their annual reports predict a similar good fortune in the current year. Up to the second week in this month bookings to Europe on the principal lines from this port made a total of 13,000, against 12,000 on the same date in 1906. Last year's passenger traffic, it will be remembered, was itself from 10 to 50 per cent. greater on the various lines than in 1905. Another factor which the companies expect will materially increase Trans-Atlantic profits during the current year is the constant growth of immigration. Up to the middle of this month nearly 10,000 more steerage passengers entered the Port of New York than in the same period last year, and the tide is still rising.

One of the interesting features of the North German Lloyd report in connection with the immigrant traffic is the statement that it is hoped to divert some of the stream to the Southern States. The company has maintained service with Galveston for five years, and with Savannah for two, but last year for the first time immigrants were carried to Charleston at the instance of the authorities. It is hoped to carry this movement further during the current year. Although the passenger traffic of all classes between Europe and the United States, and cargoes, outgoing freight at least, are greater than ever before, the position of the companies toward one another is that of armed truce with some danger of an outbreak of another rate war such as that of 1904.

Commenting on the North Atlantic freight traffic, the Hamburg-American report calls the cargo business not up to expectations, though it is admitted that the business between Hamburg and Baltimore and Philadelphia has improved. Much of the blame for the failure of the business as a whole to meet the expectations of the Directors is laid upon the chronic tariff war between Germany and Canada, which has made itself felt in the traffic with Montreal. The North German Lloyd, on the other hand, finds its North Atlantic trade entirely satisfactory.

Both German lines complain of the Japanese competition in the Far East and the high price of coal in the Asian ports as causing a serious falling off in profits in the Chinese coast trade. There is also a falling off in trade between German ports and the Chinese coast cities, which the Hamburg-America Directors attribute to the reaction from the great activity following the close of the Russian-Japanese war.

HOW PARIS GOT GOLD.

Withdrew form London Funds Loaned to that Market in December.

Early last week Paris began to withdraw from London the gold which had been shipped there from Paris at the close of last year during the monetary stringency of December, and again in March when the English market seemed face to face with heavy withdrawals of gold for American account. The cables have reported so far the return of about $1,000,000 gold to Paris, but this was regarded merely as the beginning of a movement during which the gold sent to Paris is expected closely to approximate the amount that London had received from Paris in December, something between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000.

This gold has been practically earmarked for return to Paris. While it was not advanced as a loan, as was the case in 1890 when the Bank of France loaned the Bank of England $15,000,000 gold to strengthen its reserves, yet the December shipments of gold to London resulted from special arrangements with the Bank of France and differed more in form than in substance from the gold loan of 1890. It was through the Rothschilds that the December shipments of gold to London were arranged, while in 1890 the transaction was carried through directly between the two banks. Then the English bank's pride was a little injured by the necessity of appealing to the French bank for aid, or, rather, in being forced to accept the latter's offer of aid, but the more recent operation was not of a kind to affect the susceptibilities of the English bank. On this occasion the French bank acted in self-protection very largely, foreseeing that in helping to bring about better conditions in London, it was forestalling no little trouble at home. In 1890 the gold was sent back to Paris in the original boxes, the seals unbroken; now the gold is going back in usual form through exchange transactions.

At the close of last year when it became apparent that the situation in London needed easing the Bank of France to effect this end by increasing the stock of gold in London arranged to discount a large amount of bills for the Rothschilds with the understanding that the proceeds in gold were to be sent to London to strengthen the bank position there. The Bank of France opened a new portfolio and discounted foreign bills to the extent of about 58,000,000 francs at first, the amount being subsequently increased to about 65,000,000 francs (about $13,000,000).

That these advances were arranged for the special purpose of relieving the situation was made clear in the review of the bank's course contained in the address of M. Pallain, President of the bank on the occasion of the annual meeting of the shareholders on Jan. 31. In that address M. Pallain said:

"The European markets were affected by the exceptional demands from all parts of the world, and in particular from the United States. The rate of discount in London rose to 6 per cent. without that rise preventing the drain of gold, and there were reasons to fear that if not attenuated the reverberation might be felt in France and constrain the bank to raise its rate of discount. In that situation the bank had a double duty to perform—to insure to the markets at home and abroad the necessary resources to prevent a rise in the exchanges, the effects of which would have been inevitably felt in France, and to avoid favoring the speculation that would not have failed to result in a great inflation of business and if not averted in time would have ended in a crisis. The banks fulfilled their double task in the measure incumbent on them. Adopting a monetary policy that has been justified by events, the bank by discounting the English bills assisted the London market with the funds necessary to enable it to traverse that difficult conjuncture. The bank did not part with its gold heedlessly and without the certainty that it was being sent where its action would be the most efficacious and where it was to the interest of French trade to prevent a possible crisis.

"In the exercise of the liberty conferred on the bank by its statutes to discount foreign bills, it took in that paper for a sum equivalent to the amount of the gold sent to places where temporary assistance was needed for legitimate requirements and with the certitude that it would return. At the same time the paper offered to us for discount with the visible view of obtaining the means of facilitating an exaggerated speculation abroad was refused.

Despite these relief measures the Bank of France was forced, in March, after the movement of gold from Paris to London had been resumed, to advance its discount rate from 3 per cent., where it had stood since 1900, to 3½ per cent. Already, however, the gold loaned to London is being returned to Paris and the chances seem to favor the early extinguishment of this special debt to the French Bank.

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

Metal Market Firm and Lake District Makes Record in March Production.

BOSTON, April 20.—While the stock market has been in the doldrums all the week, the market for copper the metal has been firm, and no uneasiness has developed among producers. Sales, what few they are, continue on the basis of 25 and 25¼ cents, and further high prices will no doubt be obtained for July deliveries. Up to that date the market is practically sold out.

It comes out that the visit of Mrs. Ella Rawls Reader to Boston early in the week was for the purpose of buying the Copper Basin Mining Company of Nevada from the Boston capitalists who developed it. The Peruvian Company, of which Mrs. Reader is also President, is to be the holding concern, with Mrs. Reader as President of both with offices at 45 Wall Street. Smelting plants, cable railways, and concessions for a railroad are said to be forthcoming adjuncts of the mine, which has been proved rich in both gold and copper. Other Nevada properties are said to be under inspection by this business woman.

Advices received by Paine, Webber & Co. are that the March earnings of North Butte and Butte Coalition were the largest in the history of either company.

North Butte's surplus, according to the annual report, is $2,151,850.

The Colonel Sellers shaft of the Butte & New York Company is down 200 feet and is sinking to the 1,000-foot level. Good ground is reported.

The total March production of the Lake Superior district is reported at 21,000,000 pounds of refined copper, the largest in any month in its history. This is an annual output of 240,000,000 pounds. The figures for 1907 are expected to show an advance even over these.

The discovery on the Lake Company's property, of which mention has been previously made, has stimulated mining in Ontonagon County, and it is also announced that renewed attention is to be paid to the copper deposits of Cloubay, on the north shore of Lake Superior, and that the old Princess property at Princess Bay is to be operated again.

The Keweenaw Company reports excellent showing in its Meroda shaft.

From Utah comes the announcement that the shipments from the Bingham-Mary mine will begin in May, and that a contract has been signed with the Utah Smelting Company of Ogden for treatment of the ore.

Tamarack stockholders are notified of a special meeting to be held May 2 to act upon the proposed sale of 5,800 acres in Ontonagon County.

It is announced that the Shattuck and Denn properties in Arizona are to erect a smelting plant, probably at Douglas.

Advices from the Colusa-Leonard Extension Company's mine are that at a depth of 575 feet the vein widened from 12 inches to 5 feet, with assays showing 6.25 per cent. copper, 50 cents in gold, and 2.3 ounces of silver to the ton.

TOLD ROUND THE TICKER.

W. J. WOLLMAN of J. S. Bache & Co., who takes a good deal of pride in the facilities which his firm possesses in the way of telegraphic communication with various parts of the country, was called upon several times last week by friends who wanted information regarding the earthquakes that were reported from several Southern points. One such inquiry came from a man who was very anxious about the situation in New Orleans, and who wanted to know just how severe had been the shock that was reported to have occurred in that city. He called Mr. Wollman on the telephone, and was told that if he would hold the wire Mr. Wollman would find out for him. The man held the wire, and in seven minutes' time he was given the answer that had come from New Orleans over the firm's private wire. It took just that length of time to send an inquiry to New Orleans and to get the answer back to this city. The incident is one which serves to illustrate how well equipped Wall Street is in the matter of communication with other parts of the country.

D. O. MILLS, whose resignation last week from two of the large railroads of which he had long been a Director called attention to his advancing years, is about the last of the Forty-niners in the New York financial district. Unlike the other famous finders of fortune in the gold days in California, Mr. Mills's first profits came from trade rather than lucky discoveries. Before joining the stream of goldseekers then flowing West, Mr. Mills had been the cashier of the Merchants' Bank of Buffalo. He used his banking experience to advantage as soon as he got enough capital together through his ventures in trading with the miners, and was one of the first in the new California cities to buy gold dust and deal in exchange on New York. It was natural that he should have been the founder of the banking house of D. O. Mills & Co., which quickly became the leading bank of the Territory.

C. A. SEVERANCE, of counsel for the Inter-State Commerce Commission, sailed for Europe last week. Three months ago Wall Street had never heard of him nor of his partner in the St. Paul law firm of Kellog & Severance. When he sailed he had attained a prominence which warranted the chronicling of the fact in every New York paper. It is doubtful if even the counsel in the Thaw trial became so quickly or so widely famous as the two young attorneys from St. Paul during the investigation which had as its climax the examination of E. H. Harriman.

GOVERNMENT REFUNDING.

Four Per Cent. Bonds of 1907 Refunded for Consols of 1930.

The refunding of the 4 per cent. United States bonds of 1907 has proceeded with marked rapidity and success since the beginning of Secretary Cortelyou's administration.

On Oct. 1, 1906, the amount of these bonds outstanding totaled $116,755,350. Dec. 14, Secretary Shaw offered to purchase $10,000,000 of the 4s at 101, ex the January interest, but on Feb. 11, 1907, advanced his offer to 101¼ flat, and thereby purchased of the issue $5,237,550.

On March 14, shortly after assuming office, Secretary Cortelyou offered to purchase $25,000,000 of the 4s at par and interest to the date of maturity, July 1, 1907, equivalent to 101 flat. And on April 6 he offered to refund $50,000,000 on a 2½ per cent. basis into 2 per cent. consols of 1930 at 103, under the act of March 14, 1900, making a total of $75,000,000.

Up to April 18, he had bought $17,500,000 and refunded $36,000,000. Following are the figures:

4s of 1907 outstanding Oct. 1, 1906	$116,755,350
Secretary Shaw purchased	5,237,550
Secretary Cortelyou purchased	17,442,300
Secretary Cortelyou refunded	36,000,000
	58,679,850
Total 4s of 1907 now outstanding	$58,075,500

On March 30, before Secretary Cortelyou began refunding, there were held in the Treasury of the original 4s of 1907 as security for deposits and circulation $37,000,000, of which he has refunded $24,000,000, leaving a balance now held in the Treasury of $13,000,000.

J. R. WALSH MAY GET MONEY.

John Scullin of St. Louis Talks Favorably of Rehabilitation Plan.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, April 21.—John Scullin, a St. Louis financier, to-day confirmed the report that St. Louis capitalists, with financiers of New York and Chicago were arranging to provide funds to re-establish John R. Walsh, the Chicago banker. The plan is said to be for the syndicate to subscribe, with Mr. Walsh, $20,000,000 to complete the Chicago Southern and the Southern Indiana Railroads.

Mr. Scullin said that he and two other St. Louis financiers were considering Mr. Walsh's proposition, and intimated that they are well disposed toward it.

"I cannot discuss the proposition at length. It might disarrange the plans of Mr. Walsh, and I have no desire to do anything that would injure him," said Mr. Scullin. "In a general way I may say that the proposition is for a certain amount of money to be raised in St. Louis, a certain amount in Chicago, and a certain amount in New York."

CLEARING HOUSE CHANGES PLANNED

Members of Association Suggest Restriction of Clearing Privileges.

EFFECT OF RESOLUTIONS

Would Not Shut Out Non-Member Banks Who Clear Through Members—Reasons for Changes.

Much concern among the banks which clear through members of the New York Clearing House without themselves being members of the association, was caused last week by the reports regarding the purpose of several proposed amendments to the constitution of the Clearing House which were presented at a meeting of the association a week ago last Friday. What was actually proposed so far as the relations of non-member banks to the Clearing House Association were concerned, was that any member bank that undertakes to clear for other banks should at all times be required to keep its reserve fully up to the 25 per cent. minimum required by the Clearing House rules for all member banks and in the case of the National Banks required by law as well.

The erroneous impression prevailed, however, that the resolution was so worded as to require that a 25 per cent. reserve be kept by all non-member banks that clear through any other member. This would have been a radical change in the policy of the Clearing House and in effect would have done away entirely with the system of clearing for non-member banks. That the effect of such a ruling would be to exclude non-member banks from the privileges of the Clearing House was submitted by officials of the association last week. No such change, however, is desired. What is wanted is to impress upon banks that clear for other banks the necessity of fully maintaining their reserve, for in their case reserves are more essential even than in the case of banks that do not clear for others. This is true for the reason that such banks within certain restricted limits are responsible for the deposits in the hands of the banks for which they clear in addition to being responsible for their own deposits.

Under the rules of the Clearing House no member bank can withdraw as the Clearing House agent of another bank except upon twenty-four hours' notice, and during that interval a large measure of responsibility rests upon the member bank. If the non-member bank should fail within that time all checks properly drawn on the failed bank that had passed through the Clearing House would have to be protected by the Clearing House agent of the failed bank. In this and other ways there is responsibility attaching to the duties of Clearing House representatives of other banks which, in the opinion of many members of the association, make it necessary to insure the maintenance of full reserves by such institutions. As a matter of fact all members under the present rules are required to maintain at least 25 per cent. of their deposits in cash in their own vaults, but the rule is so near to being a dead letter that the need of the reinforcing of the rule, so far as banks clearing for other banks are concerned, was felt to such an extent that this amendment has been proposed.

It is believed in banking circles that the incident that prompted the introduction of the resolution just at this time was the sudden decline in the reserves of the Mercantile National Bank which occurred about three weeks ago upon the withdrawal by the Union Bank of Brooklyn of the deposit of about $3,000,000 which it had kept with the Mercantile National as its Clearing House agent. The Union Bank, by merging with the Mechanics and Traders' Bank, gained membership in the Clearing House and therefore no longer needed an agent. It withdrew its deposit from the Mercantile National, and that bank's reserve fell to about 15 per cent. It has since been brought up to nearly 30 per cent., but the incident brought out clearly the need of large reserves for banks which clear for other banks.

Some time ago it was pointed out in banking circles that the New York bank which cleared at that time for a large bank in Brooklyn had on a given date against about $6,000,000 of deposits only $45,000 more cash than the amount of the deposit of the Brooklyn bank for which the New York bank cleared. Had this deposit been withdrawn suddenly, as actually happened when this Brooklyn bank three weeks ago withdrew its Clearing House deposit from the Mercantile National, the New York bank in question would have had a cash reserve of $45,000 against about $4,700,000 of deposits, or only a trifle over 1 per cent. It is reported that the realization of this situation was chiefly responsible for the bank's withdrawing as the Clearing House agent of the Brooklyn bank.

Another of the resolutions proposed ten days ago provides that drafts on banks in Greater New York which are neither members of the association nor clear through members shall not be allowed to pass through the Clearing House unless certified by the bank on which the drafts are drawn. The effect of this resolution, if adopted, will be to shut out of the Clearing House a large number of items which now pass through it by something close to subterfuge.

Many banks in no way connected with the Clearing House, either directly or through some other member as a clearing agent, have been in the habit of opening accounts with a member bank and then stamping across the face of its own checks a notice to the effect that the check will be paid by some member bank, naming the one with which the outside bank may have opened an account. This form of check is distributed to the depositors of the outside bank, who may prefer checks that will pass through the Clearing House, and in this way the outside bank is able to attract business which it would lose entirely if its checks did not pass through the Clearing House. At the same time, such banks do not contribute anything to the support of the Clearing House and are not subject to its rules, and the opinion is beginning to prevail among bankers that it is time to put a stop to the abuse of this custom.

Such method of drawing checks that will pass through the Clearing House is not, however, confined by any means to banks in this city and some members of the Clearing House are desirous of having the resolution put in more drastic form to cover all banks in this or any other city.

The adoption of this resolution would lead doubtless to an increase in the number of non-member banks which clear through the Clearing House, for a number of these outside banks would probably try to get a Clearing House representative rather than be shut out entirely from the facilities of the association.

An interesting situation has developed in connection with the amendment of the constitution of the Clearing House adopted last December, which gave the Clearing House Committee power to examine any member bank if it made any change in its management or merged with any outside bank and to submit the question of its continuance in the Clearing House to the association to be acted upon as though it were the application of a new member.

It is reported that when the Union Bank of Brooklyn merged with the Mechanics and Traders' Bank, the consolidation having gone into effect on March 25, the Clearing House Committee, under the rule adopted last December, undertook to examine the Mechanics and Traders' Bank, but instead of doing so directly requested the Committee on Admissions to make the examination. This the Committee on Admissions was disinclined to do on the ground that such examinations did not fall within its jurisdiction, and it did not care to impose further burdens on itself. The Clearing House Committee was equally loath to do the work itself, with the result that the Mechanics and Traders' Bank has not been examined by the Clearing House. It has, however, been examined since its merger with the Union Bank by the New York State Banking Department, and the report was such as to satisfy the Clearing House. It is now being said in banking circles that the rule adopted last December is likely, for some time to come at least, to be a dead letter, as neither the Clearing House Committee directly nor the Committee on Admissions seems inclined to undertake the work that would be required to put the ruling into effect.

THE COPPER CONTROVERSY.

Metal Exchange Responds to Adolph Lewishon's Resignation by Putting Up Bid Prices.

The controversy over the quotations of copper metal as supplied by the New York Metal Exchange was accentuated last week by the resignation from that body of Adolph Lewisohn, President of the United Metals Selling Company, who in former years had been one of the leading figures on the Exchange, and even at the time of his resignation was its Vice President. Mr. Lewisohn explained his withdrawal on the ground that he could not consistently keep his place at the head of the Metals Selling Company, which was quoting Lake copper at 25⅛ cents per pound, and electrolytic at 25¼, and at the same time give his support to the Metal Exchange, which has been reducing the price of the metal over the past few weeks until the asked prices now stand at 25 cents for Lake and 24½ cents for electrolytic. Mr. Lewisohn admitted that the men who make the quotations for the Metal Exchange might have copper for sale at those prices, but, he said, he hadn't and didn't expect to have.

The Metal Exchange committee which is responsible for the reductions in the quotations which have made so much of a stir among the trade is composed of L. Vogelstein of L. Vogelstein & Co., representing a German house in this country; B. Hochschild of the American Metal Company, G. E. Behr, a dealer in spelter and lead, and L. Nachmann, who is the American representative of a German copper concern. While these men admit that the quotations are made without reference to trading on the floor of the Exchange, and at the same time that they do not represent actual sales of the metal, it is stoutly maintained that copper may be bought in lots of 100,000 at the asked prices quoted.

The only response of the Metal Exchange to Mr. Lewisohn's resignation was to advance the bid prices a fraction of a cent, leaving them in the case of lake and electrolytic three-fourths of a cent below the asked prices. Even members of the committee which fixes the quotations admit that the bid prices are merely nominal, for the reason that there are no bidders in the market. Practically all of the big producers have sold all of their output up to the 1st of July, and the consumers are committed, for the most part, for the same length of time ahead. For this reason, the test of actual buying and selling, which will be the final settlement of the controversy, is not expected for a month or two. The small importance of the Metal Exchange as a trade organization is evidenced in the low price of memberships, which sell at a price between $400 and $500, which is little more than the equity of each seat in the property owned by the Exchange.

PROMOTER WILLIAMS DODGES HIS CAPTORS

Man Hunted for Two Years as Government Defaulter May Be in Philadelphia.

HE HAS SWINDLED MANY

Detectives Thought They Had Him in This City, but He Learned They Were After Him.

"Capt." William Plumb Williame, who has been dodging detectives for the last two years or more, is said to be hiding now in Philadelphia after narrowly missing arrest in this city early last week. Williame is registered in Washington as a Government defaulter, and private detectives, representing many of his victims, are on his trail with warrants for his arrest, charging him with larceny in connection with paper railroad companies he promoted, and with failure to pay hotel bills, club bills, office rent, and many small personal items.

For more than a year Williams had not been heard of. Last week, however, a dispatch from Washington warned the detectives here to be on the lookout, as there was reason to believe that Williams was here at his old game of promoting wildcat companies.

Williams got wind of the steps taken against him, however, and he disappeared. Later in the week one of Williams's victims notified detectives here that the promoter had been seen in Philadelphia. That night three private detectives set out for that city to follow up the clue.

In spite of his title, Williams's nearest approach to the service was as a contractor in charge of a transport that took part in the Porto Rican expedition. At that time the American Surety Compsny was on his bond. He defaulted for $900 and the Surety Company was forced to pay the shortage.

Williame was at one time a member of the Army and Navy Club in this city, but it wae said last night at the club that hie name had been dropped from the rolls many years ago. His father is Paymaster William H. H. Williams of the navy, formerly Secretary of the Army and Navy Club. Capt. C. C. Cook, also a member of the club, is counsel for the American Surety Company and eeveral other claimants in civil and criminal suits against the defaulter.

Williams's fine presence and pleasant manners won him easy access to all circlee. In Cincinnati, where he was selling automobiles, he was elected to all the prominent clubs. He left the city without paying his bills. In Washington he was elected to the Metropolitan Club, but was later dropped from the list for failurc to pay his dues.

Among the concerns started by him were the United States Contracting Company, the Patchogue and Port Jefferson Traction Company, and the Central Long Island Electric Light and Railroad Company. These companies all disappeared before the first dividend was due.

Williams at one time issued circulars for a company to dig the Panama Canal, and visited Wasbington to stir up interest in the plan, but detectives began to take interest in him again and he left Washington for safer fields.

PAINTERS GET NO HELP.

They Complain to Central Union Their Strike Isn't Supported.

The delegates of the striking painters complained at yesterday's meeting of the Central Federated Union that none of the other unions had struck in sympathy, and that the painters were forced to keep up the fight alone. The floor was given to Business Agent McAllister of the Reliance Labor Club of Marble Cutters, to explain why he ordered the marble cutters back to work when they struck in sympathy last week, in violation of the arbitration agreement at the Plaza Hotel. He said he told the men to hold a meeting, if they wanted, to take any action, and also that if any of them wanted to go to a "funeral" he would make no objection. As they did not seem to want to hold a meeting, be ordered the men back.

Business Agent Victor Buhr of the painters denounced the attitude of the unions, and asserted that some of the walking delegates now advising against sympathetic strikes were on the pay roll of a big construction company at one time.

Delegate Wilson of the Brotherhood of Painters said that sixty-eight per cent. of the striking painters had found work in other cities.

OUTWIT MORMON SPEAKERS.

Salvation Army Pre-empts Street Corners in Trenton.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., April 21.—The Salvation Army here is trying to outwit the Mormon Elders who got a permit from the police to hold open-air meetings in which to teach their doctrines. The Salvationists do not look with favor on the Mormon creed, and last evening when the Mormons went to Monument Park, where their meeting had been advertised, the Elders found a detachment from the Salvation Army there in full possession, praying for them.

The Elders sought other points of vantage on the street corners, but found that the Salvation Army had sent out detachments to cover every important street corner in the city. Then the Elders went to their hotels vowing that they would not be outwitted next Saturday evening. The army is calling for volunteers to more thoroughly cover the city next week.

UTILITIES BILL AMENDMENTS.

Proposed by City Club to Legislative Committees.

Amendments to the Public Utilities bill have been proposed by the City Club to the committees of the Legislature now in conference upon the bill. It is the idea of the club that the proposed amendments will strengthen the character of the proposed commissions. The cluh has taken this action, believing that the broad powers of the present bill should not be conferred upon a commission wbose stability and future independence are not fully guaranteed hy the act which creates it. Tho amendments are in effect these:

To give any commissioner proposed to be removed by the Governor an opportunity to submit an answer to the reasons cited for his removal; to extend the term of office from five to ten years; to introduce an age limit; to increase the salaries of both commissioners and counsel from $10,000 to $15,000; to provide a method for fixing exact penalties, and to provide that penalties paid by corporations in the First District be paid into the City Instead of the State Treasury.

Old Bridge Tender Killed by Train.

Charles McManus, who for more than twenty years, was bridge tender on the Jamaica Bay Railroad trestle, was killed by a Rockaway train yesterday at the treetle drawbridge.

CITY BREVITIES.

"The Peece Conference, Its Work and Its Effect," will be discussed by Messrs. Farrell and Cohen, seniore in the City College, on Tuesday morning in the chapel of ths college. Both were delegates from their college to the conference.

John Campbell, a young architect, was found dead in bed in the boarding house at 238 West Eleventh Street yesterday morning by two of his fellow-boarders. He had been accidentally aephyxiated.

As he was about to dive off a sixty-foot wall at Riverside Drive and 102d Street, Edwin Thomas, of 315 West 116th Street, was arrested by Policeman Scanlon, after a struggle, and sent to the psychopathic ward at Bellevue.

GREEN BUGS AND THE CROPS.

Dreadful Stories of the Doings of an Old Friend Heard in Wall Street.

With a dull market moving uncertainly and unfruitful of gossip, the wiseacres of New Street fell back last week upon the crop prospects. Interest in calamitous prediction this year is stimulated by novelty of the attributed cause, the "green bug," which veracious reports from the wheat fields of the Southwest say is advancing northward like the locusts of old Egypt, leaving dollar wheat in its wake. There was little entomological information to be had about the pest, though anybody around the Stock Exchange or in the New Street cafés could tell you all about the terrible ravages in Oklahoma, and of the rapidity of the advance, which has brought the invading army already into Kansas and Nebraska. Down on the Produce, Exchange the conditione were reversed, intimate knowledge was professed about the bug, but positive information as to what damage he has done so far was bard to come at. To the grain men, the green bug is an old friend. He, along with weather conditions, has always been given the credit for the great bull campaign in wheat in 1890 which sent the price above $1 a bushel.

Properly described he is an aphid of the eame species as the green aphid, which the euharbanite finds eating his rose bushes in June, but the particular variety now loose in the Southwest differs from anything ever ecen before, as described by market scientists, in having a mouth at each end of his body. With this double armament he tackles the young plant of the freshly sprouted winter wheat, now only a few inches above ground, and sucks its living juices. Ordinarily, and according to the encyclopedia, cold rains or freezing weather are fatal to the young aphid. Here again the wheat destroying variety in Oklahoma, Kansas, and Nebraska differs from its cousins known to ecience. Veracious correspondents in the field assert that the frosts which have been common this Spring have only destroyed the parasitee of the "green bug," leaving him sound in wind and limb for the northward march. Tbe same correspondents vindicate their conservatism by reporting that they can find no ground for the reports current nearer the market that the aphid army is destroying railroad ties and pulling spikes on the railroads encountered on the way.

According to crop authorities on the Produce Exchange, the "green bug" last made his appearance in alarming numbers in tho Spring of 1880, which had been preceded by weather conditions identical with those of last Fall and Winter. In that year, the effect of the "green bug" first made itself felt in the May crop reports, which fell off heavily from the conditions reported in April and March. The wheat harvested in 1890 was only 399,0000,000 bushels, compared with 468,000,000 bushels in the previous year. One consolation found in the visit of the green bug is that, if precedent is followed, the crop succeeding tho year of his ravages should nearly double in quantity. After the short crop in 1890 the crop of 1891 was 611,000,000 bushels.

Produce Exchange authorities say that it will be impossible to tell what damage hae been done so far by the aphid until there has been rain in the affected belt followed by "growing weather." The plant will then show whether its roots have been affected and will either die quickly or grow as if the aphid were fiction.

Harlem River Rowing Notes.

The fine weather yeeterday brought ont a number of oarsmen on the Harlem River, several of whom showed excellent form. Despite the action of the Board of Estimate in turning down the Aldermanic grant for the Harlem regatta, the outlook for rowing is very bright. There is a general disposition among the oarsmen to encourage the sport, and make it more popular.

Cept. John E. Nagle of the Harlem Rowing Club had out his octuple sculls crew, consisting of Hirsch, Fulton, Kalz, O'Brien, Ryan, Breen, Scannell, and Bradley, with Cody as coxswain. The doubles, an intermediate four, and a single sculls left the float during the afternoon. The club will make entries in all the leading regattas.

The Atalanta junior eight, coached by Capt. Mulcahy, wns out twice, and did some good work. Ryan nnd Breen, together with Marshall and Hume from the Harlem Rowing Club, made an excellent appearance. Capt. Callaghan and Heul, the Metropolitan senior double, began active training, and the intermediate eight of the same club spent an hour on the water.

Coach Cody of the Crescent Boat Club had out his junior four gig crew and two doubles. The following men were in the boats: Graham, Betz, Koop, Fitchem, Turner, and Little. A four gig was delivered to the clubhouse last Friday. "Al" Wolff of the Wyanoke Boat Club coached a big squad, and "Davy" Roach spent considerable time with the Bohemian junior eight, which is rapidly improving.

"Dan" Murphy, the veteran rowing coach of New England, has had great euccess with the Stanford University crews. He expects his eight-oared crew to beat Berkeley in the annual race on April 27.

The Canadian A. R. A. is getting ready to discipline some of the scullers and canoeists in the dominion. A rowing blacklist is being prepared, nnd oarsmen who accept money for playing Rugby football and lacrosse will be cleared professionnl. The Canadian clubs will work in harmony with the N. A. A. O.

Edward Connell, Chairman of the Regatta Committee of the Harlem Regatta Association, is coaching the crew candidates from the New York University. About forty-five men are out several afternoons in each week, and the finals are doing good work. "Eddie" Anderson of the Dauntless Rowing Club is assisting Connell in the coaching. The New York University Boat Club has been formad, and a number of the graduates have promised financial assistence. The future of rowing at the university is very encouraging. The present rowing headquartere is the Union Boat Club.

The eight-oared crew of the New York Athletic Club has been selected. It le as follows: Conche, Weaver, Kineon, Kline, Brown, Rice, Strong, and Malstead, with Gibbone and Sband substitutes. Twenty-two men tried for the crew, and the remainder of the squad has been dismieeed.

The Union Boat Clab janior eight was one of the first crews on the water, and the Dauntlese, Nonparell, and Lone Star Clubhouses were kept busy with the oarsmen.

SPEEDWAY FILLED WITH MANY HORSES

Ida Highwood, Driven by Nathan Straus, Led Light Harness Brigade in Brushing.

BIG CROWD ENJOYED SPORT

Old Favorites Make Good Showing in Smart Finishes—Ted Loses in Every Contest.

The Speedway yeeterday was filled with an eager Sunday crowd. It was the first real Spring day, and the turnout, both of the light harness brigade and the spectaters, was one of the biggest ever seen on the popular drive. The road drivers were out in force with their horees, and brushes were numerous. For nearly two hours a crowd of about 7,000 pessons witnessed some exciting sport. The only notable absentee was Miss Giulia P. Morosini and her famous team. It is the first time in several years that Mies Morosini, who is a member of the Road Drivers, has been absent from the Sunday morning brushing, and many of the spectators left the Speedway disappointed. Her absence was in a measure compensated by the splendid eport furnished by the amateur reinsmen and their trotters and pacers.

Among the local favoritce, Invader, 2:10, driven by Andrew Crawford; Ida Highwood, 2:09¼, with Nathan Straus at the reins; Surprise, driven by M. Jworski; the Swedish Consul; Ted, 2:15¾, with Mr. Straus driving; Frank Wilson, 2:06¼, driven by Edward J. La Place; Bessie G., bandled by Joseph F. Gibbons; Coast Marie, driven by Dr. H. D. Gill; Kingmond, 2:09, with Claus Bohling in the wagon, and Susie G., 2:14½, with John H. Campbell, made an excellent showing.

The bay mare Ida Highwood was almost invincible. After Mr. Straus had warmed up his favorite he tackled Surpriee, driven by the Swedish Consul. The latter made a good brush but could not keep up with Ida Highwood's speed, and loet by a couple of lengths. In the next brush between tbe pair, Mr. Straus's fast mare made the victory more emphatic, winning by nearly three lengths. After a third brush, in which Ida Highwood, Sue Dix, and Coast Marie finished on a line, Mr. Straus changed to Ted, who is beginning to show his age, and suffered defeat in two eucceseive brushes.

Dr. H. D. Gill was behind his old favorite, the black Speedway pacing queen Coast Marie, while Percy Gill drove the chestnut mare Sue Dix, 2:14¼. Tbe pair, with Frank Wilson, 2:06¼, E. J. La Place's recent purchase, made a lively three-cornered bout, with the honors in favor of Coast Marie; second place was secured by Frank Wilson. Sue Dix turned tables on Coast Marie, and won a good brush by a short neck. Coast Marie wound up the morning's brushing by taking the messure of Lady Golden, 2:10½, driven by Ike Fleming.

One of the best brushes of the day was between Surprice, Ted, Poco Estrella, driven by Dr. Joseph Semon, and Kingmond, 2:09, with Claus Bohling handling the reins. It was a ding-dong affair throughout, with Surprise in the lead at the finish by a short half length. Ted was nearly a length ahead of Kingmond. Christopher Hackett found hie roan pacer Blue Jay, 2:23¼, eo fast that he challenged Leo T., driven by Mr. Kehoe, and won by a good margin. Andrew Phillips made his first appearance in nearly a year, driving a likely looking bay named Norrie. He at once went after Andrew Crawford's Ninety-three Baron, a new three-year-old pacer, and won eomewhat easily. George A. Coleman, drovo DeWitt C. Flanagan's Knietress, 2:09¾, one of the best trotters on the Speedway and a Grand Circuit winner last year, and won handily from W. J. Clark and his new trotter Banker.

Joseph F. Gibbon's Bessie G. ehowed a good turn of speed and had no trouble winning from Leo S. T. B. Leaby drove his new pacer, Who Knows, starting him against Disturber, driven by a trainer, and gave the crowd a good brush, winning easily. Bessie G. was then sent after Andrew Phillips' Norrie and won out. The brush between Kingmond and Ted was a good one, but Mr. Straus' horee was no match for Mr. Flanagan's epeedy trotter. In a second brush with Dieturber, Who Knows again showed class, and finished far ahead. Bessie Panvil, with G. H. Huber driving, defeated Freehman, driven by Rue H. Clark.

In other brushes Terrence Kennedy's bay trotter finished first with Disturber, but in a three horse contest with Dr. Gill's unmarked chestnut trotter, Juno, driven by Alfred B. Maclay and Poco Estrella, Teddy K. finished second to Juno. W. Scott, driving Ragland, defeated Dr. Story's new candidate, Josephine Harrold, the latter breaking half way down the stretch. Ninety-Three Baron captured the last brush from Norrie.

Among the horsemen seen on the Speedway who did not brush were: Philip Heipenhausen, driving Lemon Girl; T. G. Hinds and his new purchase, Salstone; Dr. A. D. Kramer, driving Rice Cake; Charles Welland, driving Dr. Chase, 2:06¼; John Kelly, driving W. C. Floyd Jones's team, Gov. Holt and Deputize, and Claus Bohling, driving David Muscovite and Tar Tartar.

ATTACKED WHITE CHILD.

Negro Under Arrest in Plainfield and Closely Guarded.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., April 21.—Charles Hopes, a 19-year-old negro, is closely guarded at Police Headquarters to-night, having been arrested this afternoon for attempting to attack a 3-year-old white child named Martha Mead. Chief Kleley declared to-night that the man had practically made a confession. Hopes was surly and defiant when put in a cell. To a Detective Sergeant he said:

"Well, I guess I can take all that's coming to me."

MISS SUTTON WILL COMPETE.

Tennis Expert to Take Part in Tournament at St. Nicholas Rink.

Interest among lawn tennis players centres upon the appearance this week of Miss May G. Sutton on the courts of the St. Nicholas Rink, Sixty-sixth Street and Columbus Avenue. Miss Sutton will again strive for the English championship this year, leaving this city on May 17 for competitions leading up to the championships at Wimbledon, London. Here the title in the singles is expected to go to the winner of the tournament, as Miss Kate Douglas is to default because of her recent marriage.

As Miss Sutton also expects to make a trial for the British mixed doubles title, her first appearance in tournament play in the St. Nicholas Rink tournaments is scheduled to be as partner to Beals C. Wright. This will be next Wednesday and Thursday. It is with Wright that Miss Sutton competed in the English championship two years ago with most marked success, and the two have planned to again make an effort to capture this title for a journey across the Atlantic Ocean.

Next Monday and Tuesday Miss Sutton will also compete in mixed doubles, and the first of next month she is scheduled to contest outdoors at the Country Club and at the Meadow Brook Hunt Club, Hempstead, L. I., where she has been the guest of Mrs. Adolph Ladenburg during the past few days.

Because of misunderstandings between those who have endeavored to further the project of international matches between American and English women players, Miss Sutton will not do anything with regard to the project while abroad this season.

The first trip of the Kosher Fishing Club will take place Sunday, April 21, from Sheepshead Bay on the auxiliary sloop Carrie L., under Capt. George F. Smith. The officers of the club for the coming season are: Captain—Max Charmak; Pilot—Jack Grunberg; Steward—"Jim" Halpern; Assistant Steward—L. Richter; Bait Digger—Marie Conny; Deck Hand—Fred Tusky; Mate—Archie Feldman; Weigher—Gus Levey.

Excellent places for fresh water fishing are: Bound Brook, N. J., Central Railroad of New Jersey, perch, pickerel and bass; Budds Lake, Central Railroad of New Jersey and Lackawanna Railroad, small-mouth black bass, pickerel and perch; Cromwell's Lake, Erie Railroad to Highland Mills, N. Y., black bass, yellow perch, wall-eyed pike, pickerel and catfish; Green Lake, N. J., via New York, Susquehanna & Western to Newfoundland, N. J., black bass, pickerel and perch; Lake Hopatcong, N. J., Lackawanna and Central Railroad of N. J., excellent black bass fishing, both large and small mouth, pickerel, perch and sunfish; Peconic River, Long Island, L. I. Railroad, black bass, pickerel and perch fishing is excellent; Lake Ronkonkoma, L. I., L. I. Railroad, excellent black bass fishing and fine pickerel and perch fishing.

Good trout fishing can be had by taking a Valley Road car at Montclair and riding to the end of the road, then walking to tha Notch Brook, at Upper Montclair, a distance of about half a mile. Wade the brook to Bloomfield and use common dirt worms for bait. It is too early for fly fishing in the stream.

On the Delaware River there is fine black bass fishing at Shohola, Lackawaxen, Mast Hope, Narrowsburg, Callicoon, Hankins, Long Eddy, Hancock and Deposit.

Marlborough-Blenheim

Atlantic City, N. J.
April

The ending of Lent this year coincides with the beginning of April, the gayest and most distinguished month in Atlantic City's famous Spring season. During this month more eminent visitors and "nice people" are to be found in the great hotels than in any other month of the year, and the absence of the Easter Sunday "INTERRUPTION" enables guests to completely enjoy all the attractions of climate and artificial entertainment of this festive season with entire satisfaction.

The hotel claims distinction for its location, its ample public space devoted to its guests, its high-class music every night throughout the year, but particularly attractive with solo singers at the week-ends during the Spring season and its ownership management.

All the four dining rooms (two American plan, with the excellent cooking heretofore so popular, and two a la carte, with separate kitchens and French cooks) have white service throughout, and in one of the American rooms, called the "American Palm Room," and in the a la carte rooms smoking is permitted. These are particularly attractive. Ocean and suites with large rooms $4 by 20 feet and a private bath (supplied with both sea water and fresh water and with running ice water) is with every alternate room in the Marlborough and with every room in the Blenheim, which in construction is reputed to be the most completely fireproof hotel in the world. Golf privileges.

HELPS FATHER BRING BABY HILDA HOME

Jan Carsen's Little Girl Cares for Her Sister on Long Ocean Trip.

MOTHER DIED IN SWEDEN

Nine Weeks' Old Baby Journeyed in a Big Basket—Won All Hearts on the Amerika.

There arrived in the steerage of the Hamburg-American liner Amerika yesterday blue-eyed, happy little Hilda Carlsen, nine weeks old, who made the long journey from her birthplace, Halmstad, Sweden, to this port in a big open wicker basket. With her came her father and her 15-year-old sister Selma. The latter cared for the baby throughout all the long journey from the other side of the Atlantic. Little Hilda in her basket has already traveled about 4,900 miles, and the journey is still far from completed. They left soon after the vessel docked, to continue their trip to New Ulm, Brown County, Minn., where the father is in business. When they arrive the baby will have journeyed about 6,500 miles.

Baby Hilda smiled yesterday on the friends she had made in the steerage of the big liner, and there was quite a reception before the father and his daughter could depart for the train which is to bear them to the West, carrying between them the basket, from the depths of which smiled the baby. Hilda, it must be recorded, is a well-behaved baby, and she has scarcely caused any trouble to the "little mother" who has been so faithfully looking after her. Big, broad-shouldered Jan Carsen's face wore a smile as his fellow-passengers gathered about them to kiss the baby and wish him a safe journey to his home in the West.

Carsen came into this country nine years ago, and went into the great Northwest to make his way in the land of his adoption. The lumber industry gave him employment, and he prospered. Some time ago the family went to New Ulm to live. Last year the time for which he and his wife had striven came to pass, and he announced that they had enough money saved to allow them to return for a visit to the home of his wife's parents at Halmstad. There was no happier family sailed just before Christmas of last year than Jan and his wife and their daughter Selma.

Some time after their arrival in Sweden the wife's health began to fail. Those years of devotion to her husband and child, while the former was making a place for them in the New World, had told on her strength, and she fell into a decline. Just nine weeks ago little Hilda was born, and when the blue-eyed baby girl was six weeks old the mother died. Jan buried her in the place of her birth, and then, feeling that his business in America demanded his attention, he resolutely set out to cross the Atlantic.

How to care for the baby was the question which confronted him, but it was Selma, the little mother, who solved the problem.

"Hilda can go in the big basket," she told her father. "She is such a little thing and you, father, are so big and strong, that you can carry her."

And so the motherless baby was put in the basket and in it she made the voyage across the Atlantic. Carsen is an American citizen, and so when the vessel reached her pier in Hoboken early in the day he was not detained to be taken to Ellis Island. He and his daughters were released and took the train for the West.

As he passed down the gangplank with the basket on his arm as many of the steerage passengers as could crowd to the rail leaned over and waved to the baby in the basket, and little Hilda smiled up at them and cooed in hahy fashion.

LEGISLATURE MAY END SOON.

But Reapportionment and Kelsey Measures Will Take Time.

ALBANY, April 21.—Adjournment of the Legislature on May 16 is expected to be determined this week. Several matters of great importance remain to be disposed of, but the leaders believe that they can be closed up in time for that date. The only probability of delay lies in a deadlock over reapportionment of Senate districts.

A conference of Republican Senators was held last week behind closed doors to consider this matter. It is an open secret that there was a wide difference of opinion as to the extent to which the Apportionment act of 1906 must be changed to meet the objections expressed by the Court of Appeals. Some believed that it would be necessary to change only the two districts expressly condemned by the court; others that the entire arrangement must be recast in order to avoid eventual overthrow of the new act.

Important political relationships—indeed the very political lives of some of the most prominent Senators—are involved in the question of the extent of changes to be made in the districts. Should any of the up-State districts be altered, it would probably involve a general overhauling of the districts, and many conferences and much debate, with a consequent prolongation of the session, could hardly be avoided.

The matter of the removal from office of State Superintendent of Insurance Otto Kelsey will probably be acted upon Wednesday by the Senate Judiciary Committee. Both sides believe that the vote, both in the committee and in the Senate, for and against Mr. Kelsey will be close.

Aside from the matter of reapportionment and the Kelsey case, two great questions remain to be settled before adjournment—the Public Utilities bill, and the highway legislation. The Assembly Committee on Railroads and Speaker Wadsworth spent many hours in the latter part of last week in consideration of the Public Utilities bill, and Chairman Merritt, introducer of it on the Assembly side, expresses the opinion that within a day or two they will be ready to confer on the bill with the sub-committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

It is probable that the Assembly Committee will make few material changes in the measure. The real battle is expected on the Senate side. It is not impossible that the bill as passed upon by the joint committee will be ready for presentation to the two houses the last of this week, but it is more likely that it will not be reported in either house before next week.

Highway legislation will occupy increasing attention. The creation this year of a special commission to investigate the whole subject and report a highway code for the State is probable. The only controversy thus far has related to the nature of the personnel of the proposed commission.

One of the most important hearings this week will be that before the insurance committees of both houses in joint session on Wednesday evening, on the Fancher-Rogers bill, to amend the act of last year governing the election of Directors in mutual life insurance companies.

$50,000 TILE FACTORY FIRE.

Blaze in West 51st Street—Excited Woman Drops Dead.

Fire destroyed the greater part of the City Fireproofing Company's tile factory at 611 West Fifty-first Street last night. One hundred and fifty horses of the Street Cleaning Department, stabled in the rear, were led to safety soon after flames were seen bursting from the roof. The stables, which were owned by ex-Senator Plunkitt and rented to the city, were saved.

The only person in the tile factory last night was Edward McGuire, a watchman. He did not know the building was on fire until Policemen Matthews and Evans pounded on the front door. The blaze started on the second floor, and is supposed to have been caused by the overheated brick of one of the tile ovens igniting the woodwork of a mezzanine floor. The building was a three-story structure, built forty years ago. On the second and third floors were several thousand tiles drying.

While the flames were breaking through the roof, Mrs. Catherine Schneider, forty-one years old, of 731 Eleventh Avenue, whose rooms were near the burning structure, rushed from the house and ran to Fiftieth Street. Going to the house of a friend and not finding anyone at home, she started to return to her house. Much excited because of the fire, Mrs. Schneider ran down the street, and as she was in front of 515 West Fiftieth Street, she fell to the sidewalk unconscious. When Dr. Sammis of Roosevelt Hospital arrived, the woman was dead. The surgeon said death was due to apoplexy.

The flames were confined to the two top floors, and the damage was about $50,000.

Big Sawmill Is Burned.

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., April 21.—The large sawmill of the Connecticut River Lumber Company at Mount Tom Village was destroyed by fire to-day. The loss is estimated at $100,000. It is believed the fire originated from sparks from a nearby pulp mill. The company had recently installed a large amount of new machinery, at a cost of $60,000. The mill employed sixty hands.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—A cold rain has been falling in the Gulf States during the last twenty-four hours, and snow continues in the Texas Panhandle and Northern New Mexico.

Steamers departing Monday for European ports will have fresh west winds, with fair weather, to the Grand Banks.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND TUESDAY.

New England—Fair and warmer Monday. Tuesday partly cloudy; fresh west winds.

Eastern New York, Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware—Fair and warmer Monday. Tuesday, increasing cloudiness; fresh west to southwest winds.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

INDIAN POW-WOW BROUGHT UP TO DATE

The Squaw Has a Show in the Counsels of the Indians of Arena and Stage.

TIPS FROM ROSIE RED BEAR

On How to Promote the Interests of a Public Attraction and on Paint in Broadway.

Outside the main entrance of Madison Square Garden yesterday afternoon two blanketed Indians stood for a full five minutes enjoying with the storied stoicism attributed to their race the small stir they created among those who passed by. After a proper interval, counted off by the combined press agent force of the Wild West and the Hippodrome with stop watches, the Indians began to beat the tom-toms they wore suspended from their necks.

"Sounds like the wheels of a Coney Island car striking the ends of rails," said an east side youth to his companion.

Before she had time to laugh the Hippodrome Indians appeared in Broadway hound for the Garden. The press agent swears he didn't order the Hippos to use Broadway, but since they've been in town they prefer that route to Fifth Avenue. Anyway along they came.

At the Garden entrance there was a brief exchange of cigarettes and handshakes, and then the Hippos followed their hosts, the Indians of Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show, newly arrived to the Garden. Once inside, both contingents seated themselves about the imitation electric camp fire—which the press agents had selected as safest under the circumstances—for a pow-wow. Chief Irontail of the Wild West made the opening address. He is one of the celebrated four who have "done" Europe with the show.

"Ladies and gentlemen," said he, "you will note that I do not speak like an Indian for I am, so to speak, an educated pig. I believe in the ideal of world citizens who shall speak the language of the country in which they are residing as natives. Therefore you will bear with my perfect English. Now, I wish to introduce here another innovation of the land. Here the squaws are superior to the braves. They are even organized into a club where the tea ball has howed to the high ball. Therefore, in accordance with the custom of a country which lets its women sit on high—and the higher the better—I shall call upon Rosie Red Bear of the Hippos to instruct you on how you shall conduct yourselves in New York."

Rosie arose. In one hand she held a cigarette labeled club private stock, and in the other a bottle into whose yellow side was blown "Members cannot be too careful about returning bottles when empty to their lockers, as the club has been refused a liquor license."

"When I first came to New York," said Rosie, "and the press agent, Mr. Page, told me it was necessary for me to paint myself up for each Broadway trip to the Hippodrome, I felt real ashamed. But finally I did it. I walked up Broadway with my blushes showing clear through the paint. Then I looked about me. All of the women seemed to have taken the fashion from me. Their cheeks were more shamefully and openly painted than mine. Thereafter I felt no more shame. How great is the influence upon the life of a great metropolis of a girl like me, I thought.

"Which brings me to the point before us. We, all of us, whether we are Hippos or Wild Westers, can make our influence felt. We can do a little each day for the good of our respective attractions. I am sure that each of you as he strolls along Broadway in solitude with a thousand persons behind him can say, 'Buffalo Bill saved my life.' The people will ask how, and you can reply: 'Go to the show and find out.' Why, I trained little Hornet's Nest to say 'Hippodroms' before he could say anything else."

"Then there's another thing that you wild West Indians can remember," said George Fox Wensel of the Hippos. "You have too many cosmopolitans among you. Why, only the other day I saw an interview with Young-Man-Afraid-of-a-Thirst in which he advised the public to avoid investing in Manhattan Subway, preferring the London underground, where the cars are fireproof. Now, the dear public isn't used to such things. The pose of the rustic Indian who stands before a surface car and says 'Get a horse' is what they are used to. You mustn't disturb their set ideas. If you do, your show will suffer."

The Nestor of the Hippos, after a deep whiff at the pipe, which the press agent passed out of his private store, arose, and said:

"Do not, above all things, smoke cigarettes in public. Avoid ordering tenderloin steak with Bearnaise sauce in public. Remember in your public conversation to bring out strongly these facts: The Buffalo Bill Wild West opens Tuesday night in Madison Square Garden, and it is bigger, greater, more realistic, more interesting, more instructive, more educational, more everything than ever before."

And both press agents, it being Sunday, said "Amen."

Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show will open at the Garden on Tuesday afternoon, following the Barnum & Bailey Circus, which closed on Saturday. Two of the most important features of the show this year are the battle of Summit Springs and the Great Train Hold-Up. There are, of course, the usual equestrian exhibitions in addition.

THOUGHT US A WILD PEOPLE.

So a Newly Arrived Englishman Came Armed—Sent to the Tombs.

Hugh R. Wood, who arrived from England on Saturday, carried a loaded revolver. He was arrested early yesterday morning at the Bridge entrance, where he got into a fight. His exhibited one black eye as evidence when arraigned before Magistrate House in the Tombs Court yesterday.

"I thought that this was a desperate country," said Wood, speaking with a strong accent; "I thought it was a bloomin' prarie, where it was well to go armed. I got up to get the early editions of the papers so that I could look out for a job the first thing Monday morning."

Wood told Magistrate House he didn't know anything of the law against carrying concealed weapons. He was held in $500 bail for trial and sent to the Tombs.

DOES BURN ASHES IN A FURNACE TEST

The Ashes Being Two-thirds to One-third Coal, with a Sprinkling of Powder.

TEST LOOKED ALL RIGHT

And an Expert Said Geyer's Discovery Seemed to Do What Was Claimed for It.

A practical test of James W. Geyer's discovery, a powder which, upon being sprinkled upon a mixture of coal and ashes, is said to make the fuel last longer, was held yesterday afternoon in the boiler room of the Park Avenue Hotel. The test had been arranged in order to convince Prof. Bellew of Columbia University that the powder would do what it was reported to. But Prof. Bellew did not appear. He sent word to Mr. Geyer that he did not care to take part in a test to which reporters had been invited.

The result was that the only spectators yesterday were a dozen reporters and one expert, Charles Howard, a member of the Mechanical Engineers' Society and the Civil Engineers' Society. Mr. Howard was much impressed by the test and said that the powder appeared to do all that had been said of it by Mr. Geyer.

The first step in the test was the mixing of coal and ashes. A pile consisting of two-thirds ashes and one-third coal was mixed thoroughly, water was poured upon this and then the powder, to the proportion of a tablespoonful of powder to one gallon of water was thrown on, and stirred thoroughly.

Two of the three boilers were then shut down, and several shovelfuls of the mixture were thrown into the furnace of the third boiler. The steam pressure at that time was seventy-five pounds. The mixture was thrown in at 4 o'clock.

Seven minutes later the furnace door was opened. The fuel was burning briskly, a white flame appearing over the coals. This flame is much lighter in color than the flame from the usual anthracite coal. In half an hour the steam pressure stood the same—seventy-five pounds, the one boiler doing the work that the three had done before. The hotel engineer said that this would not have been possible with pure anthracite coal.

An hour passed. The steam pressure stayed the same. More fuel, however, was shoveled into the furnace than would have been done had all three boilers been in operation.

In explaining the chemical action of the powder on the mixture of coal and ashes, Mr. Geyer said that it releases the hydrogen in the water, and the oxygen in the coal and ashes and in the air which came in through the draft. The powder is yellow, and of a very fine consistency, not unlike mustard, although of not such a high color.

Mr. Geyer said after the test that he expects in the near future to perfect the powder to such a degree that no pure coal will have to be mixed with ashes in order to obtain greater heat than that which is stored in pure coal. This he has not been able to do up to the present.

Mr. Geyer was asked if it would be possible to use gravel—pebbles or broken rock—as a substitute for ashes. He replied that at the present stage of his experiments with the powder this could not be done and that anthracite ashes seemed to be one of the necessary ingredients to the mixture. Whether there is or is not a chemical property in ashes which makes them necessary to the mixture he says he is not prepared to say. He was reserved in replying to the question if his power would some day make it possible for locomotives and steamships to burn ashes instead of coal, and keep on burning ashes over and over again.

"I do not claim too much," he said. "It would probably not be possible to keep on burning ashes over again by the application of the powder, because it would finally make clinkers. As regards locomotives, I do not think it would be entirely feasible, owing to the limited space on locomotives for storing the powder."

Mr. Geyer said that the powder does not have to be kept hermetically sealed, as it is not affected by the air. Dampness, however, impairs its effectiveness.

Mr. Howard said that he had experimented with several of the so-called fuel-saving powders, once as early as 1886, and until the present had condemned them.

"This powder, however, seems to do what is claimed for it," he said.

SUES W. R. HEARST.

Agent Wants the Price of Six Phonographs Used for His Speeches.

Suit has been brought against W. R. Hearst, as candidate of the Independence League, by John T. Owens, an agent for a local phonograph company, for the cost of six phonographs used last Fall in the up-State campaign, to reproduce some of the Hearst speeches. Some six weeks after the campaign had closed, Owens says, he sent a bill to the League for the machines. No attention was paid to it, nor to others which followed. Personal letters to Mr. Hearst had the effect of bringing a reply to the effect that there was an error in the bill. Owens thereupon placed the account in the hands of Herman Booth. Clarence J. Shearn has agreed to accept service for Mr. Hearst in the suit.

I. T. BUSH MARRIES MRS. M. H. BEARD

Owner of Terminal Docks, Recently Divorced, Weds in Lakewood.

HAD LONG BEEN FRIENDS

Mr. Bush's Attentions to Well-Known Horseman's Widow Caused Much Interest in Lakewood.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 21.—A formal announcement in several New York newspapers to-day informed Lakewood folks that Mrs. Maude Howard Beard, widow of Frank D. Beard, had become the wife of Irving T. Bush, owner of the Bush Terminal Docks in Brooklyn. The ceremony took place here yesterday at noon, the marriage being performed by the Rev. F. J. Goodwin of Rhode Island at Mrs. Beard's cottage in Second Street in the presence of a few friends of Mr. Bush. No members of the Lakewood cottage colony were asked to the wedding. Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Bush departed in a private car for New York.

Irving T. Bush's marital affairs have been the topic of much gossip here for two seasons. This is his second marriage. His first wife, Mrs. Belle Bush, obtained a divorce from him last January on statutory grounds. She is now living in California with her two children. Mr. Bush settled a large sum upon her in lieu of alimony. Friends of Mrs. Bush put the amount at a million dollars. The friendship between Mrs. Beard and Mr. Bush has been the subject of comment here for the last two seasons.

Mrs. Beard is about 38 years old and is the mother of four children, the eldest of which, Rosehud, is 10 years old. Mrs. Beard is the daughter of Joseph Howard, a newspaper writer. Frank Beard, her husband, was a well-known horseman. He died here seven years ago, leaving an estate worth about $50,000. Mrs. Beard in the last three seasons has occupied one of the most expensive cottages in Lakewood and has an automobile and several servants at her disposal. Her cottage is within half a block of Mr. Bush's home. The first Mrs. Bush was very popular in Lakewood, and she had the sympathy of the cottage residents in her trouble.

Mr. Bush is fond of polo and has played in practice games at Georgian Court with George J. Gould and his sons. He was Treasurer of the Country Club of Lakewood, of which Mr. Gould is President, but resigned after his divorce. He lived in the Dwight Harris cottage, directly opposite the Gould home, for several seasons, and then bought the Freeman cottage, in the Lake Drive, which he now occupies.

COUNTY PHYSICIAN A SUICIDE.

Dr. Andrew M. Mills of Newark Kills Himself Owing to Ill-Health.

County Physician Andrew M. Mills of Essex County, N. J., committed suicide by cutting his throat with a surgeon's scalpel, at his home, 122 Washington Street, Newark, at 8 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Mills had been ill for two months, and only returned a few days ago from Jenafly, where he went to recuperate. He had been acting strangely of late. He had just finished dinner with his brother-in-law, James A. Long, and the latter's wife, and entering his office took the knife from his surgical case and drew the sharp blade across his throat. Mr. Long found him dying a few moments later. He was dead when the first physician summoned arrived.

Dr. Mills was 36 years old, and a son of the late Dr. Andrew M. Mills. The son entered politics several years ago, and succeeded Dr. W. H. McKenzie as County Physician when the Democrats got control in January. He was unmarried, and is survived by his mother and two sisters.

GOING TO QUIZ ROOSEVELT.

Federated Union Delegates to Ask About Moyer-Haywood Statement.

More attacks were made on President Roosevelt at yesterday's meeting of the Central Federated Union, starting with the spokesmen of the Moyer-Haywood conference, on account of his failing to notice a communication asking him to retract the statement attributed to him that Mr. Harriman was as undesirable a citizen as Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone, the officers of the Western Federation of Miners, who will be tried next month on the charge of being concerned in the murder of ex-Gov. Steunenberg of Idaho. Albert Ahrahams, a Socialist, who was the spokesman at the meeting, said:

"We look on this as prejudging the case of the men. The Moyer-Haywood conference has appointed a delegate to go to Washington and see President Roosevelt, so as to put him on record in the matter. We want this body to appoint a delegate to go with him. President Roosevelt seems to be playing the same game that a Chief of Police was once reported to be playing. His advice was, 'When you are caught with the goods, say nothing.'

"As it is the habit of Mr. Roosevelt to call people liars it is better to have two men there in order that they may have an opportunity of contradicting him if he denies what he says to them in case he consents to see them, the testimony of two being better than the testimony of one."

It was finally decided to send three delegates instead of one with the delegate of the Moyer-Haywood conference to Washington. The three delegates are John S. Henry, Abrahams, and Morris Brown, who is another Socialist.

Abrahams then announced that the Moyer-Haywood conference would hold a parade on May 4, followed by a mass meeting in Grand Central Palace to protest against the continued imprisonment of the three men.

DENOUNCE THE PRESIDENT.

Chicago Labor Men Resent His Reference to Moyer and Haywood.

CHICAGO, April 21.—President Roosevelt was made the object of denunciatory resolutions passed unanimously to-day by the Chicago Federation of Labor for referring recently to President Charles H. Moyer and Secretary William D. Haywood of the Western Federation of Miners as undesirable citizens.

The action followed a dramatic speech by J. E. Morgan, a member of the Western Federation of Miners. Moyer and Haywood are under arrest in Boise, Idaho, charged with the murder of former Gov. Fank Steunenberg of Idaho.

Unions Seek Back Pay from City.

An effort is being made by the Dock Builders' Union to get a bill passed under which they would get extra compensation from the city amounting to $200,000 for 900 dock builders, who, the union alleges, worked ten hours a day under the eight-hour law before it was declared unconstitutional.

BRYAN IS FAVORITE, SAY PARTY CHIEFS

Democratic National Committeemen Tell of Sentiment in Their States.

MORE POPULAR, SAY SOME

Others Declare He Has Not Lost—No Objection Raised to a Southern Candidate.

Democratic National Committeemen who care to express an opinion at the present time on who the party's standard bearer should be in 1908, are a unit in declaring for the nomination of William J. Bryan of Nebraska. THE NEW YORK TIMES recently addressed three inquiries to the members of the National Committee—the first as to the preference of the voters in the several States; second, as to Mr. Bryan's gain or loss in popularity, and, third, as to whether a candidate from the South would be acceptable.

In only one of the replies received does the committeeman decline to declare a preference. The others, from the East, South, and North, agree that Mr. Bryan is as strong as ever or stronger. No objection is raised to a Southern candidate, although the Southern men do not urge one. The replies follow:

Bryan the Logical Man.

Atlanta, April 20.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Replying to your recent letter I would say:

Q.—What candidate for the nomination would be most acceptable to Democrats in your State? A.—Bryan.

Q.—Has Mr. Bryan gained or lost popularity among Democrats in your State? A.—As strong as ever.

Q.—Would the Democrats of your State favor the nomination of a candidate from the South? A.—Not against Bryan next time. They believe him to be the logical candidate. CLARK HOWELL.

Bryan Stronger than Ever.

Raleigh, N. C., April 19.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Replying to your questions:

1. Mr. Bryan will, without any doubt, be the choice of the North Carolina Democracy for nomination in 1908.

2. He is stronger now with our people than ever.

3. The Democrats of this State would not consider a sectional matter in naming a candidate for the Presidency. They would be delighted to see a Southern man head the ticket who had strength because of his position on public questions and his ability, but not because of his residence. At this juncture there is no Southern man who seems to be available.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Bryan at the Present Time.

Waukesha, Wis., April 18.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I beg leave to acknowledge receipt of your recent letter asking me the following questions:

Question: What candidate for the nomination would be most acceptable to Democrats in your State?

Answer: At the present time William J. Bryan.

Question: Has Mr. Bryan gained or lost popularity among Democrats in your State?

Answer: He has neither gained nor lost. He has been and is very popular indeed.

Question: Would the Democrats of your State favor the nomination of a candidate from the South?

Answer: I do not think the Democrats of Wisconsin would have any prejudice against a candidate because he came from the South, and, with the candidate that they favor, as above set forth, out of the race, I do not think they would oppose a Southern candidate who might be considered generally as available.

T. E. RYAN.

Kansas Thinks of No Other.

Leavenworth, Kan., April 19.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reply to your inquiries contained in your recent letter would say:

First—Mr. Bryan would be the most acceptable candidate for President to the Democrats of Kansas.

Second—Mr. Bryan is stronger with the Democrats of the State than ever.

Third—I do not think the Democrats of Kansas have thought of any other candidate than Mr. Bryan, and consequently I do not think they have at all considered the proposition of nominating a candidate from the South. It can be truly said, however, that there is probably as little sentiment against Southern candidates in Kansas as in any Northern State. Col. W. A. Harris, who was an officer in the Southern Army, has been elected Congressman at Large and United States Senator from this State, and was only beaten for Governor last Fall by a very narrow margin. JOHN H. ATWOOD.

Bryan While He Is On Earth.

Omaha, Neb., April 18.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Received yours asking for an expression as to whom the Democrats of Nebraska will favor for the Presidential nomination in 1908.

We are for Mr. Bryan first, last, and all the time.

Mr. Bryan has gained steadily in our State, and if nominated will carry Nebraska, in my judgment.

I feel that if we did not have Mr. Bryan to put at the head of the ticket we would favor a Southern man for first place, but as long as he is on earth we will be for him against anybody else.

JAMES C. DAHLMAN.

Only Bryan in Iowa.

Waverly, Iowa, April 19.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Replying to your recent favor, beg to state that Bryan appears to be the only man who is being considered by the Democrats of this State, he appearing to have gained rather than have lost in popularity. The fact that no other candidate is being considered either here or elsewhere makes it difficult to answer your last question, but I am convinced that the fact of a candidate's hailing from the South would not be to his disadvantage among Democrats of this State. C. W. MILLER.

Bryan for Two Terms Anyway.

Cordell, Oklahoma, April 18, 1907.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Here are my answers to your questions:

Q.—What candidate for the nomination would be most acceptable to Democrats in your State? A.—W. J. Bryan.

Q.—Has Mr. Bryan gained or lost popularity among Democrats in your State? A.—Gained.

Q.—Would the Democrats of your State favor the nomination of a candidate from the South? A.—After we elect Mr. Bryan for two terms, then a man from the South. Oklahoma is for Mr. Bryan first, last, forever and all the time.

RICHARD A. BILLUPS.

Bryan Leading in Connecticut.

Stamford, Conn., April 20.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I do not think it would be profitable to discuss all the points raised in your recent letter.

So far as my personal observation has gone, however, I am clearly of the opinion that there is no man who has a stronger hold upon the affections of the Democrats of Connecticut than Mr. Bryan. HOMER S. CUMMINGS.

Not Ready to Talk About It.

Burlington, Vt., April 20.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Democratic National Convention is some fifteen months away.

SOTHERN-MARLOWE OPENING.

London Critics Don't Like the Play, but Are Cordial to the Players.

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES CO.

LONDON, Tuesday, April 23.—The large and distinguished audience which assembled last night in the Waldorf Theatre to greet E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe at the opening of their London season did not care much for the play that was presented. It was Charles Meltzer's adaptation of Hauptmann's "The Sunken Bell," and seemed to bore everybody. The regret was universal that the American artists should have been seen in it in their first appearance in this city.

The dramatic critics as a rule are withholding criticisms of the actors until they appear in a play in which it will be possible to show themselves to advantage. A. B. Walkley of The Times commends their pluck, but questions their good judgment in producing in London a quasi-philosophical, more or less mystical, and wholly literary play like "The Sunken Bell."

Mr. Walkley holds that it would be impossible for any actors to charm an audience with such a play. This is practically what the other critics say. A cordial tone toward the actors runs through most of the notices of the opening, and there is no reason to think that last night's failure will have any effect on the judgment of the critics when they come to pass on the other plays in the Sothern-Marlowe repertoire.

THEFTS CAUSE A FAILURE.

Biscuit Company's Bookkeeper and $14.000 Gone—Receiver Named.

As the result of alleged peculations amounting to nearly $15,000 carried on for many months by Harry Kelton of Long Island City, confidential bookkeeper of the Crescent Biscuit & Manufacturing Company, the company found itself unable to meet its obligations. John F. Doherty was appointed receiver for the company by Judge O'Gorman of the Supreme Court yesterday. The application for the receivership was made by the Board of Directors of the company.

President J. W. Callahan of the biscuit company said last night that Kelton had been with the company for more than three years.

"We knew that there was a leakage somewhere," said President Callahan, "but not until an accident directed our suspicions to Kelton did we think of watching him. Kelton was absent one day and the stenographer in making an entry in the books saw that a large customer was credited with 67 cents. Looking up the vouchers she found that the item should have been $20.67. We then engaged an expert accountant, and Kelton disappeared.

"A week later he surrendered himself at Police Headquarters and on trial pleaded guilty to petit larceny of $10. As it was his first offense he was soon released. The books, however, show a shortage of over $14,000, and we are looking for Kelton again."

The liabilities of the biscuit company are $52,907.

THOUGHT KING A BEGGAR.

British Ruler Ordered from Church Door by a Neapolitan Monk.

NAPLES, April 22.—The King and Queen of England, who are here on the royal yacht Victoria and Albert, spent the day in sightseeing. They visited various points of interest in the city, and had one experience which amused King Edward greatly and which brought consternation to an unthinking monk.

The incident occurred in front of the Church of Santa Chiara. Their Majesties approached, with the intention of visiting the edifice, but found it closed, as the monks in charge were taking their midday meal. A member of the royal party knocked on the door for admittance. A monk came to the door, and, thinking those outside were beggars, did not trouble to open it, but called out: "Begone in peace; there is nothing for you here."

This remark amused King Edward immensely, and he laughed heartily. The visitors then knocked again and explained that they desired to visit the church, but the sacristan, irritated at their persistence, shouted out: "Don't bother me; this is no time for sightseeing. The brothers are at luncheon."

At this moment Gen. Saisa, who was passing, recognized the visiting sovereigns and peremptorily ordered the monk to open the door. This he did, and when he learned the identity of those who had knocked for admittance his consternation and embarrassment knew no bounds.

CHASED A FIRE ON WHEELS.

Oil Wagon Blaze Put Out When Firemen Managed to Catch Up.

The men of Engine No. 39 and Truck 16 had a novel experience yesterday in chasing a fire that was on wheels and behind a very much frightened pair of horses.

William Blanco left his oil wagon at noon, and went into a building at Seventy-eighth Street and Second Avenue to deliver some goods for the Mehlen Family Oil Company of Long Island City. The oil was in tin cans, and while Blanco was upstairs one of them was ignited. In a moment the can exploded, scattering the burning oil over the other cans and the street. Then the other cans began to pop, and the horses started to run.

George Farrell, a bystander, turned in an alarm. While the firemen were coming up Second Avenue they saw the runaway horses and the blazing wagon going down Seventy-seventh Street toward First Avenue, and the pursuit started. The wagon was soon overtaken, and Fireman Sheridan caught hold of the runaways, who were unhitched before they were scorched.

Meantime the firemen were fighting the fire with hand extinguishers. The damage, including the loss of the oil, was estimated at $250.

FAST 80-MILE RIDE IN A BIG BALLOON

Alan R. Hawley of the Aero Club Makes a Notable Ascent, Rising 1 2-3 Miles.

SUNBURNED BY THE TRIP

Aerial Car Reaches Speed of 30 Miles an Hour and Runs Alongside a Big Cloud—Landing in the Mud.

Alan R. Hawley, who has been selected as one of the American representatives for the James Gordon Bennett international balloon race at St. Louis on Oct. 19, made one of the most remarkable short-distance balloon flights yesterday that has ever been made in this country. Leaving New York on the 7 o'clock train for Philadelphia in the morning, he made his ascension at 12:37 o'clock from the Point Breeze gas works, accompanied by Arthur T. Atherolt of the Aero Club of Philadelphia.

They were in the air two hours and a half, landing near Matawan, on the edge of Raritan Bay, having traveled nearly eighty miles at an average of more than thirty miles an hour. At one time the balloon reached an altitude of 2,000 meters, about one and two-thirds miles, the highest point ever reached by Mr. Hawley in the twenty or more ascensions he has made in the last two years.

Besides the remarkable speed and height attained by the balloon, the ascension illustrated in a remarkable degree the future of aeronautics as a popular diversion for short and comfortable trips. The trip exemplified the possibility of the balloonist's getting an early morning breakfast in New York, going to Philadelphia by railroad, coming back almost to his home through the air, and arriving in the city in time for dinner.

Late in the evening Mr. Hawley appeared, very much sunburned, but bubbling over with enthusiasm, at the rooms of the Aero Club of America, 12 East Forty-second Street, where, at the earnest solicitation of the members he gave a graphic account of his journey.

"It was the snappiest, sportiest, and fastest trip I have ever made," he said. "I telephoned at 6 o'clock in the morning to have the balloon put in readiness for the ascent and took the first train out of the city.

"When I reached the gas works the wind was very light, but by noon it was blowing nearly thirty miles an hour, and it was all the workmen could do to keep the inflated bag on the ground, even though held down with a hundred or more heavy sand bags. The wind had no terrors for Mr. Atherolt, although it was his first ascension, and when we finally let her go, the balloon shot up in the air as straight as an arrow for 1,000 meters before it found a balancing air current and began to drift rapidly toward the north.

"It was delightful up there, and as we sailed over Trenton we could see the houses, the Delaware River, and the entire landscape below us spread out like a magnificent panorama.

"Just at this time we came close to an enormous white cloud, and the sun shining through it silhouetted our balloon on the big cloud bank in sharp outlines. It was a beautiful picture, and I have never seen anything like it before. The wind then swerved a trifle to the east and carried us toward the sea, but just before reaching Matawan we made another big ascent, attaining our highest altitude of 2,000 meters.

"Cold? Not a bit of it. The nearer we got to the sun the hotter it seemed to get, and I got an well sunburned as though I had spent a week at the seaside.

"When we saw the broad waters of Raritan Bay ahead of us I remembered Leo Stevens's advice about coming down at the sight of water, although if we had gone on we would probably have passed it in safety and reached Coney Island. So I pulled the rip cord and let out a little gas, but as we were close to a house and a big grove of trees, I threw out a couple of bags of sand, which carried us over these obstructions out into an open field. When we finally did strike we discovered that we were in a muddy, marshy morass.

"The anchor didn't hold, and the wind dragged us through the mud and water and across a creek, soaking us to the skin and drenching everything we had in the basket. For some reason the rip cord didn't work well. It had been sewn too tightly, I think, but we finally managed to pull a hole in the balloon, letting out most of the gas, and then we stopped.

"In less than ten minutes nearly a hundred people were on the scene, as we were not far from the village, but they were on one side of the creek and we on the other. Some one got a cart and crossed over a short distance above. I found that in going through the creek the cord attached to the recording instrument showing the various heights we had reached had been lost, but a reward of $5 for its recovery instituted a grand hunt for it by all the youngsters, and it was at last recovered, covered with mud, but still legible."

Mr. Hawley said the spectators helped him pack up the balloon, bundled it into a cart and drove the aeronauts to the Matawan railroad station. Mr. Atherolt returned to Philadelphia, and the balloon was sent there by express.

The balloon used was the Initial, of 35,000 cubic feet capacity, which is owned by A. N. Chandler, President of the Aero Club of Philadelphia.

ELEVATOR DROPS 50 FEET.

Five Persons Hurt in Temple Bar Building, Brooklyn.

One of the elevators in the Temple Bar Building, 44 Court Street, Brooklyn, dropped about fifty feet yesterday afternoon, and, after striking the bottom of the shaft, rebounded eight feet and became stuck between the basement and the first floor.

Five of the nine passengers were injured, one of these being Assistant District Attorney Peter Smith, and two women—Miss Elizabeth Weiburch and Miss Marie Wissenborn, both of 628 Wythe Avenue, Williamsburg. They were not badly hurt, their injuries being mostly bruises and shock.

Joseph Rodriguez, who was running the car, is not a regular operator, but is a porter. He had relieved the operators when they went to lunch. The car, after starting downward from the fourth floor, dropped suddenly, and Rodriguez was unable to stop it before it struck the bottom of the shaft. The passengers were thrown into a heap on the floor, and showered by the glass from the cluster of electric light bulbs in the roof of the elevator. Another operator succeeded in getting the car up to the first floor and the passengers were released. William Warren, a lawyer, received contusions of the back and other bruises about the body. Some of the other passengers were slightly cut by glass.

STEVENS FOR THE NEW HAVEN

Ex-Chief Engineer of Panama Canal to Supervise Special Work.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 22.—President Mellen of the New Haven Road this afternoon admitted that John F. Stevens, ex-Chief Engineer of the Panama Canal, had been engaged by the New Haven Road. He said:

"Mr. Stevens has consented to supervise some special work of the company prior to accepting any permanent connections elsewhere."

President Mellen declined to answer a direct question as to whether Mr. Stevens was to make a revaluation of the property of the New Haven Road.

An official of the Pennsylvania Railroad denied yesterday that Mr. Stevens had been engaged to value the property of the company, and added that the Pennsylvania had taken no steps in the direction of having a valuation made of its property.

An official of the Pennsylvania Railroad Comany to-day denied emphatically the report that Mr. Stevens had been selected to value the property of the company. It was further stated that the Pennsylvania Company had taken no steps whatever in this direction.

TWO PIRATES STEAL A TUG.

"Prize Crew" Boards Craft After Chase on East River.

Brooklynites homeward bound on the ferries last night at 6 o'clock witnessed a thrilling pursuit of pirates on the East River by two tugs. When the craft with its piratical crew was at last overhauled, opposite Hamilton Avenue, the members of the crew were tied with ropes in lieu of irons, and a "prize" crew was detailed to take it back to its moorings.

Capt. Charles McNeill of the tug Claremont had just left the fleet of five boats belonging to the John McNeill Towing Company, with their fires banked for the night, and had reached the company's office, at 29 Franklin Street, when a stranger rushed in and told him that two men had stolen the tug Florence, and were then on their way down the river. McNeill ran back to the dock and started in chase with the Claremont.

Off Hamilton Avenue the chase ended. McNeill drew a revolver and boarded the Florence with some of his crew. At the Greenpoint Avenue Station the captives gave the names of Orlaf Wolsteen and Larf Larsen, both Swedish sailors.

They were charged with grand larceny, as the Florence is valued at $10,000. They refused to say anything about themselves and were locked up.

CAPT. KNIPE'S SON ARRESTED.

Had Clothing Charged to Father Who Will Not Pay.

Thomas F. Knipe, 20 years old, of 80 Irving Place, Brooklyn, a son of Police Capt. William Knipe of the Fort Hamilton Station, was arrested yesterday afternoon on a warrant issued by Magistrate Hylan of the Adams Street Court, charging him with obtaining $70 worth of clothing from a Fulton Street clothing store through false representation.

Young Knipe had the clothing charged to his father, who refused to pay the bill. Young Knipe has not been living with his father for some time. Capt. Knipe has had trouble with his other children. On Friday last he was before Magistrate Furlong in the Gates Avenue Court on complaint of his son John and daughter Grace, who accused him of assaulting them. The hearing was set for Thursday.

NEW 100-MILE-AN-HOUR TRAIN

Hartford Road's Experiments with Electric Equipment a Success.

The first "single phase" electric train ever run in this country is now being operated on the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad between Larchmont and New Rochelle, where tests have been made for three days of that company's new overhead electric system. The initial trials are said to show that trains operated by the new system will be capable of a maximum speed of 100 miles an hour with safety. The officials say the new system is way ahead of the third rail system.

The electric train was standing at New Rochelle yesterday when the "Knickerbocker Express," a five-hour train to Boston, came through at a high rate of speed. The electric train easily kept pace with the express to the end of the two-mile stretch at Larchmont, despite the fact that the steam train had a flying start.

B. R. T. STRIKE COMING?

Report That Firemen and Dynamo Tenders Will Quit To-day Denied.

Some one circulated a report in Brooklyn last night to the effect that the firemen and dynamo tenders employed in the electric power houses of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company had concluded to strike at noon to-day because their wages had not been increased from $2.25 a day to $2.50.

No confirmation of this story was obtainable, as the men employed in the power houses refused to discuss the matter in any shape. Edward Hungerford, the press representative of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, said that if any trouble of the sort was brewing he would certainly have heard of it, but he knew nothing whatever about such a story last night.

A strike of the sort talked about would result in tying up all the lines of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit system.

CORNELL RAPS JURIES.

Says Criminals Are Treated Too Leniently Here.

In holding Henry Stolzer on a charge of burglary in $1,500 bail for trial, Magistrate Cornell in the Harlem Court yesterday, declared that in his life's experience in New York conditions were never so bad as at present and that the trouble was that the criminals were allowed to go unpunished.

Stolzer said he had been living at 1,243 Third Avenue. He has a criminal record. He accused the police of hounding him. Magistrate Cornell did not believe his story and held him for trial.

Mrs. Frank Owens, of 335 East Eighty-ninth Street, identified him as a man whom she had found in her flat on April 5.

"The trouble nowadays," said Magistrate Cornell, "is that the criminal is not punished when he goes up for trial downtown. I have lived all my life in New York and conditions are worse now than I ever saw them. They have juries downtown who are too sympathetic."

TAFT HOME, READY TO SMASH FORAKER

Will Not Fight on Stump, but Gives His Friends Full Liberty.

NO QUARTER TO BE GIVEN

Secretary Says Conditions in Cuba Are Satisfactory—Good Foundations for Canal Locks.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Secretary Taft's reply to Senator Foraker's challenge will be blows, not words. He will not engage in any oratorical rivalry with Mr. Foraker, as the latter desires, but he will give the word to his friends to get out and make a vigorous fight for control of Ohio.

The War Secretary, Representative Burton, and their party landed from the Mayflower here at 11 o'clock. By special order of Secretary Metcalf correspondents were barred from the navy yard by the bayonets of the marines, but Mr. Taft good-naturedly waived this protection, stopped his carriage, and held up both hands with a laugh. He gave out copies of a statement covering the official side of his trip. He said he would go to Ohio at the week end for speeches at Cincinnati Friday, in Dayton on Sunday, and back in Cincinnati on Monday. But he declined to say a word on politics.

His three speeches in and near Cincinnati will not be political. He does not expect to issue any statement defining his attitude in the next few days or in the near future. He will not take the stump for a rough-and-tumble fight through all the counties of Ohio with Foraker. He will go to the Philippines as he has planned, or at least that is his present attitude, and it is a good guess that he will stick to it.

It is likely that Mr. Taft will make some speeches of a general political nature before he goes to the Philippines, but his talk in these will be as a member of the Roosevelt Administration, defining its attitude, and not as Mr. Taft, a candidate for President. It is a good guess that one of these speeches will deal with the Brownsville case, and perhaps another will touch on the rate law. These are two of the texts, it is true, on which Foraker is building his Ohio speeches, but the Taft deliverances will not have the tone of controversial replies.

Will Let Foraker Run.

In short Taft will maintain the attitude which the strongest traditions of American politics impose on a Presidential candidate, leaving to Foraker the rôle of running after the office. But to his friends who will have charge of the fight for him Taft will say: "Go for 'em!" He will tell them to go as far as they like.

Before Secretary Taft left for Panama he told Elmer Dover and Senator Crane of Massachusetts, and later his own brother, Charles P. Taft, that he would not sanction any deal to get the Ohio delegation which involved supporting Foraker for re-election to the Senate. After their talk Crane felt justified in going to Foraker with a warning that the Administration planned Foraker's political extermination, and that Taft sympathized with the idea.

Nothing has happened on the Secretary's trip to change his attitude. On the contrary, Foraker has given him the spur needed to change his possibly passive opposition to active hostility. It is safe to say the Secretary approves the statement of his brother, Charles P. Taft, that the issue in Ohio is the elimination of either Taft or Foraker from Buckeye politics. He has kept posted while on his trip as to the statements issued by his brother and the work done by Arthur I. Vorys, and has given them no hint of disapproval, but rather encouragement to continue.

Burton to Answer Foraker.

But Foraker will not go unanswered, because Secretary Taft feels that he cannot, with propriety, go through Ohio joint debating. Congressman T. E. Burton will issue a statement in a few days which will have the approval of Mr. Taft, and Mr. Burton will make as many speeches in Ohio as may be necessary, in which he will talk with authority for the candidate. Mr. Burton preferred to-night to preserve the silence of Secretary Taft.

"I am very much interested in the success of Secretary Taft's candidacy," he said, "but I am not sufficiently posted as to recent events in Ohio to discuss the political situation to-night. I will possibly have something to say later."

As soon as the situation requires it Mr. Burton will take the field in Ohio. Senator Foraker will get all the fighting for which he says he is hungry.

In his statement about his trip Mr. Taft said he found matters in Cuba "in what under the circumstances must be considered a very satisfactory condition"; that there was every ground for hope that the plan adopted for a census, preliminary election, and then a general election six months later, would result in the choice of a President and Congress who would be able to maintain themselves and give stable rule to the island; and that the delay in taking a census was taken by the Cubans as an earnest of the American Government's desire to secure a stable Government before it left, "so there shall be no excuse for a second intervention."

He said that in Panama the engineers reported to him that the foundations for the sites of the locks were entirely satisfactory. He discussed various administrative matters he took up in Panama.

DICK TALKS OF ROOSEVELT.

Could Beat Foraker Now, but Not a Year Hence, He Says.

AKRON, Ohio, April 22.—Senator Charles Dick, who returned from Washington Saturday night, spent to-day looking after some of his private affairs. In a statement given out to-night he declared that in the coming political contest in Ohio he would do whatever he could for Senator Foraker.

"I do not know whether Senator Foraker will open up headquarters or not," he continued. "If the contest should fall between President Roosevelt and Senator Foraker, the vote now would probably favor the President. A year from the coming June, however, the result would be different.

"I am sure that if Senator Foraker should be made President he would not carry out a reactionary policy that would cripple the railroad development of the country."

CHINESE ENVOY RECALLED.

Liang Tun-Yen, a Graduate of Yale, to be New Minister at Washington.

LONDON, Tuesday, April 23.—The Peking correspondent of The Times says that Sir Chentung Liang-Cheng, the Chinese Minister at Washington, is to return to Peking.

He will probably have the posts vacated by Tang Shao-Yi, namely, President of the Board of Foreign Affairs and Controller-General of Maritime Customs.

Sir Chentung Liang-Cheng will be succeeded by Liang Tun-Yen, at present customs Taotail at Tien-Tsin. Liang Tun-Yen is a Cantonese and a graduate of Yale.

THE MONGOLIA REFLOATED.

Pacific Mail Liner Proceeds, Apparently Undamaged.

MOJI, Japan, April 22.—The Pacific Mail steamer Mongolia, which went ashore in Hayatomo Strait, near here, this morning, was assisted into deep water at high tide this evening, and proceeded on her way.

She apparently sustained no serious damage.

300 HORSES KILLED.

Express Stables Burned in Barrow Street Early To-day.

Three hundred horses were suffocated and burned to death, according to first reports, early this morning in the destruction by fire of the Despatch Stables at 130-142 Barrow Street, near Washington Street. The building was an old two-story brick structure running back to Christopher Street, and the flames spread quickly to every part of it. Three alarms were sent in, the third by Deputy Chief Terpenny.

The Knickerbocker and McKeever Hotels, nearby, were endangered by the blaze, and it was feared the fire would reach them. Their tenants fled to the street in terror, as did also scores of people from surrounding tenements.

BRINGING J. H. SMITH'S BODY.

Liner Siberia Reaches Honolulu En Route from the Orient.

HONOLULU, April 22.—The Duke and Duchess of Manchester and Mrs. J. H. Smith, whose husband recently died in Japan, are passengers on board the Pacific Mail steamer Siberia, which arrived here to-day from the Orient.

The party is en route to New York, and is accompanying the body of Mr. Smith, which is aboard the Siberia.

ODELL'S SON ARRESTED.

Charged with Overspeeding His Auto in Broadway Last Night.

Bryant B. Odell, son of ex-Gov. Benjamin B. Odell, a student at Columbia University, was arrested in his auto last night while on his way back from an automobile trip to Albany. He was caught in Broadway at 105th Street by Policeman Dunham of the West 100th Street Station, who charged him with overspeeding. Young Odell had a student friend with him in the automobile.

R. C. Reed of Newburgh, stopping at one of the hotels here, was telephoned to, and he went to the station and gave bail for young Odell's appearance in court to-day.

VILLAGE JUSTICE A SUICIDE.

Found by Wife at Other Woman's Door, F. W. Gardner Shoots Himself.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., April 22.—When confronted by his wife, Frederick W. Gardner, a wealthy resident of Ridgewood and Justice of the Peace, shot and instantly killed himself to-night at the door of the home of Mrs. Benjamin Eglin, the young wife of the village blacksmith.

Gardner acted as Justice of the Peace and Town Collector, not because he desired revenue from these offices, but because he had a hobby of serving as a public official. His father, who died several years ago, left him a fortune. He was 50 years old. He leaves a widow and a fourteen-year-old daughter.

HATS OFF TO THE FLAG!

Request to Civilians at Parade at Columbus Post.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, April 22.—At the first dress parade of the Spring, held at Columbus Post to-day, several civilian spectators were requested to remove their hats in salute to the National colors.

"I shall insist upon every one removing his hat when the National colors are carried in this parade and on other occasions of the kind," said Col. Glenn, commanding the post. "Everybody should show such respect to the flag of the United States, and I intend to enforce such respect here."

TOO MUCH PROSPERITY.

Reason Given by Western Electric President for Dropping 5,000 Men.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 22.—The Western Electric Company recently has dropped 5,000 out of 25,000 men from its pay rolls. Not hard times, nor the expected approach of hard times, but "too much prosperity," was assigned by President E. M. Barton to-day as the cause of the company's action.

"The high prices for copper, steel, and lead metals, which we use very largely, make construction of plants in which our apparatus is used very much more expensive than at any time for twenty-five years," he said. "Our customers, then, have to face the probability that the plant put in at the present rate of cost could be duplicated within a few years at greatly reduced outlay. The fundamental difficulty, therefore, is too much prosperity."

PASTOR AFTER LONGWORTHS.

Says Entertainment They Gave on Sunday Violated All Laws.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, April 22.—"The breakfast given by the Longworths on Sunday was just as much a violation of the law as the open saloons downtown," declared the Rev. Robert Watson, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, to-day.

In his sermon yesterday the Rev. Mr. Watson denounced the guests at the Longworth breakfast, many of whom were members of his own congregation.

"Congressman Longworth and his family not only broke the laws of the State and Church, but the laws of God as well, in giving an entertainment such as this 'breakfast' on Sunday," he said. "Longworth is a Congressman, sworn to uphold the laws, and yet he deliberately breaks them."

FIND STOLEN BONDS IN BROKER'S BED

$20,000 of Clerk Douglas's Loot Is Recovered at the Manhattan Club.

HELD BY O. M. DENNETT

Given to Him as Collateral — Other Firms Return Securities to Trust Company of America.

When William O. Douglas is arraigned in the West Side Court this afternoon for his self-confessed theft of upward of $100,000 of securities from the Trust Company of America, the officials of that institution will probably be able to report to the Magistrate that all of the bonds are safely back in their vaults. This was the result of a long day's work, and it was accomplished substantially without the aid of the police. Incidentally there had been uncovered one of the strangest defalcation stories of which Wall Street has record.

President Oakleigh Thorne of the Trust Company of America and ex-Justice Morgan J. O'Brien did the work, although neither of them would admit it more than to say that a satisfactory conclusion of the whole matter would be reached to-day. They had made the acquaintance of a man hitherto little heard of in Wall Street—although somewhat better known in Boston—named Oliver M. Dennett. They will remember Mr. Dennett for some time to come, and so will the Governors and members of the staid old Manhattan Club, the Club of Tilden and of Cleveland, for it was through Mr. Dennett that detectives were moved to enter the premises in search of stolen property. The search was successful—but that is getting ahead of the story.

The second chapter of this Trust Company of America case begins where President Thorne left off when he dismissed the reporters late Sunday afternoon. Information had come to the investigators, possibly from Douglas himself and possibly from other sources, that the bonds which he had abstracted as assistant to the loan clerk had been distributed as collateral among a number of brokerage houses, most of them, no doubt, entirely innocent parties to the transaction. A list of these concerns had been obtained, and that gave something tangible to work on. Meantime Douglas was brought up in the West Side Court early yesterday morning and held upon the request of ex-Justice O'Brien, as counsel for the company, for examination at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon.

Detectives Meet Dennett.

But there was something in the information that the trust company officials were able to glean from Douglas that made them want to see Oliver M. Dennett. Little was known of Dennett in the ordinary Wall Street channels of information. His office at 42 Wall Street was an inconspicuous one, and as a member of the Manhattan Club who had his rooms in the clubhouse in Twenty-sixth Street, just off Madison Avenue, there was little about him to attract attention. But two detectives were stationed just outside the doors with instructions to stop Mr. Dennett and have a conversation with him if he should appear.

The detectives did not wait in vain. The morning was little more than half spent when Mr. Dennett came down the clubhouse steps and started for Madison Avenue. The detectives accosted him. Would Mr. Dennett like to talk to them a moment? He would not; he was in a hurry. But they had matters of importance to consult him about, they said, and they would prefer to have a little conversation with him in his rooms. They thought it quite necessary, in fact, to visit his rooms. So they were invited inside.

So it happened that the door boy and the assistant cashier and the under-butler of the Manhattan Club were properly engaged yesterday afternoon, when reporters called there and wanted to know if there had been a "raid" on Mr. Dennett's rooms in that respectable institution. It may even be doubted if any of the club employes knew, when Mr. Dennett turned back to his quarters with two affable-appearing men that it was for the purpose of discussing the Trust Company of America bond robbery; certainly only the caretaker noticed the mussed-up condition of things when they left, or the fact that the upper mattress had been taken quite off the bed up and dumped on to the floor.

$20,000 in Bonds in Dennett's Bed.

But Dennett and the detectives had good reason to take note of the fact, for in between the upper and lower mattresses of the bed had been found some $20,000 of the bonds which Douglas admitted taking from the Trust Company of America, bonds which he said he had put up with Dennett as collateral, and which Dennett, not having a private vault of his own, placed in concealment in their strange place in the Manhattan Club.

The detectives and Dennett went to an uptown rendezvous where Mr. Thorne and ex-Justice O'Brien awaited them, and then began negotiations which will await for their complete narration the return of all the securities which Douglas abstracted and hypothecated.

Just how much the whole batch represents in face value none of the interested parties would say last night. That it was in excess of $100,000 is pretty generally understood. That it will reach anything like the $250,000 that Douglas named in his early statements was denied on all sides.

Some Brokers Return Bonds.

While the trust company officials were closeted with Dennett uptown their representatives downtown were engaged in a round of visits to brokerage houses where some of the securities had been put up as collateral—whether by Douglas directly it did not appear last night. The result was that one house having $25,000 of bonds returned them before the close of business, and that several other houses agreed to release them if the necessary authorizations were obtained. Before night came these were in hand, calling for the delivery of the securities to-day. The trust company officials also had at their disposal whatever cash Douglas had in the bank or in accounts in the several houses, and the matter was reasonably well cleared up from their point of view.

During all the negotiations a vast air of mystery enshrouded the affair. The Central Office police and Pinkertons denied that there had been any visit to the Manhattan Club. Mr. Thorne and ex-Justice O'Brien remained invisible all day, and Dennett was the same. Forbes J.

Hennessey, who had been retained as Dennett's counsel, was not to be found.

Robertson Honey of 35 Nassau Street, who appeared as counsel for Douglas in court, contented himself with saying that Mr. Douglas would in time meet all the allegations. Mrs. Douglas, who was with her husband at the time of his arrest in the Portland on Sunday, disappeared from view also, and it was understood that she had gone to the home of her parents.

Douglas himself proved a cheerful talker in the prison of the West Side Court yesterday afternoon, but what he said did not add materially to the sum of knowledge about the case. He had some sad reflections on the evils of Wall Street gambling, said that he had been at it for some time; that his downfall dated from the slump in the market in March, and that he had given the detectives information that might prove to his own advantage when the affair was probed to the bottom.

Mr. Dennett's Career.

Inquiry as to Mr. Dennett's career showed that he had been in business at 42 Wall Street for a year and a half, had had some dealings in bonds in a small way with such reputable houses as Redmond & Co. and Tefft, Parmlee & Nash, now E. T. Tefft & Co.

In Boston, in 1902, Dennett was known to the financial community as cashier of the Beacon Trust Company, an institution about which there was some speculation at the time of the famous Globe Bank failure. He did not remain a banker long after that, for the talk about the Beacon Trust in connection with certain "brokers'" accounts which had come to it during his régime as cashier was such that all hands were satisfied when he resigned not long before the concern of Sargent & Co. of Boston went out of business. It may be remarked that Sargent & Co. ran a bucket shop, and the firm was known as the Boston end of Floyd, Crawford & Co. of this city, whose lamentable finish happened at about the same time that Woodend & Co. and several kindred enterprises went to the wall.

Not long after his retirement from the Beacon Trust Company Dennett organized the firm of Dennett, Crane & Blanchard, which had a membership on the Boston Stock Exchange. That lasted only a few months, and after it came the firm of Dennett Bros., which, according to the common report, was backed by a man who was then a Director of the Beacon Trust Company. The firm of Dennett Bros. was in a position to profit by Sargeant & Co.'s connections with such houses as Floyd, Crawford & Co., and the extent of which was hardly appreciated until Dennett Bros. failed in the Autumn of 1903 and a receiver was appointed.

It was, indeed, a notable failure for Boston. The liabilities were about $150,000, and of this total individual depositors with the firm thought Dennett personally accountable for about $75,000. They were so strong in their opinions that some of them applied for warrants, but before these were served Dennett had given up his home in Brookline and was on his way to Jamaica.

There was a receivership for Dennett Brothers, and the records of this receivership developed that Floyd Crawford & Co were creditors of the bankrupt firm to the extent of $11,000—on paper—then "Ed" Brady, known in Boston through the firm of Deever & Co. was a creditor; that Longley, Hale & Co., another concern of the period, now defunct, was a cerditor, and so on. In fact, it was charged that Dennett Brothers were not far removed from being a clearing house for a pretty extensive chain of bucket shopping operations that ran into New York through Floyd Crawford & Co. and had extensive ramifications throughout New England.

In the Autumn of 1904 Dennett returned to Boston and was arrested on the complaint of F. D. Nelles of Watertown on a charge of larceny of $3,000 which had been left with him to buy Amalgamated Copper. He was held in $5,000 bail for trial, but the case was finally settled out of court. Soon after Dennett came to New York.

Not Much Heard of Here.

In this city it was through the firm of F. R. Moseley & Co., members of the "N. Y. Con. Stock Exchange," that Dennett first attracted public notice. F. R. Moseley was a young man who applied for membership in the Consolidated Stock Exchange a year or so ago, and was admitted to that body. Moseley didn't do so much on the floor, but he developed into a great advertiser. The newspapers contained the ads of "F. R. Moseley & Co., members of the N. Y. Con. Stock Exchange," in such large type and with such offerings of "investment securities" that the Governors were moved to look into the matter.

They were quite aware that there was a large New York Stock Exchange house named F. S. Moseley & Co. They knew, as well, that in certain instances before, attempts have been made to trade upon the name and reputation of legitimate concerns by varying the spelling of a name or one of the initial letters. Moreover, the Consolidated's Governors believed that F. R. Moseley was acting for Dennett. Not long afterward F. R. Moseley sold his seat on the Consolidated Stock Exchange. The date was Oct. 29, 1906, and since that time, down to the arrest of Douglas, little was heard of Dennett except by his fellow-members of the Manhattan Club.

Mr. Dennett has not been at his home in South Orange since Saturday. Mrs. Dennett expected her husband to return last night, but it was said that he had not done so at 10 o'clock. Mr. Dennett has been a resident of South Orange for several years, and is well known in local political circles. He was identified with the reform movement, and was a candidate on the taxpayers' ticket for the Board of Trustees of South Orange at the last election, but was defeated.

HUGE NIAGARA ICE BRIDGE.

American Falls Broken Up by the Drift from Lake Erie.

Special to The New York Times.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., April 22.—The American falls went dry to-day in sections owing to the immense ice fields forced down from Lake Erie by a tremendous gale. Where the full sweep of water usually plunges over there were four separate falls, presenting a very peculiar sight.

A massive ice bridge has formed in the gorge.

STRIKERS ATTACK THEIR EMPLOYERS

Oscar Margolin and His Son, Cloak Manufacturers, Beaten in the Street.

POLICE MAKE FIVE ARRESTS

One Man, Alleged to Have Hit the Senior Partner with a Gas Pipe, Is Held for Trial.

When Oscar Margolin left his house, 168 Madison Street, yesterday, to go to his cloak factory at 20 Lispenard Street, he was greeted by the howls of some sixty of the operatives of his and adjoining establishments who have been on strike for the last five weeks.

He had scarcely got out of sight when his son, Samuel, came out. The crowd chased Samuel, who said later that he ran because one of them had a knife. They threw pieces of bricks at him, and some of these hit and cut Samuel's head.

Meanwhile Oscar Margolin, the senior partner, had crossed Broadway and was close to the building in which his factory is located. There must have been 200 on the block waiting for him, he says. As he was about to turn in at his doorway one of his own strikers stopped him.

Strikers Attack Margolin.

"Why don't you recognize the Children's Cloakmakers' Union?"

Margolin attempted to get by, when some one in a group that had crowded close upon him reached over the shoulder of the man who had spoken and struck Margolin in the face with his fist.

Margolin broke through the crowd and got this man by the collar, holding fast to him. Then a rescue was attempted. Margolin, clinging to his original assailant with one hand, fought back as best he could with the other. Finally, one of those on the outskirts got a piece of gas-pipe and struck Margolin over the head repeatedly.

It wasn't more than three seconds after the last blow had been struck with the gas pipe when he wrenched the pipe free and threw it behind him into the dark stairway. The coat collar of his assailant he grasped with his free hand. Then for a time the crowd had him at its mercy, as both of his hands were occupied by his prisoners.

"Kill him! He won't give us electric irons," shouted one striker.

"Kill him, he won't recognize the union," another cried.

Policemen Gleason, Donahue, Colton, and Hayes of the Leonard Street Station arrived on the run.

Police Arrest Five.

Harry Silverstein of 250 Division Street was pointed out by Margolin as the man who had hit him with the gas pipe. Later he was held in $1,000 bail for trial in the Tombs Court. Three other prisoners—Barnett Remenoffsky of 8 Rutgers Place, Abraham Lish of 202 Cherry Street, and Morris Freund of 256 Monroe Street—were fined $10 each. Later Bernard Klavenoff of 248 Cherry Street, on being identified by Margolin as one of his assailants, was locked up.

"Those foreigners," said Margolin, after it was all over, "are out on strike, and they don't know what they want. Few of them are citizens. They made as much as $30 a week, some of them, and they wanted electric irons. They learn too fast after they get into America. Why, in Russia they starved, and now they want the latest electric devices. Soon I shall have no business at all."

NO LEGAL AID SUBSIDY.

Educational Alliance Opposes Asking Albany for an Appropriation.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Educational Alliance last evening Benjamin Tuska, for the Law Committee, reported that there had been introduced into the Assembly by Mr. Prentice a bill to authorize the city to make annual appropriation of $25,000 to the Legal Aid Society, and asked if the Educational Alliance should ask to have an appropriation bill introduced to obtain a similar legislative subsidy in behalf of its legal aid bureau.

After discussion it was resolved that the Educational Alliance should not apply for legislative aid, on the ground that to do so would establish an unwise and dangerous precedent if public money were to be applied to the use of a private association.

DOZEN SHOTS FOR BURGLAR.

Police and Residents Pursue Suspicious Person in East 63d Street.

About a dozen shots were fired at a supposed burglar shortly before midnight last night by policemen and residents in East Sixty-third Street, between Madison and Park Avenues, in a chase over fences. The suspicious person managed to get away, escaping through a gateway leading into Park Avenue.

A special policeman saw the man crossing an excavation at Sixty-third Street and Madison Avenue and vault a fence leading to the homes in the block. He called Policemen Fox and Collins, who followed the man over the fence and ordered him to stop. Instead, the man jumped over another fence and then started away for the next. The policemen fired twice in the air, but the fugitive did not stop.

In the meantime many persons in the houses had been awakened, and several men appeared at windows with revolvers. They took a few shots at the runner, but without known result.

FAIRBANKS-CANNON DEAL.

Conference Said to Have Planned to Dispose of Illinois Vote.

Special to The New York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 22.—What is believed to be a political conference is in progress at the residence of Vice President Fairbanks to-night. Those present include Speaker Joseph G. Cannon, United States Senator Hemenway, and prominent members of the State Republican Committee, who were summoned at the suggestion of Mr. Hemenway.

It is believed that Mr. Fairbanks is trying to get rid of the Cannon candidacy in Illinois, and that he has gained a pledge through friends that the Speaker will not be in his way after the first ballot in the convention.

Senator Hemenway has been the agent of the Vice President, it is said, in the negotiations, and has learned that, though the Speaker does not expect the nomination, he would be much gratified to have the solid vote of his own State on the first ballot. It is believed that to-night's conference was held to effect this end and give Illinois to the Vice President on the second ballot.

PLAN TO REGULATE PEDDLERS

Bill Provides That There Be Restricted and Unrestricted Districts.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 22.—Senator Frawley introduced a bill to-night which has been prepared at the instance of the Charity Organization Society to carry out recommendations made by the Mayor McClellan Push Cart Commission. Lawrence Veiller, Secretary of the Charity Organization Society, had this to say regarding the bill:

"The plan of regulation may be described in a word, as 'distribution' of the peddlers, instead of their abolition. The city is divided into two main districts, the 'restricted' and 'unrestricted.' Different kinds of licenses are issued for each district, but no more than four peddlers are ever allowed on one block, two on each side of the street."

No more than one license is to be issued to the same person; the license is not transferable; all licenses expire at one time, viz., June 30; the license fee is raised to $10, and special temporary licenses are to be issued for the various Jewish and Italian holidays at a much smaller fee.

MARRIAGE BILL OPPOSED.

Grady Wants No License System—Vote to be Taken To-day.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 22.—The Senate spent a long session to-night wrangling over a bill introduced by Senator Cobb, which provides for a marriage license system in this State. The bill was made a special order for to-morrow.

Senator Grady said it was the most radical and most dangerous departure from existing marriage laws which could well be conceived. It would take the matter out of the religious sphere and place it in the hands of the civil authorities. He made it plain that he voiced the opinions of Roman Catholics.

Senator Cobb declared that his measure had the indorsement of many Catholic clergymen, that the Protestant clergy were a unit in favor of it, and that it had been approved by many prominent persons.

"Talk about North Dakota being a disgrace to the United States," he said, "it is not half as much a disgrace for giving people who cannot live together the opportunity of obtaining a divorce, as is this State for making it possible for ministers of the Gospel to marry children to criminals and go unpunished."

AGAINST INSURANCE POOLS.

Assemblymen Advance Bill to Forbid Combinations on Rates.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 22.—By a vote of 94 to 6 the Assembly to-night refused to recommit the Smith Anti-Fire Insurance Pool bill. It was advanced to third reading.

Hoey of New York fought the bill, aided by Prentice. Smith quoted figures from the Insurance Department which showed one company to have made a profit of 295 per cent. in 1905. This statement fired Merritt, who declared that when a company made such profits it was high time the State stepped in.

Schmidt of New York said the bill would prevent the formation of rate boards, and would also do away with inspection by underwriters, and as an insurance broker he was against it.

HUGHES SIGNS BILLS.

Ticket Dealers to Give Bonds—Police May Kill Injured Animals.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 22.—Gov. Hughes to-day signed the Wells bill compelling installment steamship ticket agents to give bonds, and the Francis bill giving the police of New York authority to destroy injured animals.

The Wells bill provides that all corporations, firms, and persons who sell steamship tickets on the installment plan shall give a bond to the State in the sum of $15,000 before Sept. 1. Firms which transmit money to foreign countries, except banks and transatlantic steamship companies, must also give a bond in that sum.

The Francis bill allows a policeman of the metropolis to destroy any animal which has been abandoned or has suffered injuries, providing two citizens approve of such action. At present only agents of the humane societies have such powers.

OPPOSE UTILITIES BILL.

Buffalo Chamber of Commerce Plans United Demand for Changes.

BUFFALO, April 22.—Acting upon the suggestion of Henry J. Pierce at the dinner given here last Thursday evening, at which Gov. Hughes was a guest, the Chamber of Commerce passed resolutions to-day protesting against the passage of the public utilities bill in its present form.

A committee of five, of which Mr. Pierce is Chairman, was appointed to obtain the co-operation of other chambers of commerce in opposing the bill until it is amended with reference to a court review and in other important features. The committee may call a convention of representative business men of the State to discuss the matter.

The resolutions say the actual effect of the bill, if passed in its present form, "would be seriously to affect the business, commerce, and labor of this State, including both the public and private corporate and individual transaction thereof, and to work severe detriment if not lasting injury, thereto."

With Mr. Pierce on the committee are W. H. Andrews, Hugh Kennedy, T. S. Fassett, D. M. Irwin, and W. H. Gratwick, President of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mass Meeting Favors Utilities Bill.

A resolution favoring the passage of the Public Utilities bill was adopted last night at a mass meeting held under the auspices of the West Brooklyn Board of Trade at the Borough Park Clubhouse, Thirteenth Avenue and Fiftieth Street, Brooklyn. The meeting was called to protest against the numerous accidents caused by the B. R. T. trains to Coney Island. Congressman Waldo said that the Public Utilities bill, if passed, would force the company either to elevate the tracks or to dig a subway.

Election Reform Bill Hearing.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 22.—The Insurance Committee of the Assembly will give a final hearing on the Reger's bill Wednesday night. The measure does away with proxies at elections of Directors, provides an official ballot, and makes various other changes to do away with the evils that developed at the election in December.

Assembly Votes to Adjourn May 9.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 22.—Majority Leader Moreland introduced a resolution in the Assembly to-night providing for final adjournment May 9 at 2 P. M. It was adopted with a roar of "yeas." It is expected that the Senate will amend it by substituting the date of May 16.

THESE WOMEN WOULD ASK MEN TO MARRY

Daughters of Ohio Think Girls Might Be Allowed to Pop the Question.

PRESENT PLAN CONDEMNED

They Discuss Politics and Are Partial to Both Hughes and Secretary Taft.

The State Society of the Daughters of Ohio met at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria yesterday, had an impromptu programme, decided that both Taft and Hughes were good Presidential timber, exploded an old theory concerning the influence of women, and Mrs. de Rivera asked the society why women should not pop the question.

It was the expressed views of men in the daily papers which caused Mrs. de Rivera to ask herself this weighty question before she proposed it outside. One helpless man who did not wish to be married had asked for help through the papers. Two women, he said, were bound to marry him, and if he did not receive aid in some way he was going to succumb to one of them in spite of himself.

"Now," said Mrs. de Rivera, "the way that every girl is brought up nowadays is to believe that the one thing in life for her is to be married—have a little husband, a little baby, and a little flat. The cry of the times is that the girls must not go out into the world, but go back to their natural sphere—the home.

"But what I would like to ask is how the girl is going to do this if she doesn't have a chance to make the opportunity? If she tries to make an opportunity she is considered unworthy, unmaidenly, and no good. If a girl in America is brought up to believe that she must marry, then she ought to have the opportunity to get a husband.

"It is like teaching a boy a trade and then not letting him practice it. A girl should not be educated that way."

There was no dissent from this view. Then the Daughters took up politics.

Mrs. Gerard Banoker took it up.

"I have the pleasure and honor of being a Democrat, although my husband is a Republican," said Mrs. Banoker, "and he has the vote. I have always heard a great deal about woman's influence, but my husband has never voted my way yet. This time I am going his way, for personally my mind is turning a little in favor of Gov. Hughes for a Presidential candidate, for I believe he would be the best man. I would like to have a Democratic President once, though, just to see how it would seem.

"It is to be hoped by all good and right-thinking Americans," said Mrs. Taylor Morse, who began the political discussion in a paper upon current events, "that that son of Ohio, Secretary Taft, will be our next President, and carry on the good work that President Roosevelt has begun."

"He would be a happy medium between Radicalism and Conservatism," said Miss Helen Varick Boswell, "and it may be that he is the kind of Moses we need to lead us through the political wilderness."

"We have had six Presidents from Ohio," said Mrs. Charles C. Ruthrauff, "but I am going to be disloyal now, and I think Hughes is the man."

Then the women said that an impromptu discussion was much more interesting than the regular papers they had expected to have read, and adjourned into the next room for tea.

MAYOR REVIEWS THE 12TH.

Medals Presented to Marksmen at 60th Anniversary Celebration.

Mayor McClellan stood with the survivors of the Old Guard Association of the Twelfth Regiment last night in the armory at Sixty-second Street and Columbus Avenue and reviewed the regiment as it manoeuvred before the reviewing stand. Beside the Mayor and back of him were veterans who fought under the banners of the Twelfth when the North and South were at war.

It was the sixtieth anniversary of the organization of the Twelfth Regiment National Guard of New York, and the forty-sixth anniversary of the date the regiment left for the front. Col. George R. Dyer was in command.

Gen. Robert Avery, President of the Old Guard Association, occupied a chair next to that of Mayor McClellan. The General's comrades of the Old Guard number less than 300 now, and many of them were unable to attend the anniversary last night.

After the review there was a presentation of medals and trophies. Upon the breasts of each of the successful members of the regimental rifle team the Mayor pinned medals. Those who received medals were Sergt. C. M. Smith, Sergt. Charles Whelan, Private Van Hensen, and Sergt. L. A. Nice, of Company B; Sergt. Charles McKevitt, Corp. Arthur Newell, and Sergt. Caulfield, of Company C; First Lieut. R. Meyer, of Company D; Sergt. R. Fields and Private Donovan, of Company G; Sergt. F. Berger and Sergt. P. Magnen, of Company K; Commissary Sergt. F. J. Laughlin, and Ordnance Sergt. John P. Fennell, N. C. S.

Company B received the Association Trophy, Company D the Butt Trophy, and Company G the Three-Team Trophy.

When retreat had been sounded and "The Star-Spangled Banner" played, the men of the Old Guard gathered in the big reception room of the armory and the Mayor made a short speech.

WHOLE CHOIR QUITS.

Old Organist of Huntington Church Objected to Interference.

Rather than submit to having his morning musical service cut by just one anthem, three minutes long, Prof. George H. Brock, organist and choirmaster of the Huntington, L. I., First Presbyterian Church for thirty-six years, has resigned. The entire choir also resigned last Sunday. All save one of the choir are relatives of Prof. Brock.

The choir consisted of three of Prof. Brocks' daughters, one of his sons, three of his sons-in-law, a sister of a son-in-law, and Mrs. Charles W. Colyer, who quit with them. No one in the choir had been there less than eight years, and two of the members had been singing there over twenty-five years.

A letter came to Prof. Brock from the session of the church, saying that it had been unanimously agreed that the Sunday morning service should be abridged by one anthem. Nothing was said about the retention of the choir. Last Sunday the singers were not in the loft. But habit or something else had seized the old organist, and he was there. After the services his resignation was accepted.

The church is 240 years old. Its pastors have held their pulpits usually forty and fifty years. The organist had presided over the same organ a third of a century. Any change in the church affairs is an epoch-making thing. Some say that the rebellion may split the church.

BLACK HAND TRIAL.

Thirteen Prisoners at Wilkesbarre—Court Interpreter Accused.

Special to The New York Times.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., April 22.—Thirteen Italians whom District Attorney Salsburg hopes to have sent to prison for long terms were brought before a jury here to-day. They are alleged to be leaders of the Mafia and Black Hand societies which for a number of years have been terrorizing the Italian mine workers of the upper districts of this county, murdering, wounding, writing threatening letters and using various means to frighten their fellow-countrymen into paying them a regular tribute for protection.

Thirteen cases of shooting with attempt to kill, 13 of conspiracy, 6 of dynamiting, and 2 of robbery by threats and menaces are charged against the men.

The primary charge is of conspiring to force Charles, Joseph, and Salvatore Rizzo to pay them a regular tribute. When this case is ended the men will be tried on the other charges, and it is expected that the trials will last for three weeks.

Charles Rizzo gave some testimony this afternoon, but during the course of it the defense declared that the interpreter was coloring the evidence, and the case was abruptly adjourned until to-morrow morning, when another interpreter will be on hand.

ITALIAN'S PLEA FOR KILLING.

Pavone's Story That He Was Black Hand Victim to be Investigated.

The story of Black Hand oppression told in court yesterday by Enrico Pavone of 127 Hester Street, who pleaded guilty to manslaughter in the second degree, caused Justice Blanchard, in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, to remand him to the Tombs until Friday, to enable detectives to investigate his statements. Pavone shot and killed Nunziato Legato of 51 Mott Street on Nov. 18 last, when the men were standing at Mott and Grand Streets.

In court Pavone, through his attorney, made no effort to deny the shooting, but declared that he was only technically guilty, since he had really fired in self-defense. Pavone is 30 years old and is well educated. In Italy he was a court stenographer, although in this country he has been a bartender.

According to Pavone, Legato was at the head of a Mano Nero, or Black Hand Society, whose headquarters are at White Plains.

WARNING TO BLACK HANDERS.

Judge Fawcett, Sentencing One, Says All Will Get the Limit.

Judge Fawcett of the Kings County Court served notice upon members of Black Hand gangs in Brooklyn yesterday that they would receive the limit of punishment when convicted before him. The court issued the warning while sentencing George Franko, an Italian, supposed to be one of the leaders of a band of blackmailers, to Sing Sing for four and one-half years.

"This practice of levying tribute in a free country must stop," said the court. "I regret that the Legislature has not given this court the power to send you to prison for twenty years. These conditions should not be tolerated in a civilized community."

Alfano to be Deported.

Enrico Alfano, alleged leader in Italy of the secret and criminal Camorra society of Naples, who was arrested in this city last week, was turned over to the immigration authorities yesterday. He will be deported to Italy.

TELLS OF $50,000,000 GIFT.

Rockefeller to Aid Chinese, Preacher Says—Peabody Doubts It.

LOUISVILLE, April 22.—The Rev. Carter Helm Jones, pastor of the Broadway Baptist Church, said to be a close friend of John D. Rockefeller, said yesterday in a mission sermon:

"I can say to you that the greatest benefactor of the Baptist Church has about completed the arrangements for a gift of $50,000,000 for the education of the Chinese."

When questioned after the sermon Mr. Jones refused to qualify his statement or give any details, contending himself with the declaration that it was correct.

George Foster Peabody, Treasurer of the General Education Board, said last night that, so far as he knew and believed, there was nothing in the story of a $50,000,000 Rockefeller fund for the Chinese.

"About a month ago, just after Mr. Rockefeller had returned from Georgia," continued Mr. Peabody, "that same story was told, its reputed author being in that case a preacher. The story is foolish on its face."

HONOR J. Q. A. WARD.

Aged Sculptor Guest of the National Arta Club.

John Quincy Adams Ward, the sculptor, was the guest of honor at a dinner held at the National Arts Club in Gramercy Park last night, which was attended by the foremost sculptors, artists, architects, and professional men in this country.

Nearly every man who spoke alluded to the enduring monuments of Mr. Ward's genius, naming his statue of Shakespeare in Central Park, his Washington in front of the Sub-Treasury in Wall Street, his statue of Horace Greeley at the Tribune Building, and others.

The sculptor's age crept out during one or two of the speeches. The speakers said he was born in 1830, and waited for a denial—which the guest of honor did not make. The sculptor himself delivered a speech with considerable snap and ginger in it.

In the end he received a silver loving cup, which had been sent to him by the Soldiers and Sailors' Monument Association of Onondaga County because of a monument which Mr. Ward is erecting in Syracuse.

The men who sat at the guest table with Mr. Ward were Spencer Trask, President of the National Arts Club; Lorado Taft, a Chicago sculptor; Sir C. Purdon Clarke, Director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art; C. Howard Walker, a Boston architect; F. Hopkinson Smith, engineer, painter, and author; Dr. Ernest M. Stires, rector of St. Thomas's Church; Edward M. Shepard, the lawyer, and Charles R. Lamb, the sculptor.

CARNEGIE BENEFICIARIES.

Four Educators in State Institutions Get Retiring Pensions.

J. D. Bowman, Secretary of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, announced to-day that, although the Foundation has declined to admit State universities to the accepted list of beneficiaries of the fund, it has given retiring allowances to the following educators:

E. Benjamin Andrews, Chancellor of the University of Nebraska, who has been a prominent teacher and educator for thirty years; Francis H. Smith, for more than fifty years Professor of Natural Philosophy at the University of Virginia; William W. Folwell, for fifteen years President of the University of Minnesota, and now Professor of Economics in that university, and Amos N. Currier, for forty years Professor of Latin and Greek in the University of Iowa, and now Dean of the College of Liberal Arts in that institution.

MILK DEALER FINED $1,800.

Anton Koster Convicted of Skimming Milk in His Creamery.

Anton Koster, a creamery man, who has milk depots in Davenport Center, Delaware County, was fined $1,800 by Supreme Court Justice Ford yesterday, after a jury had found him guilty of skimming milk. The prosecution was carried on by Special Attorney Gen. Kellogg of Oneonta, N. Y., who declared that this case would mark the end of frauds on the part of creamery proprietors.

Testimony was given by two State Inspectors of the Health Department. They had secreted themselves in the creamery belonging to the defendant, and had seen him lift the cream from the milk by means of a conical dipper, they said. They had followed the skimmed milk to the city and had traced it to places where it was disposed of.

SAW CLERK ROB LETTERS.

Veteran Postal Employe, Who Played the Races, Confesses When Caught.

David E. Steadman of 424 Clinton Street, Brooklyn, a clerk in the Registry Office of the General Post Office, was arrested yesterday in the act of opening a registered letter and taking $2 from it. He confessed, and stated that he had been stealing mail for several months, but could not say how much in all he had taken.

Nearly half the letters sent by immigrants to their relatives in Europe cannot be delivered. The addresses are imperfect. The persons for whom they are intended have shifted their places of residence, and in very many cases by the time a letter has been sent back from foreign lands the writer has also changed his place of residence. Moreover, foreign post offices take a very long time in returning "dead" letters. Inspectors Jacobs and Mayer were detailed to discover the thief. They set a watch upon the clerks employed, ascertained their habits and expenditures, and drew conclusions as to who was most open to suspicion.

Their search led them to keep an eye on Steadman, although he was one of the most trusted employes in the department. He had been nineteen years in the service, and was one of the three men to whom was confided the combination of the safe. Often he acted in place of the Assistant Superintendent.

Part of his duties was to seal up letters damaged in their passage through the Post Office, and he had authority to take out of the mail any package which he considered needed attention.

According to Chief Inspector Walter S. Mayer, they discovered that Steadman kept up his sleeve a spindle, with which he could quickly open any package which seemed to him promising. He then examined its contents and passed it over to one of his subordinates to close again. On Sunday night the detectives hid themselves where they could plainly see all that he did and awaited developments.

Mrs. H. Grossman of 407 North Paulina Street, Chicago, wrote some months ago to Pinchos Hisia Howtz in Jerusalem, Palestine. The letter was not delivered, and came back in the regular course through the dead letter office. The detectives state that they saw Steadman open it, and sprang out on him at the very moment that he was taking out a $2 bill.

He was brought to Chief Inspector Mayer's office, and there it is alleged admitted that he was guilty. He said he had been rifling the letters since Christmas, but did not remember how much he had taken. Most of his hauls consisted of small bills, and only once in a long while did he come across so much as a $10 or $20 bill. The Inspectors believe that he has really been carrying on this petty pilfering for a much longer period than he admitted.

Steadman was arraigned yesterday morning before Commissioner Shields and held in $2,500 bail on the charge of stealing $2 from the United States mails. In default of bail he was sent to the Tombs. He is a married man with two children. In his pocket, the Inspectors say, were found racing "dope-sheets," and it is supposed that the poolrooms got most of his money.

CITY WANTS TO PAY.

Will Offer Compromise to Lighting Companies on Old Bills.

Chief Engineer Lacombe of the Department of Water Supply, Gas, and Electricity has recommended that the city make a settlement with the Consolidated Gas Company and the subsidiary concerns of the old city lighting bills, the arrears of which are now drawing interest at 6 per cent. The basis of settlement to be proposed will probably be the payment of all electric-lighting bills at the present legislative rate, the payment in full of all arrears prior to Feb. 6, 1906, and the payment for gas furnished since then at the rate of 75 cents a thousand.

JAPANESE PRINTS SOLD.

First Sale of the Field Collection Brings $1,617.

Two hundred Japanese color prints, part of a collection made by Hamilton Easter Field of Brooklyn, were sold last night at the American Art Galleries and brought $1,617. E. Colonna of Montreal, a collector; Dr. E. Rockwell of Newark, Miss Semple, Samuel Isham, Joseph Dow, and Paul B. Haviland were among the purchasers.

The highest price of the evening was $27, given by Mr. Colonna for a print by Sharaku, worked about 1790, a fine early impression showing an actor in a striped robe. An album containing twenty pages of color prints, by Suzuki Harunobu, brought $26, and another by the same artist, containing eighteen pages, brought $21. A polychrome print by Harunobu went to Mr. Colonna for $21. Prices ranged from $2 up.

This is the first of a series of sales of Mr. Field's collection, but no others will be given this season. The collection was made during ten years which the collector spent in Paris.

3 DEPORTED FROM COLON.

Men Charged with Trying to Get Labor to Leave the Canal Arrive Here.

On the Panama liner Finance, which got in last night from Colon, came three men who were deported by the military police of the Canal Zone on charges, it is said, of having attempted to induce labor to leave the employ of the Government and go to Boeas del Toro to work on the banana plantations. The trio were put on board just before the vessel sailed. They gave their names as John Veach, Henry Jackson, and Charles Ellis.

DENY QUARRELING ON POLICE SHIFTS

Mayor and Bingham Say the Report Is False and More Transfers Are Made.

POLITICIANS SEE A PLOT

Say McClellan Will Drop His Police Commissioner as Soon as the Legislature Adjourns.

A part of Commissioner Bingham's time is taken up these days denying the constantly reappearing story that there has already been a quarrel between him and Mayor McClellan—a quarrel, it is argued, that will lead to others and give the Mayor the excuse he wants to get rid of Gen. Bingham, now that he has served to get through the Police bill that gives so much power to the Commissioner, who may therefore do valiant political service for any side he wants. That is the way the matter is argued on one side.

It is said that Gen. Bingham will go out about May 1, or a few days after the Legislature adjourns. It wouldn't do, it is argued, for the Mayor to turn out now the man who got through the bill. The Legislature might rebel and nullify it.

The Commissioner's secretary is still sick, and that entails harder work on Gen. Bingham. But he found time yesterday morning to say that the story of a quarrel between him and the Mayor over the reduction of Inspectors Cross and McClusky was "a goldarned lie." He had said the same thing last week when the story originally appeared.

"Nothing in the story at all," he continued.

"Did you and the Mayor discuss last Saturday the reduction and transfer of Inspector Cross?" he was asked.

"I will not answer that question."

Doesn't Know Sullivan Men.

"It is said, too, that in reducing and transferring men you are aiming at the friends of the Sullivans?"

"Why, I don't know the Sullivan men in the department," answered Gen. Bingham. "It would be impossible to make a large number of transfers without touching some of them, I suppose."

Mayor McClellan was asked about the story yesterday morning and replied:

"That story is an unmitigated and unqualified lie. I am tired of having the question put to me all the time. There are three papers published in New York City which have not published the truth about me or my administration for the last two years, and this is but another instance of the truth of the assertion."

Senator McCarren, who fought the Police bill at Albany, paid the Mayor a visit yesterday morning. It is said that the police administration of Borough Inspector Cross, which place he lost on Friday, was quite satisfactory to Senator McCarren and his allies.

In spite of the emphatic denials of both Mayor McClellan and Commissioner Bingham that they have already quarreled, the story will not down that the Mayor is determined that they shall. Some argue that this may explain why the belligerent demoted Inspectors have not started any suit to test the Police bill in the courts. They point out that the reduced Inspectors, who are pretty wise men politically, are just waiting to see what is going to happen.

More Transfers.

Of course some twenty-odd transfers were made yesterday, but that is a little thing nowadays. Nineteen Patrolmen and five matrons were shifted. Lieut. Cornelius F. Casey, said to be a faithful Sullivan man, was shifted from the easy berth at Jefferson Market Court to the East Fifty-first Street Station, whose commander is a brother of Fire Commissioner Lantry, one of the few out-and-out Tammany leaders in favor of McClellan. Casey swaps positions with Lieut. W. J. Ennis.

Three more of the Lieutenants connected with the Detective Bureau were sent out to do precinct work yesterday. They were John T. Howard, John T. Cain, and Michael Ready. Lieut. William Day, who was shipped out to do work in the West Thirty-seventh Street Precinct, was moved up to West Forty-seventh Street, and Maurice Bonnell, who was sent on the same day to the Madison Street Station, was moved still further from the Detective Bureau—out to Whitestone. Cain, Howard, and Ready are to work in the Second Inspection District under Russell, one of the new Inspectors.

It was rumored around the Federal Building yesterday that Commissioner Bingham had asked Capt. William J. Flynn, now at the head of the New York Division of the United States Secret Service, to assume the head of the Detective Bureau. The city position would not pay nearly so much as the United States job, and it would frequently be subject to the vagaries of politics. The Captain laughed when he was asked about the story.

KILLED ON RYAN'S ESTATE.

Superintendent Shoots Son of Sheriff of Nelson County, Virginia.

LYNCHBURG, Va., April 22.—At Oak Ridge, the Virginia estate of Thomas F. Ryan, to-day, W. G. Loving, Superintendent of the estate, shot and almost instantly killed Theodore I. Estes, son of the Sheriff of Nelson County.

Loving immediately surrendered. Details of the tragedy are meagre.

It is understood the tragedy was caused by domestic trouble. Young Estes was looking after the unloading of a car of fertilizer when Loving approached and opened fire, the first load of buckshot striking Estes in the right side and the second in the neck.

The parties to the tragedy are among the most prominent people in Nelson County. Young Estes was related by marriage to Gov. Swanson.

USED AUTO TO CATCH THIEF.

Detective Impressed One to Follow Alleged Negro Swindler.

When William Jones, a colored waiter living at 215 West Forty-ninth Street, told Thomas Rhodes, a laborer, of the same color, living at 68 West Forty-third Street, that he could get him a good job as janitor if $75 security was put up, the latter believed him and turned over the money. He alleges that he never saw Jones again until yesterday afternoon, when he came upon the alleged holder of his security at Forty-eighth Street and Broadway. Rhodes grabbed his man and yelled for the police. Jones broke loose and started down Broadway. Soon there were some 300 persons after him.

Lieut. Peabody of the West Forty-seventh Street Station was at Forty-seventh Street, when he caught sight of the fleeing negro and started after him. Jones turned west on Forty-seventh Street, and was rapidly outdistancing pursuit, when Peabody impressed an automobile into service. The chase nearly ended at Forty-ninth Street and Eighth Avenue. Jones took a car and Peabody jumped from the automobile and attempted to arrest the negro. The latter got away and fled to Broadway and Forty-seventh Street, where he was arrested.

BRIDEGROOM, BUT NO BRIDE.

She Loved Another and Priest Let Guests Go When She Didn't Appear.

John Cobach of John Street, Bayonne, was to have been married yesterday to Miss Anna Mercer, who also lives on John Street, but at the last moment he learned that he was not the John who had captured Anna's heart.

The wedding was to have taken place at St. Joseph's Church, on East Twenty-second Street. Some 200 guests had gathered, the priest was ready to officiate, and the organist was playing the wedding march. Cobach, with his attendant, stood at the main entrance to greet the bride and her attendants, but the bride came not.

After waiting for some time beyond the hour set for the ceremony, the priest dismissed the guests, saying that he thought the bride had met with an accident or had been taken ill. Cobach was the last to leave the church. He hurried to the home of his fiancée and found her attired in her wedding gown. She was weeping and her wedding bouquet was at her side. She tearfully told the broken-hearted John that she had discovered that her heart belonged to another, whose name is also John. Cobach in vain tried to learn his rival's other name. The girl said she was sorry to disappoint the guests and spoil the wedding feast, but she could not think of marrying John Cobach. She had donned her wedding gown to please her mother, she said, but had refused to enter the coach sent to convey her to the church.

BENEDICT GIMBEL DEAD.

Merchant's Wife Offered Her Blood to Save Him, but It Was Too Late.

Benedict Gimbel, the Philadelphia merchant, who cut his throat and wrists in his room in a Hoboken hotel last week, died in St. Mary's Hospital, Hoboken, at 3 o'clock yesterday morning. His brothers, Charles and Isaac Gimbel, took the body to Philadelphia for burial in the afternoon.

Gimbel's death was a surprise to the members of his family. He had been doing nicely until Sunday afternoon, when he began to fail. Believing that his condition was due to the loss of blood, his wife offered to permit the physicians to infuse some of her blood into the body of her husband. This same offer was made by all the other members of the family, but the doctors realized that it was too late to save him, and they said the sacrifice would avail nothing, as it was evident the man would not recover, and the operation for the transfusion of blood was not performed.

The widow broke down yesterday afternoon, and it was with difficulty that the rest of the family were able to get her to leave the body of her dead husband. She had to be supported by two doctors when she left the hotel for the station to take the train for Philadelphia.

This statement was given out by Gimbel Brothers at Philadelphia:

"Gimbel Brothers is a corporation, managed by the seven brothers, deceased being the youngest of the number and holding a small minority block of the stock. His demise will have no more effect on the business than the death of any one Director of a railroad."

DIGGING GOLD ON EAST SIDE.

Alleged Find of Laborers in an Excavation Arouses Excitement.

Twenty-five laborers were excavating in the ruins of the National Biscuit Company's Building, Montgomery and Water Streets, early yesterday morning, when suddenly one of them dropped his pick, and, holding up a lump of dirt in which a few yellow streaks could be seen, shouted, "It's gold."

Every man stopped work, and this attracted the attention of Pavel Podrossky, the big Polish foreman. Sure enough the find looked like gold ore, and there was more in sight. The men were very much worked up, but they returned to their digging. Every little while a man would show unusual diligence and then go out of the hole with his pockets bulging and disappear. By noon there had been ten desertions and a guard was stationed to keep the others from leaving.

The word went out through the district that gold had been found, and soon came men and women armed with shovels, all anxious to continue the work of cleaning out the fire ruins of the Biscuit Company's plant. The Monroe Street and the Madison Street miners met some distance from the mine, and then followed a race to the excavation.

Among those who were fortunate enough to get some of the "gold" was Daniel Hussey of 90 Montgomery Street. He took the stuff to an assayer, who promised to let him know the result in three days. Most of those living in the district believe gold has been struck and are anxious to lay up a supply of the ore. The police may have to be called upon to keep the would-be miners from staking out claims in the excavation.

STEAD VS. MUNSTERBURG.

Professor Worsted at Harvard—Students for "Pilgrim" Plan.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 22.—In spite of the refusal of the presiding officer, Prof. Hugo Munsterburg, to put the motion, a mass meeting of Harvard students in the Union to-night indorsed W. T. Stead's plan of sending an American peace delegation to Europe and furthered Mr. Stead's request that Harvard should take the lead in raising money for the movement by the appointment of a college committee to consider the matter.

Prof. Munsterburg, who is the Professor of Psychology in the university and was one of the German delegates at the recent Peace Conference, in refusing to entertain the motion for the appointment of a committee, said that the meeting which Mr. Stead had just addressed, was a chance gathering and not a representative one as far as Harvard was concerned.

SHIFT BY MAYOR IN AHEARN INQUIRY

He Names Special Counsel as Commissioner of Accounts, Dropping Von Skal.

TO MEET LEGAL OBJECTION

Quick Action When Borough President's Attorney Advises Witnesses Not to Testify.

The public investigation into the affairs of Borough President Ahearn's department, held before the Commissioners of Accounts in the reception room of the Mayor's office, was abruptly suspended yesterday afternoon, and within ten minutes thereafter George Von Skal, one of the Commissioners, had resigned, and John Purroy Mitchell, who, as special Assistant Corporation Counsel, had been doing the questioning, had been sworn in as Mr. Von Skal's successor.

This move by the Mayor and Corporation Counsel Ellison was made to strengthen the former's hand and at the same time head off an expected move by Martin W. Littleton, counsel for Mr. Ahearn, in the courts. Mr. Littleton has maintained that the Corporation Counsel and his assistants were as much the advisers of the Borough President as they were of the Commissioners of Accounts, and that the investigation, if held at all, should be held by the Commissioners solely.

During yesterday morning the hearing dragged along. George F. Scannell, Superintendent of Highways, under Mr. Ahearn; George R. Olney, chief engineer, and William H. Walker, Superintendent of Public Offices, had all been called as witnesses and had refused to answer, declaring that Mr. Littleton had informed them that the Commissioners were without power of jurisdiction. They were warned that they were liable to be prosecuted for contempt, and their refusal to answer was entered in the record. Then they and Mr. Littleton withdrew from the hearing.

About 3 o'clock Hermann Ridder, at whose request Mr. Von Skal was appointed, appeared at the City Hall and sent in for the Commissioner. The two went to the Mayor's office, where Mr. Ellison already was. Then Mr. Mitchell was sent for. A few minutes later Mr. Ellison went to the reception room and whispered to the other Commissioner, John C. Hertle, who at once adjourned the hearing until Wednesday.

Five minutes after this the Mayor issued the following statement:

"In view of the situation as expressed in the public interview given out by the Governor last Wednesday, and with a view of furnishing the Commissioners of Accounts with legal talent so that the present investigation of the Department of the Borough President of the Borough of Manhattan, and such other investigations as may be found advisable, may be conducted expeditiously and thoroughly, and without retaining special counsel, I have to-day appointed Mr. John Purroy Mitchell a Commissioner of Accounts in the place of Mr. George V. Von Skal, resigned.

"Mr. Von Skal's services have been satisfactory, but in view of the labor ahead of the Commissioners and the nature of it, he, I believe, felt impelled to retire. I, in view of the vacancy thus caused, am gratified to be able to avail myself of the services of Mr. Mitchell, who is now entirely familiar with the affairs of the department undergoing investigation.

President Ahearn, when apprised of the change, refused to discuss it further than to say:

"Well, the Mayor undoubtedly has a right to change his Commissioners as often as he changes his mind."

Mr. Von Skal was asked what induced him to resign.

"Did I resign?" he asked, laughing.

Tombs School Needs Funds.

The Tombs School Committee of the Public Education Association issued a general appeal yesterday for $200 with which to complete the current year. PISTOL, PERHAPS, ENDED JANIS'S LIFE

Actor Believed to Have Shot Himself and Then Dropped Overboard from Liner.

NO WARNING OF SUICIDE

Had Been in High Spirits—Bade Good-bye to Mother and Wife or Fiancee on New York Pier.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

LONDON, April 22.—Passengers on the Atlantic Transport liner Minneapolis, which arrived at Tilbury this evening, brought to London the story of the death of young Percy Janis, the actor, in the early hours of the third day out from New York. Though a certain amount of mystery still shrouds his death, all the circumstances point to suicide. It is believed that hanging over the ship's side he shot himself and dropped, mortally wounded, into the sea.

Members of the "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" company, with which he was associated, were inclined to suppress certain facts connected with the suicide out of consideration for Janis's mother and sister, but the information they withheld was supplied by other passengers, so the story is fairly complete.

It appears that Janis's mother, who bade him good-bye on the New York pier, handed him as a farewell gift a bottle of champagne. On Sunday, the second day at sea, he uncorked the champagne, treated his friends, and seemed about the happiest passenger aboard. His hilarious but boyish manner made him very attractive to his fellow-travelers. When evening came he was the only passenger who dressed for dinner, and this fact elicited considerable joking, all of which Janis accepted in good part.

After dinner Janis and a number of friends went to the smoking room. Forest Robinson, who was in the party, said they had refreshments there.

"Afterward," he went on to say, "Janis and I sat by the companionway until near midnight. I left him lying across two chairs on deck, with his pumps kicked off near by."

How long Janis remained on deck was not known, but George Parker, his roommate, taking up the narrative, said:

"Janis came to our room somewhere near 1 o'clock, changed his evening dress for a bathrobe and overcoat, leaving his money and cardcase under his pillow. I thought he had gone to bathe, but presently he returned and seemed to be searching his baggage for something. I was too sleepy to pay much attention. He came back a second time and searched again. Then he turned out the light, and I thought he had gone to bed. Next morning I noticed that his bed was unoccupied, but thinking that he was on a lark, I did not report his disappearance until after careful search failed to find him."

It appears from statements of passengers not attached to the theatrical company that Janis's searching of the stateroom was for the purpose of finding his revolver. Evidently he found it and shot himself with it, for it has not been seen since his death. When Capt. Gater heard of his disappearance he ordered a thorough search of the ship. Janis's overcoat and bathrobe were found near the companionway on the starboard side, but no trace of him.

It is thought that Janis was unmarried, but Grace Griswold of the "Wiggs" company, who has known him for several years, said that possibly he had a wife. Miss Griswold says he was engaged to a pretty girl playing in "The Vanderbilt Cup" and that this girl bade him an affectionate goodbye on the New York dock.

Janis's watch, $70, and his other effects will be sent to the Consul General to-morrow.

Mrs. Janis, the mother of Percy Janis, said last night that she could not credit the report that he had committed suicide. "He did not have a revolver," said Mrs. Janis, "and he left this side in the happiest possible mood, full of ambition."

Janis was to have been married on his return to Miss Elise Steele, who is playing in "The Vanderbilt Cup."

DISCUSS MODUS WITH US.

German Committee's Acceptance of the Agreement Expected.

BERLIN, April 22.—The Economic Committee, composed of thirty agriculturists, manufacturers, and business men from all parts of the empire, met at the Ministry of the Interior to-day to consider the prolongation of the tariff arrangement with the United States.

The fear is expressed in unofficial quarters that the conferences will be protracted. The majority of the committee is composed of Agrarians and large manufacturers, who take the ground that it is unjust to extend to the United States the most-favored nation treatment upon the basis offered, and that if the arrangement must be accepted a delay of as long as possible is better than its immediate acceptance, in order to create the impression in the United States that the arrangement is adopted with great repugnance and that the trade regulations between the United States and Germany rest on a precarious basis. The eventual acceptance of the agreement, however, is regarded as certain.

In an official statement given out this afternoon the view is expressed that the conferences of the Economic Committee will probably lead to an agreement concerning the provisional arrangement with the United States.

Governor of Santa Clara Decides in Favor of New Yorker.

HAVANA, April 22.—Gov. Tellez of Santa Clara Province has issued a decree annulling the resolution passed Feb. 15 by the Municipal Council of Cienfuegos revoking the contract made by a former Council with H. J. Reilly of New York for the construction of an aqueduct and sewerage for the city.

The Governor says that the action of revocation is illegal and unconstitutional.

Woman Who Shot Merlou Acquitted.

PARIS, April 22.—The woman named Allemagne who made an attempt upon the life of Pierre Merlou, who was at one time Minister of Finance and who is now Minister of France to Peru, in this city last November, has been acquitted by a jury of the charge of attempted murder.

The woman fired four revolver shots at M. Merlou while he was walking in the Boulevard des Italiens. Two of the bullets struck him in the leg, but the wounds were not serious. The woman was arrested and declared her act to be one of vengeance. She is supposed to be the same person who made an attempt upon M. Merlou's life several years ago.

BRYCE CRITICISED.

Members of Parliament Think He Should Have Gone to Pittsburg.

LONDON, April 22.—In view of dispatches published here at the time of the inauguration of the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburg and generally credited to C. F. Moberly Bell, manager of The Times, in which the British Government was criticised for not being officially represented at the ceremony, leaving Germany to monopolize the most prominent position among the foreign representatives, Foreign Secretary Grey was questioned in the House of Commons this afternoon regarding the reason for this omission.

The Financial Secretary to the Treasury, Mr. Runciman, on behalf of Sir Edward Grey, said the invitations to the Pittsburg ceremony had no official character. They were issued to the heads of foreign missions only, and Ambassador Bryce, who then had only just returned from Canada, had important business to transact at Washington, making it impossible for him to absent himself.

Continuing, Mr. Runciman pointed out that the German, Austro-Hungarian, French, and Russian Embassies were not represented at Pittsburg. Oxford and Cambridge Universities were represented, and Mr. Runciman thought that this was the most suitable and convenient form of representation on such an occasion.

The Pittsburg question also came up in the House of Lords to-day. Lord Leith of Fyvie complained of Ambassador Bryce's absence, saying that Great Britain had stood aloof, and it would be most disappointing to see the late Lord Pauncefote's great work of re-establishing a good understanding between the United States and Great Britain endangered by an act of indifference which might be misconstrued into something stronger.

Lord Fitzmaurice, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, repeated the explanation made by Mr. Runciman in the House of Commons.

PITTSBURG, April 22.—Upon reading of the questions in Parliament relative to the non-official character of the English guests at the dedication of the Carnegie Institute, Samuel Harding Church, Secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Institute, to-night made a statement in which he said:

"I was very careful to have this question brought before the King of Great Britain and his Ministers, and also before the President of France. King Edward notified me in a most gracious and considerate way that he did not think it entirely within the limit of official procedure to take part actively in the dedication, while the French President wrote merely a formal letter of congratulation, which was signed by his private secretary.

"The German Emperor exhibited the liveliest possible interest in the dedication, and with one exception the guests in attendance from Germany were chosen directly by the Emperor. However, the character of the guests from Great Britain and France was of the highest standard represented by our civilization."

MARCH TO WESTMINSTER.

Thousands of Discharged Woolwich Arsenal Workmen Protest.

LONDON, April 22.—The "cry of the unemployed" was raised in London again to-night, when several thousand skilled workmen who had been discharged from Woolwich Arsenal as an outcome of War Secretary Haldane's scheme of reducing military expenses, marched with bands and banners the long distance from Woolwich to the House of Commons to impress their grievances upon the Government. The complaints of the men are far-reaching, being not only of loss of employment, but of the wiping out of their savings invested in little properties in the historical and heretofore prosperous town of Woolwich.

Some of the discharged men had been employed in the arsenal for thirty years. A number of printers and other tradesmen, laborers, and citizens of various classes joined the procession, which was further augmented by a strong body of workers from the army clothing factory in Pimlico. The entire eight miles of march was thickly lined with spectators. The procession, which was perfectly orderly, stopped at St. George's Circle, one mile from the Houses of Parliament, and from there a deputation of picked men proceeded to the House of Commons to lay the grievances of themselves and their comrades before Premier Campbell-Bannerman.

The Premier received the deputation in a private room, War Secretary Haldane and Lord Tweedmouth, the First Lord of the Admiralty, also being present. William Crooks, member of the House of Commons for Woolwich, introduced the deputation, and the men then explained their grievances.

The Premier made a sympathetic reply and assured the men of the Government's anxiety that the inevitable discharges should entail as little hardship as possible.

Mr. Haldane explained the necessity of the reduction in military expenditure and the need of bringing things down from the inflated position which obtained during the late war. He said there must be still further reductions, but promised that every scrap of work possible would be given to Woolwich. Lord Tweedmouth promised to do whatever was possible on behalf of the Navy Department. The deputation then withdrew.

Conservatives Win in Spain.

MADRID, April 22.—The returns of the elections of members of the Chamber of Deputies, held yesterday, are all in and show a sweeping victory for the Conservatives. Out of a total of 404 seats in the Chamber, Conservatives have been elected to 260; the Liberals have 63; the Republicans and Catalanists 50, and other political groups 31.

Soldiers Enthusiastic—Reactionists Want Admiral Dubassoff Appointed Dictator.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 22, (via Eydtkuhnen.)—I yesterday attended a meeting of the Russki Sobranje, the parent society of all the Old Russian organizations. M. Gringmut, editor of the Moscow Gazette, was the principal speaker. He demanded the dispersal of the Duma and the institution of a dictatorship for the repression of progressive agitation, by bloodshed if necessary. For this office he nominated Admiral Dubassoff, who was worthy, M. Gringmut said, to take a place in history as a second Duke of Alba.

The approving audience belonged to the upper and middle classes. The tumultuous applause was led by the Metropolitan of Moscow and four other Bishops sitting on the platform.

Telegrams pour in from many sections to the Czar asking him to dissolve the "revolutionary and blasphemous Assembly." The League of Parish Priests of Volhynia asks permission of God's anointed to march to the capital with 100,000 parishioners to defend the ancient faith and institutions of the country. While some of the telegrams are inspired from police sources, undoubtedly the greater number sincerely represent the views and state of mind of a large fraction of the population.

The Czar replies by simply thanking the people for the expressions of loyalty which the telegrams contain.

Parades and banquets of the troops at the imperial residence at Tsarskoe-Selo increase in numbers. Yesterday I saw the Czar present his son and heir Alexis to the troops and Cossacks from Don, Ural, and Siberian districts. As the Czar walked in and out among the rude soldiers, carrying in his arms the exceedingly handsome, black-eyed boy who is their Grand Hotman, the enthusiasm was simply indescribable.

Nevertheless, Prof. Miliukoff, the historian, and M. Teslenko, who, with one or two other members of the Moscow delegation, form the steering committee of the lower house, tell me today that they believe the Czar will continue to maintain a constitutional attitude to the strife of parties.

LODZ'S CARNIVAL OF CRIME.

Bomb Kills Soldiers Escorting Official Carrying Money.

LODZ, April 22.—Thirty Terroriste this evening held up a carriage, in which a portion of the funds derived from the Government sale of spirituous liquor was being transported to the bank. The carriage was escorted by soldiers. The Terrorists threw a bomb, which destroyed the vehicle, killed three of the accompanying soldiers outright, and mortally wounded five more, as well as the coachman and a Government employe who had the money in charge. They obtained $2,000 and made their escape.

Lynch law has been inaugurated by the Nationalists to put an end to the Socialist outrages here. Having captured one of three Socialists who murdered a fifteen-year-old girl, the Nationalists took their prisoner to the outskirts of the city, tried him, sentenced him to death by hanging, and carried out the sentence.

Last week's victims of Nationalist-Socialist fights totaled 23 killed and 57 wounded. The majority of the casualties were among the Socialists.

TAMBOFF, April 22.—Father Simeon, Rector of the Ecclesiastical Seminary here, was shot and seriously wounded to-day.

The seminary was recently closed as the result of political disorders, and it is thought that the would-be assassin is an ex-student.

SEVASTOPOL, April 22.—The petitions for the transfer of Gen. Nepluieff, commander of the fortress here, to some other command have resulted in his appointment to comand Kovno Fortress, but the Revolutionary Committee declares that the General will never leave Sevastopol alive.

Members of the Duma Hope to Learn What the Emperor Means to Do.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 22.—The discussion in the Lower House of Parliament of a motion disapproving Terrorism, which was expected to result in a stormy debate, has been postponed in the belief that a personal interview between M. Golovin, President of the House, and Emperor Nicholas, which will take place to-morrow, will throw some light on his Majesty's mental attitude toward the Duma.

Premier Stolypin to-day informed M. Golovin that M. Ponomarieff, Chief of the Government detectives attached to the Duma, would be removed. M. Ponomarieff's main work was to furnish confidential reports of the doings of the Deputies, and it is understood that his highly colored accounts caused much of the friction between Premier Stolypin and the House.

Notes of Foreign Affairs.

PARIS, April 22.—Authoritative quarters here regard the report from Brussels relative to the cession of the Congo Independent State to France as being due to the Belgian party conflict, the Congoists merely desiring to threaten Belgium with the loss of the Congo. Moreover, it is pointed out that such a cession would be impossible without the consent of the Belgian Parliament, and that, should it be given, it would still be a question whether France would take over the responsibility. No suggestion has yet been made here on the subject.

GIBRALTAR, April 22.—The Japanese cruisers Tsukuba and Chitese, after a warm welcome here, sailed to-day for England on their way to Jamestown, where they will represent the Japanese Government at the Jamestown Exposition.

ST. NAZAIRE, April 22.—The stewards of the French Line steamer La Champagne struck last night before the departure of the vessel for Vera Cruz with many emigrants and other passengers on board. Others were engaged, and the vessel sailed, but she was obliged to return to port this morning owing to the fact that the stokers struck in sympathy with the striking stewards.

TANGIER, April 22.—The reply of the Sultan to France's demands for redress in connection with the murder of Dr. Mauchamp arrived here to-day. It is in the form of a lengthy, confused document, and it is said that it does not grant all the French claims, but shows a desire to negotiate.

LONDON, April 22.—Sir Robert Bond, Premier of Newfoundland, had his first conference with Foreign Secretary Grey at the Foreign Office this afternoon. The subjects discussed were the Newfoundland fisheries and the negotiations with the United States on the subject.

MADRID, April 22.—The condition of Queen Victoria continues normal. To-day she followed her usual custom of driving out in the morning and afternoon.

WAITERS IN PARIS HOTELS JOIN STRIKE

Few Establishments So Far Affected — Managers Profess Confidence.

BUT FEAR FALSE REPORTS

Believe Tourists Will Be Deterred from Visiting City Owing to Supposed Labor Unrest.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

PARIS, April 22.—With the news that the waiters of four hotels have joined the strike of café and restaurant garçons, it might be supposed that the movement is entering upon a new and more formidable phase, but inquiries made to-night by THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent indicate that the situation is regarded with equanimity by the proprietors and managers of the great majority of hotels in the capital.

The first signal that the strike had extended to the hotels was given at the Continental, where the restaurant waiters left work in a body just before the dinner hour, and this evening three other caravanserais were affected. These are the Hotel du Louvre, the Hotel du Palais d'Orsay, and the Terminus. One report had it that the strike had also extended to the Grand Hotel, but the manager, Jaeques Regli, to-night stated that not a single waiter had left his service.

"The cases of the hotel waiters and the café and restaurant waiters are not similar," said M. Regli. "With the exception of one or two hotels, where bad treatment is accorded to the waiters, it is well known that the hotels pay their staffs in addition to leaving them their entire earnings from tips. A spirit of unrest is, of course, in the air, and it is not likely that all the members of the guild will prove immune, but even if there be some defections as an outcome of the appeal which the Syndicate of Hotel Employes issued to-day I do not apprehend any general movement.

"So far as the employes of the Grand Hotel are concerned, I have no reason to fear. The only suggestion of discontent I heard came from a little third-floor waiter, who said he would like to grow a mustache."

M. Cesari, the manager of the Elysée Palace Hotel, in the Avenue des Champs Elysées, was equally optimistic. "The terms on which my personnel are engaged are very favorable," he said. At the Ritz, the Bristol, the Vendôme, the Londres, the Liverpool, the Dominici, and all the other hotels in the neighborhood of the Place Vendôme, the Continental excepted, the possibilities of a strike are regarded as very nebulous. Along the Rue de Rivoli also the managers feel or affect complete tranquillity. The manager of the Hotel Regina said his staff were all paid by the hotel, and no percentage was levied on tips. The manager of the Hotel Scribe stated that a general strike was not to be feared because there was such a large proportion of foreigners among the hotel servants, who were not affiliated with the Parisian syndicates. "Besides," he added, "in case of a strike there would be no difficulty in replacing the discontented ones. A few telegrams to Switzerland would bring trainloads of new and capable hands."

There is unanimous regret that the trouble should have broken out just at the opening of the tourist season. As the manager of the new Hotel Meurice, on the site of the famous old hostelry in the Rue Rivoli, put it:

"There will undoubtedly be great numbers of people who will be deterred from visiting Paris unless the situation is very speedily improved. Many English, for instance, believe that Paris resembles a volcano which is liable to break into eruption at any moment, and the sensational reports which will undoubtedly be circulated will keep this class at home."

It is noteworthy that the waiters' strike so far has been eminently pacific, remarkably devoid of the incidents which frequently mark labor troubles in this country. Parisians regard it as merely an amusing show, to be seen without expenditure of money or trouble, and, truth to tell, it is causing very slight inconvenience to the public. In fact, the burden of the strike has fallen almost entirely upon the shoulders of a relatively small number of café and restaurant proprietors, a dozen at the most. These are in the main establishments where the tolls levied upon the waiters by the proprietors are exceptionally heavy.

Most of the cafés on the boulevards this evening were working at full blast inside and out, for the air was mild and the terraces were crowded.

EXCULPATES GERMAN LINER.

German Admiralty Court Disagrees with British Tribunal.

BREMEN, April 22.—The verdict of the German Admiralty Court on the collision last Nov. 21 between the North German Lloyd steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse and the British Royal Mail Line steamer Orinoco off Cherbourg is that the accident was "due to excusable errors on both sides."

The British Admiralty Court on Dec. 18 decided that the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosso was alone blamable for the collision of Nov. 21. The suit was brought by the owners of the Orinoco for damages, which, it was added, would be assessed later.

The authorities at Cherbourg regarded the Kaiser Welhelm der Grosse as having been at fault. Thirteen persons lost their lives and fifteen were injured as a result of the accident.

Plan for Boer Volunteer Force.

LONDON, April 22.—It is said that Gen. Botha, Premier of the Transvaal, will, through the Imperial Conference, seek the consent of the Government to the establishment of a volunteer force of Boers in the Transvaal.

ONE of the most interesting Picture Exhibtions ever held in Brooklyn has just been opened in the Art Galleries. It includes oils, silver point and pencil drawings by Carl J. Becker and some of his best work.

There is a notable painting of Joseph H. Choate done in oils, and also a silver point drawing of Mr. Choate.

There is a silver point drawing of President Roosevelt, signed by the President, and a very fine likeness.

There are silver point drawings of Mary Anderson, Elsie Janis, Allen W. Evarts and others.

There is a fine pencil portrait of Admiral Porter.

It is a collection in which every Brooklynite will be interested.

Women's New Costumes.

THE DISPLAY OF NEW COSTUMES inspires enthusiasm. It reflects the best in Fashion. It includes immense assortment—exceptional variety. It manifests the very best work of the most skillful makers. It evidences what is possible to determination and experience in the matter of low prices.

There are laces, nets, voiles, silks, crepes de chine, peau de cygnes, taffetas, drap d'etes, broadcloths, etc. The prices range from $25 to $150. This hint of three of the noteworthy values:

Black Taffeta Costume at $35.
Princess style, with waist and skirt accordion plaited, and a yoke back and front of Val. insertion with Venetian edge and finish of applique. The elbow sleeve has a cuff of the same lace that forms the yoke, and there is a girdle embroidered by hand with fagoting and spider-web designs.

Crepe de Chine Costume at $50
The waist has an elaborate yoke back and front formed of pin tucking, featherstitching and lace. The elbow sleeve has a decoration of pin tucks with lace cuff. The skirt is pin tucked to yoke depth with a deep corded flounce below. Waist and sleeves are lined with mousseline de soie.

French Voile Costume at $67.98.
Pin tucked net, combined with heavy Oriental lace, form a smart blouse over which goes a graceful bolero effect of embroidered taffeta. The short sleeve is finished with embroidered taffeta and Val. lace ruffled. The skirt is a new trained model with panel front, tucks to yoke depth and inverted plait at the back, and is trimmed with bias folds piped with taffeta. A richly braided Princess girdle completes this effective Costume, which is lined throughout with an extra quality of taffeta.

Minnesota Senators Report $185,000,000 Overcapitalization in That State.

ATTACK ON A. B. STICKNEY

He Is Said to Have "Harrimanized" the Chicago Great Western—Peculiar Figures Cited.

ST. PAUL, April 22.—Railroad property in Minnesota is valued at $215,000,000 by the Sundberg Investigating Committee, which returned its report to the State Senate to-day. This is approximately $27,000 a mile. The property is capitalized to the extent of about $400,000,000, or $50,000 a mile on an average. The net earnings a mile, according to the findings, averaged last year 18 per cent. on the committee's valuation.

The committee, which consists of Senators Sundberg, Cashman, Canestorp, Nelson, and Sageng, recommends that "a committee or commission of three be empowered to investigate generally into the capitalization of the railroads of Minnesota and the relation the stocks and bonds bear to the value thereof, and the enactment of such appropriate legislation as the conditions disclosed demand."

The report says that in arriving at the cost of reproducing and equipping the different lines in their present condition the committee considered:

"First, the original cost of construction; second, the cost of improvements, betterments, and equipment added since; third, the cost and character of the lines recently built; fourth, the expense of operating and the earnings under existing rates; fifth, the stocks and bonds and the value and water thereof; sixth, the geography of the line and the judgment displayed in its location."

A large section of the report is devoted to criticism of the Chicago Great Western. This road, it says, "was built by A. B. Stickney, who raised the funds by acquiring, organizing, reorganizing, and 'Harrimanizing' divers and sundry corporations of Minnesota, Iowa, and Illinois."

The capital stock and funded debt of the road is $143,668 a mile, and the committee figures its value at $28,000 a mile. In its latest report the Chicago Great Western Company certified that the line and equipment cost $98,911 a mile, and in detail of its statement there is an item, "Purchase of constructed road, $66,994.63 a mile." This would mean $50,000,000 for the whole line. In 1891 there was reported for "purchase of constructed road $6,313,191.52." It was then 815 miles long.

"Fifteen years later," says the committee, "this elastic item had been stretched to $50,594,344.28, but the whole line had shrunk sixty miles in length. It has been watered too much."

OLD GUARD CELEBRATES.

81st Anniversary Dinner at the Waldorf—Admiral Coghlan's Story.

Yesterday was the eighty-first anniversary of the Old Guard. When it was over the battlefield of the large ball room in the Hotel Astor showed that an army of good fellows had passed that way, leaving behind them a lot of corks and good stories. Prior to the dinner in the evening, the Old Guard assembled in its Broadway armory and marched to St. Thomas's Church, at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-third Street. Here the Old Guard's chaplain, the Rev. James B. Wasson, preached a sermon.

Then the batallion returned to the armory, where Col. William F. Morris of the Ninth Regiment, installed the new officers, the list of which was headed by Major Charles A. Sadler.

Then, later in the day, the batallion retired to the Astor's ballroom, where the 150 members and guests dined. At the guest table were Rear Admiral Joseph B. Coghlan, ex-Senator Jacob H. Cantor, Col. William F. Morris, Justice James A. Blanchard, Gen. John S. Maxwell, Deputy Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic; Herman Ridder, M. Warley Platzek, Julius Mayer, Gen. George W. Wingate, and Commander Robert T. Hall, U. S. N.

Admiral Coghlan spoke to the toast "The Army and Navy," with especial stress upon the navy and the crack marksmanship of the men behind the guns.

"In the navy the marksmanship has become so good," he said, "that we have been compelled to make a rule that the men who are always knocking the targets to pieces shall mend it. You know that after a shell has passed through one of our canvas targets the edges of the hole are very dirty to handle, so the men, to avoid bending them back by hand, circle about the target and shoot at the edges of the hole until they are bent forward again."

Jacob A. Cantor, Major Charles A. Sadler, Col. William F. Morris, and Gen. George W. Wingate were the other speakers.

AIDS MAN, THEN ROBS HIM.

White Admits Taking Money After Binding Up Boatman's Wounds.

Rudolph Schenek, a boatman, was set upon and beaten by three men in Hudson Street, Jersey City, Saturday night. The men tried to rob him, but so well did he defend himself that they got nothing. His eyes were blackened and he was badly cut and bruised.

He was lying on the sidewalk when Charles White, 22 years of age, of 26 Essex Street, happened along. He dragged Schenek to a canalboat lying not far away, and after bandaging the cuts and bruises as best he could left the man lying in the hold of the boat.

When Schenck recovered consciousness he discovered that all his money, his watch and chain, and a ring had been taken. He gave the police so good a description that White was arrested. When confronted with Schenck he admitted robbing him. He was held by Justice McCarthy in the Second Criminal Court for the action of the Grand Jury.

BAR HERE WOULD RETAIN BARTLETTS

Lawyers Pleased at the Prospect of Their Re-election to the Bench.

THE PARTIES MAY CONCUR

Bar Feels This Would Go to Establish a Precedent for a Faithful Judge's Re-election.

Leading members of both the bench and bar are much pleased with the prospect that the Republican and Democratic Parties will unite next Fall in making Judge Edward T. Bartlett and Judge Willard Bartlett their common candidates for re-election to the Court of Appeals. It is believed that this action will go a long way toward establishing the precedent that faithful service on the bench should be rewarded at the expiration of a Judge's term by re-election, irrespective of the political views of the individual who may be up at any given time.

As it happens in the present case, Judge E. T. Bartlett is a Republican, while his colleague, Judge Willard Bartlett, is a Democrat, so that there is a tangible basis for a combination on a party arrangement, but it is also true that the politics of both the Judges has been lost sight of pretty largely during their terms of judicial service. That furnishes what is perhaps the strongest reason for the agreement that has been tacitly reached.

It might, perhaps, be more accurate to call it an understanding rather than an agreement. For when the matter was mentioned to ex-Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff, as Chairman of the State Republican Committee, he said:

"I have not conferred with any one in an official way in regard to the matter, and I am not aware that such conferences have been held by other Republicans as a party matter, either with other Republicans or with Democrats. But many prominent lawyers and business men have spoken to me of the advisability of having a common nomination made by the Republicans and Democrats next Fall, and I do not know of any dissenting opinion, for both the Judges have rendered faithful and valuable service on the bench and are entitled to be elected.

"It is not the custom to hold conventions where there are no State officers to be elected, and I assume that the Republican nominations will be made by the State Committee some time in September. When the Democrats may nominate I cannot predict."

Judge Edward T. Bartlett has been a member of the Court of Appeals since 1893, when he was elected in a memorable campaign against Isaac H. Maynard. Prior to that time he had been engaged in practice in this city, and although he had never held public office, his interest in public affairs was always strong. A lifelong Republican, he found his first interest in politics in the Frémont campaign of 1856, when he was much too young to vote, and his first ballot was cast for Abraham Lincoln. Judge Bartlett's father was a physician who spent a good part of his life in Skaneateles, and his great-grandfather was Josiah Bartlett, a signer of the Declaration of Independence and Articles of Confederation and the first Governor of Massachusetts.

Admitted to the bar in 1862, Judge Bartlett became a member of the Bar Association in 1870 and entered with spirit into a campaign then waging against a corrupt judiciary. Up to 1891 he never became a candidate for any public office, but in that year he was persuaded to run for the Supreme Court against Justice Ingraham and was defeated. Two years later the Republican leaders asked him to make the run for the Court of Appeals, and Judge Bartlett consented, although there was a lot of political talk that a deal had been made whereby his opponent, Isaac H. Maynard, was to receive the support of the Republican organization in return for an indorsement by the Democrats of Charles Andrews of Syracuse for the Chief Justiceship. To the surprise of a good many people Judge Bartlett was elected for the fourteen-year term which ends next Fall.

Judge Willard Bartlett, although somewhat younger than his colleague, has had even a longer career on the bench. He was elected to the Supreme Court in the Second District, Brooklyn, in 1884, and has served continuously in a judicial capacity from that time to this. Prior to his election he was a law partner of Elihu Root in practice here. Judge Bartlett was designated to serve in the Appellate Division eight or ten years ago, and about two years ago, by designation of Gov. Higgins, took his seat on the Court of Appeals. His election in the Fall will be to fill a vacancy existing in the membership of that bench.

DEMAND GRAND JURY MINUTES

Counsel for Indicted Central Officials Say Clients' Rights Were Violated.

Martin W. Littleton, representing Ira McCormick and John D. Lindsay for A. H. Smith, the official of the New York Central under indictment for manslaughter in the second degree in connection with the wreck of the Brewster express at Woodlawn last February, appeared yesterday before Judge Rosalsky on a motion to inspect the minutes of the Grand Jury which found the indictments.

Both attorneys said that the constitutional rights of their clients had been violated when they were made to testify before a Grand Jury, which later found indictments against them.

Assistant District Attorney Smyth opposed the motion, arguing that Mr. Smith had requested in writing that he be called as a witness, while Mr. McCormick had testified without being subpoenaed or ordered to do so by the Grand Jury. Judge Rosalsky took the papers in the case, reserving decision.

SNEEZES BETRAYED FIVE BOY ROBBERS

Caught Hiding with Plunder in Fifty-sixth Street Coal Chute.

WATER DROVE THEM OUT

They Had Three Bags Filled with Brass Fittings—All Held for Trial.

Lieut. Margin sat in the telephone room at Police Headquarters at 3:30 o'clock yesterday morning, wondering where the Bingham lightning was going to strike next, when there was this call over one of the wires:

"There are burglars working around the Waldorf Laundry, at 541 West Fifty-sixth Street."

Mangin lost no time in switching on to the telephone of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, and passed the news on to Lieut. Palmer, who was on the desk.

Palmer immediately summoned Sergt. Tunney and a squad of the reserves, and directed them to hotfoot it around to the laundry. There they found the watchman, sitting, revolver in one hand and with a club in the other.

"What is it?" asked the Sergeant.

"Hanged if I know," replied the watchful watchman, "but I heard something."

The police began a dragnet search of the neighborhood. Not until they reached the cellar under 505 West Fifty-sixth Street did they get a clue. It came in the form of a long-drawn "K-e-r—choo!"

Sergt. Tunney searched into the darkest, remotest corners of the cellar, and was about to give up all hope of finding the sneezer, when from the depths of the foundation wall at his elbow there came another "K-e-r—choo!"

Sergt. Tunney peered into the darkness and finally made out the round black hole of a coal chute. He poked his nightstick up it, and back came a yell. He poked again, and then a pair of feet appeared in the opening. A minute later those were followed by the annexed pair of legs. Finally there had wormed out of the coal chute the entire length of a begrimed youngster.

"Wot are youse doin'?" exclaimed the boy. "Do youse want to kill a bloke?"

Sergt. Tunney thrust his night stick once more into the blackness, and once more the effort bore fruit and another boy came out.

The Sergeant made another trial, but only touched air.

"Are there any more of youse up there?" demanded the Sergeant.

"Nope," chorused the captive.

But once more from up the slide came the fateful "K-e-r—choo!"

Sergt. Tunney summoned one of his reserves.

"Get a pail of water," he said, "and go up on the sidewalk; tilt the cover and pour the water down."

A deluge of dirty water soon spouted out of the chute, and with it came three grimy, bedraggled, and chattering youngsters and also three bags filled with brass doorknobs, brass letter plates, and various other sorts of brass and bronze fittings.

The boys were marched to the West Forty-seventh Street Station, and later arraigned in the West Side Court. They gave their names as Matthew Eager, Robert O'Keefe, John Dunn, Charles McLoughlin, and William Brock. They were all held in $300 bail for examination to-day to give the police an opportunity to find the owner of the stolen property.

NEW FREE EYEGLASS PLAN.

C. C. Burlingham Suggests Health Board Should Aid Board of Education.

Charles C. Burlingham, Chairman of the Committee on the Physical Welfare of School Children, and once President of the Board of Education, has what he considers a practical plan for solving the much-discussed question of providing free eyeglasses to school children with defective vision. Yesterday he sent an outline of this plan to Chairman Stern of the Committee on Elementary Schools, which has submitted a plan to the Board of Education and is now getting expert advice on the situation and its solution.

Briefly, the suggestion of the committee was that the Board of Estimate should make an appropriation of $30,000 for the purpose of fitting up thirty centres for the examination of school children and of purchasing 20,000 pairs of eyeglasses this year. As, according to a statement of Dr. Cronin of the Health Department, there are 180,000 children in the schools with defective vision, Mr. Burlingham asks, "What is to become of the 160,000 children who cannot be examined or provided with eyeglasses?"

To reach both those who can afford to pay for glasses and those who need outside help Mr. Burlingham suggests that the Board of Health should assign a sufficient number of doctors and nurses to the schools, say one of each to every 3,000 or 4,000 children. The purpose is to provide for the thorough examination of all school children, to assure the notification of the parents of all the physical defects and the steps to be taken for their relief, and to make possible the visiting by the nurses of the home of every child whose parents have not responded to the notice of its need of treatment within a given time.

Mr. Burlingham further suggests that the Board of Education should make requests of the hospitals, dispensaries, &c., to appoint suitable times and make adequate arrangements for the treatment of school children and that the board should also do everything possible to correct those school conditions which tend to increase defects of vision among children during their school years.

Those children whose parents cannot afford to pay for glasses should be referred to one of the four societies which make offers of assistance, or to other charitable institutions, for glasses, for treatment, and for the relief of other home conditions, which will probably accompany inability to buy glasses, thinks Mr. Burlingham.

AMBULANCE VICTIM DIES.

Coroner to Make Careful Inquiry Into Case of Mrs. Barbarelli.

Mrs. Leonardo Barbarelli, wife of a laborer, who was taken to Bellevue Hospital from her home, at 544 West Thirty-seventh Street, on Sunday night with her baby, died in the hospital yesterday morning. The Roosevelt Hospital ambulance in which she was being transferred was smashed by a Broadway car at Thirty-fourth Street, and the unconscious woman and her child had to continue the journey in an ambulance of the New York Hospital.

It was found at Bellevue that the woman was in a desperate condition, suffering from pneumonia and other troubles. The shock of the collision proved too much for her weakened condition.

8 Complete Short Stories
NO one type of story can properly be called a "Harper story." The best and most interesting stories of all types are the real Harper stories.
The stories of May Harper's are good examples.
GRACE ELLERY CHANNING, an American writer who has lived for years in Italy, contributes an amusing story showing the humors of life where no one can be persuaded to do anything on time. NORMAN DUNCAN'S story is a tale of a Labrador fisherman and his wife, and of their sacrifice of their plans in order to properly entertain a visiting parson—a story where humor and pathos are curiously mingled. LOUISE FORSSLUND writes of a delightful situation arising from the admission of an old man into a home for old ladies.
RICHARD LE GALLIENNE'S story is a poetic fantasy—"The Death of the Poet," a man who, having accomplished by his life-work the payment of his debts, feels at last that he is free to die. ROSE YOUNG'S "The Substance of Things Hoped For" is a story of American child-life—of the great event in childhood where the first break is made in a group of friends and the oldest boy goes away to school. ABBY MEGUIRE ROACH has written a charming little romance of the South; the feeling of the aristocratic Southern family against the intruding strangers, and its final happy settlement in a romance, is delightfully shown. The humorous story of the number is a tale of how two cowboys almost deceived a Berlin archæologist with manufactured relics. JAMES BRANCH CABELL'S romance "In the Second April" is concluded.
Important Articles.
A beautifully illustrated article in the May Harper's deals with John W. Alexander's recent mural paintings, nineteen of which are reproduced in tint. Frederick Trevor Hill writes of another "Decisive Battle of the Law," the trial of the Chicago anarchists. Dr. H. C. McCook tells how the ants run their communities and look after their dependants. E. S. Martin contributes a charming sketch of the simple life and Captain Mahan writes of our navy as he knew it in the days just before the Civil War.
There are many pictures in color and tint by Howard Pyle, Andre Castaigne, Lucius Hitchcock and others.

THE VALUE OF PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE
Personal knowledge is the winning factor in the culminating contests of this competitive age and when of ample character it places its fortunate possessor in the front ranks of The Well Informed of the World.
A vast fund of personal knowledge is really essential to the achievement of the highest excellence in any field of human effort.
A Knowledge of Forms, Knowledge of Functions and Knowledge of Products are all of the utmost value and in questions of life and health when a true and wholesome remedy is desired it should be remembered that Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., is an ethical product which has met with the approval of the most eminent physicians and gives universal satisfaction, because it is a remedy of Known Quality, Known Excellence and Known Component Parts and has won the valuable patronage of millions of the Well Informed of the world, who know of their own personal knowledge and from actual use that it is the first and best of family laxatives, for which no extravagant or unreasonable claims are made.
This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent family laxative. As its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well Informed of the world to be the best we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of—Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects, always note, when purchasing the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package, whether you call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna.

"Yankees" Win Ninth-Inning Game from Boston by Score of 8 to 7.

The "Yankees" won a ninth-inning victory from Boston yesterday at the American League Park, after a determined uphill fight, by the score of 8 to 7. The contest did not reflect any credit on the fielding abilities of the players who took part in it. Nine errors were made, of which New York contributed six and Boston three. The only feature to offset these misplays was the batting, which savored of the old-time slugging game, each team hitting safely twelve times.

Four pitchers took part in the contest. Hughos for New York was knocked out of the box after the visitors had scored six hits for four runs in five innings. Keefe, who relieved him, was hit safely an equal number of times, but was able to keep the hits better distributed and at the same time received better support. Winter, who began operations for Boston, was effective for four innings, when the Yankees batters solved his delivery and he was replaced three innings later by Harris, who was not wholly successful in stopping the run-getting.

The winning run was made in the ninth inning after one man had been retired. Keeler, who has been batting poorly this year, was responsible for the deciding tally. Keefe had gone to first on called balls, and advanced to second an Hoffman's sacrifice, when Keeler drove the ball between left and centre for a long single and scored Keefe.

The teams alternated in leading. Boston secured a lead of two runs in the first inning owning to Hughes's wildness. A combination of errors by Elberfeld, Chase, and Conroy enabled Boston to add another run in the second. Singles by Chase and Conroy and a fumble by Ferris gave New York a run in their half of the second. Each team tallied in the fourth, and the Yankees scored two runs in the fifth on Hoffman's base on balls, Keeler's single and Elberfeld's double. Boston went into the lead once more in the first half of the sixth, but did not hold it long, as New York scored three runs on singles by Conroy, Thomas, and Hoffman, and an error by Wagner, which proved the undoing of Winter.

Boston again rallied in the seventh inning, and tied the score with two runs on safe hits by Collins, Unglaub, and Hoey and a force by Ferris. The score remained tied until the Yankees made the winning run in the ninth. Score:

Giants Defeat Boston in Pitchers' Battle by Score of 1 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., April 22.—The Giants had to fight hard for to-day's game. Until the very last it looked like extra innings, but a base on balls in the ninth inning by Pitcher Flaherty resulted in the single run that was enough to win. It was Flaherty's first appearance before a Boston crowd. His left-handed delivery puzzled the Giants and he was quick in fielding his position. But four hits had been made off his delivery, and the score was nothing to nothing when Bresnahan came to bat to start the ninth inning and drew a base on balls. McGann made it appear to Umpire Emslie that he had been hit by the ball, and when Dahlen singled to left Bresnahan made the circuit. Score:

Tigers Easy for Jersey City.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 22.—Jersey City found Princeton easy here this afternoon, and hammered Heyniger's delivery for eleven safe hits, yielding nine runs. The weather was more favorable than usual, and both sides played well in the field. Lake and McCann held the Tigers safe at all times. The score:

NEW MOTOR CLUB FOR AUTO TOURISTS

First of a Series of Suburban Headquarters Secured at Lake Mahopac.

CITY HOUSE ON WEST SIDE

Garage with Special Facilities for Members Will Be Provided—Other Novel Features.

A new automobile clubhouse will be opened this week at 306 West 109th Street, and by May 1 the first of a series of country headquarters will be ready for the members at Lake Mahopac. This new club, which has been in process of formation since Jan. 1, will be known as the City and Country Motor Club, and it has already been incorporated with 100 charter members under the laws of the State of New York. The total membership at the present time is about 200, and it is expected that, with the facilities offered for touring near New York, with the assurance of a comfortable club quarters and garage accommodations in different suburban localities, there will be no difficulty in obtaining a membership of considerably over a thousand before the close of the season.

It is the intention of the officers to make the club chiefly one for owners of cars. Plans are now under way to secure club facilities at Long Beach and Huntington, L. I., and a headquarters may be secured later in the season at Lake Hopatcong.

One of the attractions of the Long Island headquarters near Huntington will be its easy access to the Long Island Motor Parkway, and this fact has been a strong factor in organizing the club.

The officers who have been recently elected are: President—Dr. E. T. Weld; Vice President—Andrew J. Cobe; Secretary and Treasurer—J. Stuart Blackton; Managing Director—Westley Woods. A meeting of the members will be held within the next two weeks to discuss available localities for additional suburban club quarters.

ITALIAN CARS LEAD RACERS.

Americans Interested In Nazzaro's Victory of Targa Florio Cup.

Interesting details of the big Italian road race for the Targa Florio Cup, which was run on Sunday over a difficult mountainous course in Sicily, were received in the city yesterday, and as all of the leaders are well known here from their participation in the Vanderbilt Cup races local autoists discussed the contest with general interest. The race, which attended for touring cars with racing bodies, was the first of the big road events of the year. Nazzaro, driving a 35-horse-power Fiat, won the cup, which also carries with it a purse of $5,000. He covered the circuit, which was 150 kilometers, (93.45 miles) in 8 hours and 17 minutes, a rate of 34 miles an hour, excellent time considering the rough course.

Nazzaro is one of the most consistent of the great European drivers. He was second in the French Grand Prix last year, and got second in the Gordon Bennett race in the previous year. He has been one of the leading members of the Italian Fiat team for over three years, sharing its honors with Lancia. The latter, who also drove a 35-horse-power Fiat, came in second, 12 minutes behind Nazzaro, while Fabry, with an Itala car, was third, and Duray, with a De Dietrich, was fourth. The race last year was won by Cagno with an Itala. Lancia and Nazzaro will be contestants this year in the fourth running of the Vanderbilt Cup race. The Targa Florio race had 55 entries, 27 being Italians, 17 Frenchmen, 6 Germans, 4 Swiss, and 1 Belgian. Among the drivers who have competed here were Wagner, Dr. Weillschott, Cagno, and Gabriel.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

Preparations will probably be completed tomorrow at the meeting of the Plan and Scope Committee of the Long Island Motor Parkway for the construction of the Vanderbilt cup racing circuit within the next two or three weeks. The details have been practically finished.

The Contest Committee of the Automobile Club of America will meet this week to frame rules for the proposed endurance run which will be held by the club late in May or early in June. Owing to the lack of interest among manufacturers of commercial vehicles the proposed test of commercial cars which the club was planning to conduct within the next month will probably be abandoned.

While the use of vanadium as an alloy for steel is but just arousing interest in this country, it is by no means new to the metal workers of Europe. The Vickers-Maxim guns used by the Japanese in the war with Russia were made with an alloy of vanadium, and did not suffer from erosion. In the automobile field Berliet of France has for several years been using a vanadium alloy for various parts, including the cylinder castings of the engine.

It is hoped by the officials of the American Automobile Association that when the Federal bill for uniform automobile laws comes before Congress at the next session it can be said that the A. A. A. has an organization in all the principal States of the Union. President Hotchkiss and Secretary Elliott are working hard toward this end and are making such remarkable headway that every State in which there is any amount of motoring is likely to be organized before September.

Nill Wins Swimming Race.

The weekly competition of the New York Swimming Association was held last night at the Interior Baths, West Sixtieth Street, near Tenth Avenue. The 200-yard handicap was won by H. Nill, with a handicap of 6 seconds. The event was divided into two heats and the first three men in each heat competed for first place. Summaries:

200-Yard Handicap.—First Heat—Won by H. Nill, (6 seconds;) Miller, (scratch,) second; Roobury, (3 seconds,) third. Time—2:57 3-5. Second Heat—Won by H. W. Williams, (2 seconds;) P. Rottger, (3 seconds,) second; F. Curren, (10 seconds,) third. Time—3:05 2-5. Final Heat—Won by

BERKELEY TAKES THE UNION STAKES

Outsider, at 12 to 1, Wins from Tileing in a Head Finish at the Aqueduct Track.

WEIGHT BEAT DR. GARDNER

Kerry and Dulcian Were the Only Successful Favorites—Cinna Earns a Clever Victory.

The horses that ran at the Aqueduct track yesterday finished second to the jockeys who rode in the popular estimate of the day's sport. A fact that the public had more appreciation for was that for the third day in succession Jackey Walter Miller failed to ride a winner, and though some other jockeys of more or less note have gone longer periods without a winning mount, the wail that went up from the backers of the "Miller system" yesterday saturated all conversation about the afternoon's happenings. The only topic that had a chance with the lament concerning Miller had to do with the riding of Garner, who had losing mounts, too, but they differed from those of Miller in that they were the best horses that ran in the course of the day.

The best of these was Dr. Gardner, which for several days has been the popular favorite for the Excelsior Handicap, but backers generally forgot all about Dr. Gardner when Garner on Tileing was beaten a short head by the 12 to 1 chance Berkeley in the race for the Union Stakes, the feature of the day. The race was at seven furlongs, and six three-year-olds ran, with Tileing, backed down by the weight of money, the post favorite over Molesey, the second choice. Tileing broke best, but Garner eased him up, and permitted Berkeley to go to the front. Garner came strong at the last furlong, but his effort was made too late, and though Tileing was running over Berkeley at the end, the outsider lasted in front just long enough to win by a short head.

Dr. Gardner ran in the third race, a handicap at seven furlongs, which the crowd referred to unanimously as his trial for the Excelsior Handicap. The colt carried the colors of T. D. Sullivan, but went out as the representative of the Frank Farrell-David Johnson-T. D. Sullivan stable, trained by F. D. Weir, carrying 127 pounds. Dr. Gardner was at 5 to 2 on, at which odds Mr. Farrell managed to get on nearly $7,000 of a $10,000 commission. Mr. Johnson bet $3,000, and Mr. Sullivan placed a wager of proportionate size. Six horses ran, and when Dr. Gardner broke first, one cheer went up. Then Athlete, a fast horse from the Winter tracks, went after Dr. Gardner, and headed him in the first quarter, the pair going to racing at once. Athlete had heart enough to go on after Dr. Gardner stopped under his heavy weight, and though Orphan Lad closed on him with a fine effort in the last furlong, Athlete, ridden and whipped out, won by a head in the fastest time of the meeting, 1:26 2-5, with Dr. Gardner third, a length and a half behind Orphan Lad.

The only winning favorites of the afternoon were Kerry, which galloped out in the lead about all the distance for the opening event, and Dulcian, which, at odds on, made his own running in the two-mile steeplechase, and won as he liked. The weather was the most pleasant of the Aqueduct meeting, the track good, and the attendance excellent. Summaries:

On and Off the Links.

Probably the oldest active golfer in the country is D. N. Clark of Westville, Conn., who, although 78 years old, has been playing nearly every day since early in December on the Pinehurst (N. C.) Club links. His scores have averaged from 80 to 112 strokes, and he attributes his excellent health to his daily open-air exercise.

James L. Taylor, Captain of the Dyker Meadow Golf Club team, is endeavoring to arrange a match with the Yale golfers, to be played on the Brooklyn links. Dwight Partridge is the Yale Captain and the match will probably be held in May.

The annual championship tournament this year of the Hudson River Golf Association will be played on the links of the Dutchess County Country Club, near Oostining, on July 11, 12, and 13. The series of team championship matches will begin on June 1 with contests at Ossining and Yonkers. Gilman P. Tiffany is the present association champion.

Fourteen Players Will Contest for Championship—Wilson's First Game.

The annual 14.2 balkline handicap billiard tournament of the New York Athletic Club began last night at the club house, Fifty-ninth Street and Central Park South. Fifteen contestants entered the competition, but G. H. Skinner dropped out, leaving fourteen to contest for the club championship. The players are divided into two sections, and the player losing two games will drop out of the competition. The entries are:

First Division—Dr. W. G. Dang, (200;) W. H. Flynn, (150;) H. H. Man, (125;) Charles H. Steinway, (125;) C. D. Coleman, (125;) W. M. Leslie, Jr., (115;) J. R. Smith, (115.)

Second Division—Charles C. Rossire, (100;) Robert Weld, (100;) J. Shler, (90;) Theodore Cassebelr, (75;) Dr. S. McCullough, (75;) W. D. Lyon, (50;) W. G. Wilson, (50.)

The opening games were scheduled between Charles C. Rossire (100) and Walter S. Wilson, (50,) and W. H. Flynn (150) and G. A. Skinner, (125.) The latter's withdrawal left Flynn without a game. In the only contest of the evening Wilson ran out his string of fifty points against Rossire's 89.

The games scheduled to-night are Robert Weld (100) vs. W. G. Lyon, (50,) and H. H. Man (125) vs. J. R. Smith, (115.)

BRITISH GOLF DRAW.

America Represented by the Misses Curtis in Foreign Championship.

LONDON, April 22.—The draw for the woman's golf championship of Great Britain, which will start on May 6 on the Newcastle links, Ireland, was made today by the Golf Committee in London. Out of 110 entries only two are Americans, the Misses Hatriet S. and Margaret Curtis of Boston, Mass, the latter the present American champion. Miss Harriet Curtis will play Mrs. W. Robinson, and Miss Margaret Curtis will play Miss Robertson in the first round. Neither of the British players are ranked among the championship possibilities. Mrs. Kennyon, the winner last year, is now in India and will not defend the title.

The salmon season on the Penobscot River, Maine, is the best of the last ten years. The black bass, which is the salmon's destructive enemy, has not made any serious inroads this Spring.

The Newark Bait Casting Club held its first regular meeting last week. Thirty members were enrolled, and the following officers elected: President, George A. Sutterly; Vice President, C. E. Kenyon; Secretary and Treasurer, Fred G. Mapes. An Executive Committee was formed, and the membership limited to fifty.

At the annual meeting of the Black Stocking Fishing Club the following officers were elected: President, Louis Ulrich; Vice President, George Field; Secretary, George Weisener; Treasurer, Gus Heck. At the close of the meeting the members presented a loving cup to Mr. Ulrich.

The Tim Mulcahy Fishing Club has engaged the sloop Murray for a number of fishing trips. The officers of the club are: Skipper, Timothy Mulcahy; First Mate, W. R. Forbes; Second Mate, Isador Cassidy; Quartermaster, Louis Lowerine; Steward, J. Tunple.

Young Athletes of the Schools.

On Saturday evening, April 27, at the Eighth Regiment Armory, Park Avenue and Ninety-fourth Street, there should be a great mustering of schoolboy athletes, as the sixth annual indoor meet of Public School No. 6 (Eighty-fifth Street and Madison Avenue) is scheduled for that date. The open events include: Elementary schools—60-yard dash, 95 pounds limit, and 220-yard dash. High Schools—60-yard dash and 220-yard dash. The prizes—gold, silver, and dis medals to first, second, and third.

Some of the brightest boys of Public School No. 77, who are entered in the various events for the championship of the Public School League, are trying to do two terms' work in one. Their taste for athletics, apparently, does not interfere with their scholastic labors. Among these are: Sidney Senzer, Henry Joachin, Eddie Rosenthal, Horace Mann, George Sengotz, George Hertz, Lester Nathan, William Holst, George Yunginger, Willie Barre, Milton Tanzer, Solomon Marburger, Julius Englander and Willie Barteus Friends of Adolphus Brolek are predicting that he will carry off first prize in the high jump in the games of Public School No. 6 at the Eighth Regiment Armory. He has covered 5 feet while in training. Brodek himself declares that he feels very confident of winning in the outdoor championships.

Gold, silver, and bronze medals will be given in each event in the novice games of the elementary schools athletic games of the Public School Athletic League, to those who finish first, second, and th

The conical costu seen Saturday night at the indoor meet of Public School No. 77 at the Eighth Regiment Armory were designed and made by Miss Harriet Deane of the above school.

The youngsters of Public School No. 6 are busily training for the coming outdoor novice championships to be decided in June. This school hopes to repeat its victory of last year, and take permanent possession of the New York Athletic Club trophy. Much is expected of B. Forgotson, J. Levene, W. Hirshfield, A. Weiss, and N. Hellman, who have shown excellent form in the school meets held in the gymnasium.

Notes of the Thoroughbreds.

The two-year-old filly Evelyn G., owned by H. J. Griffin, and which was responsible for the fall of Jockey Englander at the Aqueduct track Saturday, has been destroyed, as it was found impossible to save her for racing purposes.

The discovery was made yesterday by the owners of Notasuiga, winner of two stakes at the Aqueduct meeting, that Notasuiga is not among the eligible horses left in the Futurity for this year. Her dam had been entered, and it was believed by her owners that the filly was a Futurity possibility until inspection of the eligible list failed to show Notasuiga's name.

The terms of a contract under which Jockey Notter will ride for the stable raced in combination by State Senator P. H. McCarren and M. L. Hayman were agreed upon yesterday.

In the contention between the management of the New York race tracks and the pool-rooms over the distribution of news of racing the telephone company controlling the wires connecting with Aqueduct and Woodhaven yesterday gave its aid to the race tracks by cutting out the special wires which have been used by the agents of the poolroom men. The removal of the telephone service lit the pool-room correspondents without means of communication to the city.

For misbehavior at the post on the filly Cloisteress in the fifth race at Aqueduct yesterday Jockey B. Smith was suspended for three days by Starter Cassidy.

Through Andrew Hakeley, trainer for Samuel Emery, a contract has been made under which the successful negro jockey L. Williams this season will ride for the Emery stable. Williams rode for Walter Jennings last season, but after a disagreement he left the Jennings stable at the San Francisco Winter meeting.

A BIT OF FACT

A MAN bought a ready-made Spring overcoat here recently for $38. Doubting our salesman's statement that it would cost him $60 to have its equal made to order, he went to a custom tailor to find out. He asked him what he could make such a garment for. The tailor looked it over thoroughly and said: "Sixty dollars."

And so our customers are made.

BROKAW BROTHERS

TENNIS EXPERTS IN FAST MATCHES

Wright Brothers Beaten at St. Nicholas Rink by Wrenn and Larned.

LITTLE AND BEHR WINNERS

Latter Pair, in Splendid Form, Easily Outclass Pell and Leonard in the Opening Contest.

Fast play marked the continuance of the indoor round robin doubles yesterday on the St. Nicholas Rink tennis court. Raymond D. Little and Karl H. Behr, Jr., won the first match of the day in straight sets from Edgar W. Leonard and Theodore Roosevelt Pell, 6—4 and 7—5. In the second contest William A. Larned and George L. Wrenn, Jr., defeated Beals and Irving Wright after three lively sets by the score 6—4, 5—7, and 6—2.

The prominence of the players attracted a large, fashionable gallery. Among the most interested spectators was Miss May Sutton, who declared that the swift play on the hard canvas surface was the best sort of practice. Among the other spectators were: Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, Jr., Mrs. Lawrence Waterbury, Mrs. S. C. Brown, Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse, Miss Juliet Adee, and Miss Wetmore.

For the opening service of the first match Little and Behr played in rare form. They rapidly ran the score to 5-1, but lost three before they won the set, 6-4. The second set was very hard fought, going to 5-5. Each pair won their service games. Pell distinguished himself, but in many hard fought points Leonard failed him. Both Little and Behr played to the former Harvard champion at the critical periods, with the result that after the games touched deuce they won at 7-5.

The second defeat for the Wright brothers lost them all chance for a prize. Larned and Wrenn outmanoeuvred them generally. Beals Wright was in better form than on Saturday, but his game appeared strong and weak by turns. The most costly error on the Wright side of the net was the constant playing of cut strokes by Irving Wright.

The second set was won by the Wrights. After they had fallen behind they brought the games to deuce at 5-all. Beals Wright's cross-court shots took the set at 7—5. Larned and Wrenn easily scored the third set. The summary:

Men's Round Robin Doubles—Second Round—Raymond D. Little and Karl H. Behr, Jr., defeated Edgar W. Leonard and Theodore Roosevelt Pell, 6—4, 7—5; William A. Larned and George L. Wrenn, Jr., defeated Beals C. Wright and Irving C. Wright, 6—4, 5—7, 6—2. Referee—Frederick W. Mansfield.

William A. Larned, the National ex-champion, is to coach Cornell University lawn tennis players this season.

THE COURT OF APPEALS JUDGESHIPS.

Common sense commends and public opinion will heartily approve the suggestion that the Republican and Democratic State Committees unite in nominating EDWARD T. BARTLETT and WILLARD BARTLETT as candidates for the Court of Appeals Bench this Fall. Every intelligent voter perceives at first glance the absurdity of a contested election for two Judgeships which have nothing whatever to do with party politics, in a year when no State officers are to be elected. The cost and cumbersome folly of holding State Conventions will be avoided by such an agreement, and, what is even more important, the people of the State will run no risk of having untried or weak candidates on either side submitted to their suffrages.

To begin with, these two Judges are already upon the Court of Appeals bench, Judge EDWARD T. BARTLETT by election in 1893, and Judge WILLARD BARTLETT by designation from the Supreme Bench two years ago to fill a vacancy which must be filled by election this year. It is a matter of slight consequence, save to sticklers for party regularity, that Judge EDWARD T. BARTLETT is a Republican and Judge WILLARD BARTLETT a Democrat; he was elected to the Supreme Bench in the Second Department without a contest, both parties uniting on him as a candidate. They are both men of the highest character, of long and useful service and proved ability. They have the respect of their colleagues and of the bar. It is a custom, honored by frequent observance in this State, to continue upon the bench Judges who have proved themselves to be fit and worthy. Experience increases their worth and their capacity.

Chairman WOODRUFF of the Republican Committee, as appears from the statement he makes in THE TIMES this morning, is favorable to the suggestion of a union judiciary nomination. We trust that the Democratic Committee will show itself equally sensible.

ARBITRATION OR COMPULSION.

It is now twelve years since the system of compulsory arbitration of labor disputes was undertaken in that laboratory of sociology, New Zealand. The original bill has been revised and amended from time to time, and its administration has been in sympathetic hands. According to the correspondent of The London Times, it does not seem to accomplish its essential purpose, the abolition of strikes and the peaceful settlement of disputes between employers and employed to the substantial satisfaction of both sides.

In a recent letter the correspondent refers to a serious strike by the workmen registered under the act on the street railway lines in the City of Auckland. The men gained their demands, which seem to have been not unreasonable, but their action was clearly in violation of the act, and is before the courts. In a second case slaughterers in two large export establishments struck for more pay when business was pressing; they carried the day without any appeal being taken to the Arbitration Court. There have been lock-outs also under the law; but there is this practical difference in dealing with strikes and lock-outs. In the case of the latter, the penalties of fines, with alternative imprisonment, can be enforced. In the case of strikers considerable fines cannot be collected, and if the workmen are imprisoned the employers are sufferers from lack of labor.

The situation is summed up by Mr. W. G. FOSTER, manager of one of the establishments affected by the recent strike:

> He expressed the opinion that, in so far as this crisis is concerned, the Arbitration act had proved absolutely valueless to the employer. He pointed out that, while it had punitive effects that might be visited on the employé, it had no machinery whatever for keeping a going industry on the rails. It was, apparently, impossible to force men to work when they had decided that they would not work, and there was nothing in the law to permit the Government to render assistance in such a crisis.

The fact seems to be that in busy times the men have the upper hand, even if they choose to violate the law, and it is cheaper for the employers to yield than to fight. In times of depression the case is reversed. The practical advantage of the law is that it supplies machinery to which the parties to a dispute can resort if they will, i. e., if there is enough reason and good temper on both sides.

THE VOICE OF REVOLUTION.

That was a vivid picture of a strange scene in the Duma that was presented in STEPHEN BONSAL'S St. Petersburg letter printed in THE TIMES of Sunday. The impression, and a very discouraging impression it has been, that the revolutionary movement is making no progress would be much modified, perhaps entirely removed from the mind of an observer who had the opportunity, as STEPHEN BONSAL has had, of noting the change wrought in ten years. A decade ago the Russian people, save for a few agitators to whose appeals they were strangely irresponsive, lay inert beneath the immense, crushing weight of absolutism. Now the revolution is not only astir, it is articulate; it has found its voice, and it is very evidently not lacking in courage, as any one may see from Mr. BONSAL'S portrayal of this incident in the Duma:

> Inside there is a strange figure in the Speaker's tribune. He faces the Ministerial bench and shakes his fist at the Prime Minister. He is a member of the Group of Toil—a strange, swart little man, with a wizened face and one shoulder six inches higher than the other. His eyes blink as though unused to the sunlight. He wears his boots right up to the waist, and a tunic that is cut down low in front. His voice is now low and rasping, now high and filled with falsetto notes, the voice of a man who is only learning to speak after a thousand years of silence and suppression.
>
> "Yes, I charge you with crime—with every crime known to man!" he shouts. "Your Government is hated and despised throughout Russia."
>
> "Would it not be more parliamentary to say unjust acts rather than crimes of the Government?" suggests the presiding officer.
> "It might be, but it would not convey my meaning so clearly," continues the outspoken radical, and he gives the Government another blast. And then, suddenly, why I do not know, he turns away from the Ministerial bench and talks to the men of toil on the left, his own little party, seeded by the blood of many martyrs, which stands there after generations of subterranean life before all the world, and is not afraid. And suddenly the wizened face of the speaker becomes transformed, his eyes burn like living coals, and he shouts: "Yes, we want svoboda, svoboda, svoboda!" ("Liberty, liberty, liberty!")

The progress here indicated is very real, it is very great. The spirit of revolution has advanced far when liberty can be openly talked about, and certainly the Autocracy must have been a good deal shaken, or it would not let its representatives be talked to as this uncouth man of the Group of Toil talked to the Ministers, charging them "with every crime known to man." This unnamed member of the Duma has all the audacity, the insolence, and the fearlessness of the German Socialist, BEBEL. The evidence that the revolution has gained much and is gaining more is afforded by the fact that at the close of his speech he was not arrested; he was merely hissed by the Right while the Left applauded him. It is extremely significant.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

The new-born American Society of International Law is assuredly entitled to the venerable claim that it "meets a long felt want." The want, of course, becomes more urgent the more it is recognized that we are under an increasing necessity, not many years ago denied by a United States Senator, of "having something to do with abroad." The importance of the Society is attested by the fact that the present Secretary of State and two former Secretaries took active part in its deliberations.

What a former Solicitor of the State Department unadvisedly described as "the threadbaro Monroe Doctrine" must of course take the first place in the discussions of such a body. The feeling of the American people is undoubtedly that expressed by President CLEVELAND, that the doctrine is "applicable to every stage of our National existence." But modifications and supplements intended to meet conditions unforeseen by MONROE or by CANNING are clearly within the purview and scope of criticism of the society. Mr. PENFIELD, the ex-official just referred to, made a sound distinction respecting that supplement now best known as the Drago Doctrine. He pointed out that it was not only inequitable but monstrous that a foreign power should attempt by force of arms to carry to par obligations which the holders of them had acquired at far less than their face, and to do so without regard to the value actually received. In these cases the maxim "caveat creditor" should apply as completely as if the case were between individuals. But when he added that forcible resumption by one Government of a concession to citizens of another, or mere spoliation by one Government of the citizens of another, "a decree of outlawry attended by the forfeiture of property," constituted a case for intervention by the Government of the aggrieved persons, he was on equally safe ground.

The practical trouble is that the two classes of claims are in danger of being confused. National intervention in which an allied fleet assembles for the purpose of doing what the Governments directing them assume to be justice, at the cost of coercing a sovereign State and undertaking to "control its destiny," is an operation which is adapted to produce a high tension between the coercing powers and the power which assumes to maintain the Monroe Doctrine. It has produced that result in the recent past. It is extremely desirable that things should not come to that pass. And hence the supplement to the Monroe Doctrine which is known as the "big stick doctrine." In some cases, actual or possible, it seems that the Government which is prepared to oppose some forms and measures of foreign intervention for the redress of foreign grievances should undertake of its own part to see the grievances redressed. And this is in effect the doctrine of the big stick. Without it the Government which will neither use its influence to redress what it admits to be real grievances, nor allow foreign Governments to go all lengths of interference, puts itself before mankind in an unfavorable attitude.

Ex-Secretary OLNEY, who has had occasion in his time efficiently and officially to maintain his own conception of the Monroe Doctrine, appears, from the telegraphic abstract of his address, to have overlooked or underestimated this difficulty. It is true that he admitted that what he described as "the new doctrines" "may and should be credited to a wholly worthy origin," but he seems to hold that our procedures, not only in respect to the Canal Zone, are entirely indefensible, which this journal has always held them to be, but also that such an arrangement as we have come to in Santo Domingo, with the assent of the Dominican Government, is equally indefensible. It seems that justice requires the critic of such a transaction as that, in order to make his criticism helpful, to lay down some course of procedure which would be equally effective and less objectionable. And this Mr. OLNEY apparently omitted to attempt.

RAILWAY SPEED MANIA.

Scribner's Magazine has an article upon the railway high-speed mania that is a welcome relief from many others upon the same subject. Instead of massing many figures to show how many passengers are killed—a point all too well established—it enters into the philosophy of the accidents, in an effort to see why they occur, and to discover whether they are due to excessive speed primarily. It will surprise many to have the latter question raised, and yet Mr. B. B. ADAMS, the writer of the Scribner article, settles the question in the negative almost decisively. The management of the New York Central Railroad is not so far immune from criticism upon its record that its fast trains are in any exceptional degree safer than others, yet its Empire State Express has not killed a passenger in fifteen years. The trains between New York and Philadelphia are remarkable for their number, speed, and weight, yet their accidents average as few as with any trains in the world. Mr. ADAMS explains that he is obliged to speak of averages because accidents are so few that only by taking the records for a series of years could any comparison be made at all. On the longer journeys from New York to Washington, and from New York to Boston, the records are equally excellent, and the same is true, of course, of the British trains which are so often praised as examples for our railway managers. On straight and level track no limit of speed is necessary for safety. On curves and down grades the record of fast trains is as good as others, and when fast trains are wrecked the fatality is no worse by reason of speed. If, for example, a structurally weak car is crushed between stronger cars the results are due to the character of the train rather than to the speed. The strength and homogeneity of the only equipment suitable for fast trains are such that they withstand shocks better at high speeds than old cars did at low speeds. The case against high speed as itself a cause of accidents is certainly weaker than could have been expected.

It is necessary, nevertheless, to explain the mortality record, and Mr. ADAMS does so by considerations applicable for the most part to all trains. Where others have found a solution in elaborate safeguards of a mechanical nature, he leans to the opinion that there is no dispensing with a clear head in the cab, and that generally high character of the personnel in every branch of the service is a necessity which cannot be obviated by block signals or mechanical stops to remedy neglect of signals. The engineer must be equally alert to save seconds, and ready to lose hours if safety requires it. And he must make his decisions what to do in fractions of seconds, even if everything is as perfect as human ingenuity can supply. And there is equal responsibility upon the man higher up. He must be ready not to attempt to run fast trains without suitable equipment, and, on the one hand, to protect his subordinates in refusing to make time at the cost of prudence, and, on the other hand, to bring his staff up to such a quality that all the speed compatible with prudence shall be realized. In short, the personal equation and the human factor are the points most insisted upon.

It is in a sense pleasing to read what many will be surprised to read, that on good roads a passenger may ride a thousand miles a day for a thousand years before coming to some bad end. But averages are rather less satisfactory than sawdust for food. The public attitude is uncompromising demand for the very best, and for total prevention of blameworthy fatalities, with grudging allowance of excuse due to true accidents. The public are liable to add Mr. ADAMS'S philosophical discussion of personnel to technical criticisms of apparatus, and season both with the facts which make out some cases of presumptive murder, not to be extenuated by anything short of earthquake, or such villainy as sawing rails apart while preserving the electric bond of the signals. It is reassuring to be told that we may ride prudently as fast as engines can move trains when all is right, but it is certainly true that there is less speed mania than there was, and that the present demand is for so much speed as is consistent with safety, rather than for so much safety as is consistent with speed, on the theory that the mere doctrine of chances is against men and machinery being always perfect.

"SAM SLICK."

The death of Lord HALIBURTON, while it says nothing to Americans of the present generation, recalls to those of them who are familiar with the literature of two generations ago the remarkable literary work of his father, Chief Justice HALIBURTON of Nova Scotia. In 1835 he began in a Nova Scotian newspaper, under the pseudonym of "Sam Slick," a wandering Yankee clockmaker, a series of political and social criticisms of his native province which attracted wide attention on both sides of the ocean, were collected in a volume, and translated into several European languages. They were afterward imitated by an actual Yankee, who undertook under the pseudonym of "Jonathan Slick" to satirize the New York of the early forties.

In the matter of dialect the imitator naturally surpassed his model. Judge HALIBURTON'S work was written in a dialect which no genuine New Englander ever spoke or wrote. But the genuineness of the dialect was assumed by English readers, and "Sam Slick" became the model for the British stage Yankee, and his language for the bewildering locutions which British novelists, for the generation following his appearance, put into the mouths of their Yankee characters. Such a literary success was equally beyond the expectations and outside the aims of the satirist, whose purpose was to commend to his countrymen his own reflections upon them by putting them in an outlandish garb. But "Sam Slick" as a character went much further and lasted much longer than his political and social criticisms upon the Nova Scotia of the thirties.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

A Briton Makes Mistakes.

It is evident that Dr. AKED, the new pastor of the Church-which-isn't-Mr.-ROCKEFELLER'S-though-everybody-insists-on-calling-it-so, is typically British in more than looks and accent. Even more Britannic than in either, it seems to some of us, is he in the lack of that instinct which keeps one from saying things that "get on the nerves" of an alien hearer. At any rate, he has managed already to get on ours several times.

Once was before he started from home, when he told his presumably sorrowful congregation that he was abandoning them because of the loud call he had received to come over here and fight against the materialism which is destroying American life! That was a most curious misunderstanding of the situation here, and it was more than slightly ominous. Then, before the good doctor disembarked, he told a reporter that "the keynote of Christianity is the survival of the unfit," which was really very trying to anybody—and there are several in this country—who knows anything about evolution and therefore is well aware that "fit" does not necessarily mean size and physical strength—that often'er than not, in all ages, it has meant something quite different.

And now, in his first sermon, Dr. AKED, who himself gets into the country under what was once held—by the American Preachers' Union, perhaps—to be a violent stretching of our exclusion laws, and is certainly a liberal interpretation of them, announces that the old American stock is imperiled by the great influx of foreigners and that he is going to help us keep them in order! Who told him that we were in any danger from our immigrants? Surely the United States, which has already performed so many miracles of assimilation, would look elsewhere than in Europe for teachers in that art. Is England to tell us how to get along with the Irish and Germans, Prussia what to do with the Poles, Russia the line to take with the Jews, and Turkey the proper treatment of Armenians? Nay, nay, we could parody the washerlady's sign and put up over our door, "Going out assimilating done here," and do a good business all over Europe if it only knew how much it needed the services of some real experts in that business.

Dr. AKED doubtless means well, and he has our warmest sympathy in the pain he must feel in reading in all the papers that he has a "marked English accent," which must try an Englishman's very soul, but we do wish that he wouldn't be so cocksure that it is as Americans that we need his help. Were he to treat us simply as mere brother humans he would be on much safer ground.

Alcohol Has a Defender.

A German scientist, Dr. J. STARKE, has written on "Alcohol" a big book which is likely to give much and acute pain to the good people who will not admit the possibility of anything except evil in the world's favorite narcotic. The German doctor has ideas wholly unlike theirs. Not only does he credit alcohol with harmlessness for those who use it in moderation and have no personal idiosyncrasy that makes even a little of it dangerous, but he declares it utterly unscientific to dissect a dead drunkard and ascribe all the ravages one finds to excessive indulgence in intoxicants. This he holds to be as absurd as it would be to find in the post-mortem of a diabetic proof that nobody should ever touch sugar.

But the queerest theory propounded by Dr. STARKE is thus summarized by The Medical Journal: "The very fact that alcohol has the effect of arousing the natural impulses, as opposed to those habits engendered by business training, is an argument of the author's in favor of its use; he recognizes it as a good thing that men should occasionally see one another as they are, unincumbered by the armor of business and social conventions. Alcohol makes all unmask at the proper hour in the carnival of life."

We do not see why this bold Teuton calls the impulses to which he refers "natural," and by implication calls "unnatural" those later developed powers of inhibition which alcohol paralyzes. The one seems to us just as "natural" as the other, nor would we readily admit that in the drunken man observers can behold the man as he is. Some might say, and perhaps successfully, maintain, that the drunken man is only the man as he would have been if he had not risen from the savage and had never gained in the slow progress of generations the ability to restrain his emotions out of consideration for the higher advantages of himself and others. So we are not very much impressed by Dr. STARKE'S argument, but there's no denying that it does start one to thinking along an untraveled line.

Tragedy in Prison.

In one of Mr. BONSAL'S dispatches from St. Petersburg, printed in THE TIMES on Sunday, he told, as a story current and believed in the Russian capital, how a woman arrested for complicity in a Terrorist assassination had banged herself in her cell for fear that when subjected to torture she might betray her accomplices.

Had this been all of the story it could have been believed without difficulty, for sacrifice of life for their cause is a slight thing for the Russian patriots, but when we read that this young woman, deprived of all other means of self-destruction, hanged herself with hair from her own head, pulled out with her own hands, the impression conveyed is that the thing is perilously close to the impossible—that we are in the domain of the makers of popular myths about national heroes and heroines.

And yet it is hard to tell what is possible and what impossible in the Russia of to-day. Undoubtedly a rope long enough and strong enough to serve a suicide's purpose could be made of the material and in the way stated, and "the question," as applied in a Russian fortress to women revolutionists, is something to be awaited with a horror likely to inspire desperate measures. That such tales as this are even in circulation shows the state of public feeling, and the exact truth of their details is a matter of little consequence.

"INDOOR NOISES."

Need of a Strong Public Sentiment in Favor of Suppressing Them.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

All good citizens imbued with the love of public decency and orderly conduct, are profoundly grateful to Mrs. Isaac L. Rice for her untiring and finally successful efforts in suppressing unnecessary, reckless, and health-shattering noises on the rivers and in the city in the neighborhood of our hospitals. So far great and good work has been accomplished, but there remains, nevertheless, much to be done in the direction of suppressing useless noises militating against the health and comfort of the dwellers of the city. And among such noises I do also include the unseemly disturbances created by thoughtless, inconsiderate, or selfish people in their own homes, especially during the night, when neighbors have a reasonable claim to rest and sleep. In the thousands of apartment houses, flats, and tenements people are absolutely at the mercy of neighbors, so far as health depending on quietness and rest is concerned.

In such a dilemma it seems to me there is nothing left to do but endeavoring to create a public sentiment in favor of consideration for your neighbors. A. C. H.

Boys and Women Teachers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Some of the women teachers who have identified themselves with the recent agitation for higher pay will have themselves to blame if their status as teachers is investigated.

I don't think I am singular in my belief that women—outside the question of their ability—are unfitted temperamentally to educate boys after they, the boys, have attained a certain age; and that has always seemed to me to be the weak point of our otherwise admirable system of education.

In the early stages, up to, say, 7 years of age, women are ideal teachers for boys; but in the subsequent training which should fit the boy for a man's work in the world, a man's will and point of view are absolutely necessary to the attainment of practical results. A PARENT.

Now a School for Husbands.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As this is said to be the age of woman, or, rather, woman's age, I make the following suggestion, to wit: That a school for husbands be established so that men may be brought up to the higher standard and merit the closer association with these noble and progressive women. Why are bachelors increasing? Is it not because mere man does not come up to the mark? As a practical and successful business man, I would very gladly subscribe a substantial sum to the "School for Husbands," and I am sure there are many other bachelors who would do likewise. I am one of those who firmly believe that a man's success in life is mainly due to woman, whether wife or mother or friend, and behind every great invention or force in history there stands a woman's spiritual guidance. DONALD P. EVERETT.

Gifts of Rich Men.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Schiff's "admiration" is not well placed. These men, Messrs. Morgan, Carnegie, &c., cannot give. Things are evened up in this world; he who wails himself around with wealth wails himself off from the privilege of giving. Giving is personal. I must take of what I need and give to supply yours.

It is the generosity of the poor that is commanding. The kindness of the destitute to their needy, suffering fellows—this is great. Big gifts of money, too, often not well gotten, astonish Mr. Schiff, but the steady contributions of the middle classes—the deep-cutting gifts of the poor—make God glad. JUST SO.

Gallantry at West Point Again.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read with very great pleasure the letter of your correspondent "I. V. S." in your issue of the 19th on "Gallantry at West Point," and beg to thank him for his letter, which so fully expresses my sentiments. If a serious breach of discipline has taken place, by all means "try the officer that permitted it."

A FRIEND OF THE SERVICE.

Of Stories Not Fit to Print.

From Sir Thomas Browne's "Vulgar Errors."

Lastly, as there are many relations whereto we cannot assent and make some doubt thereof, so there are divers others whose verities we fear, and heartily wish there were no truth therein. Many other accounts like these we meet sometimes in history, scandalous unto Christianity and even unto humanity, whose not only verities, but relations, honest minds do deprecate. For of sins heteroclital, and such as want either name or precedent, there is ofttimes a sin even in their histories. We desire no record of such enormities; sins should be accounted new, that so they may be esteemed monstrous. They omit of monstrosity as they fall from their rarity, for men count it venial to err with their forefathers, and foolishly conceive they divide a sin in its society. The pens of men may sufficiently expatiate without these singularities of villainy; for, as they increase the hatred of vice in some, so do they enlarge the theory of wickedness in all. And this is one thing that may make later ages worse than were the former; for the vicious examples of ages past poison the curiosity of these present, affording a hint of sin unto seducable spirits, and soliciting those unto the imitation of them whose heads were never so perversely principled as to invent them. In things of this nature silence commendeth history; 'tis the veniable part of things lost, wherein there must never arise a Pancirollius nor remain any register but that of hell.

SCHOOLS FOR AERONAUTS.

Germany Has Started One—France Has Long Had Them.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The rapid advance of aeronautics is shown in two reports soon to be published by the Department of Commerce and Labor. It appears that both France and Germany are taking great interest in this branch of science, or industry, but while France has had a school of ballooning in operation for about 100 years, Germany is but now starting one.

Consul Thomas H. Norton reports that Paul Spiegel, a textile manufacturer, is to be the director of the New Aeronautic School, which will be established at Chemnitz, Saxony, May 1. Herr Spiegel has made 6,000 ascents and has delivered many lectures on ballooning. The circular of the school says that "an airship offers to its passengers delights unsurpassed by any other method of travel, and places at the service of the lover of nature the grandest experiences that life on our planet affords."

There have been eight applications for entrance to the school, and only one of them was from Germany. The tuition is placed at $140 a year, payable monthly in advance.

In France instruction in ballooning is given by clubs, of which there are four in Paris and five elsewhere, and by the Government, which has two schools. The objects are sport, scientific study, and experiments, and the encouragement of aeronautics. Young men who become proficient in handling balloons and pass an examination may, when drawn for military service, enter the d'aerostiers, which is part of the regiment of engineers. Most of the ascensions are made with captive balloons.

DECIDE TO TOUR EUROPE.

Six Immigration Commissioners to Make a Long Trip.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The Immigration Commission met, formed, and formulated to-day, and the thing first formulated was a four months' junket to Europe by six of the nine members. They will study immigration under the sunny skies of Italy and Spain during the Spring months, and when the rays of Old Sol get too hot they will hie them away to cooler climes among the snow-clad peaks of the Alps and the glens of Scandinavia.

Senator Dillingham was made Chairman of the commission, and three Secretaries were elected with salaries of $3,500 a year for one year and the other two of $3,000 each. The Secretaries will go abroad also. Before crossing the ocean the members of the commission will go whithersoever they wish, and each one is authorized to employ a stenographer.

The resolution creating the commission specified that its members should have as much money as they needed, without limit. The cash comes out of the immigration fund of $2,500,000.

Most of the members of the commission will take their wives along, or some of the members of their families. They will make a report to Congress upon their investigations, in the course of which they will visit nearly every country of Europe and every important port from which emigrants embark for America.

PARSONS SEES PRESIDENT.

Predicts That Hughes Will Win His Fight with the Legislature.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Representative Herbert Parsons of New York, head of the New York County Republican organization, conferred with the President to-day about the politics in that State. On his way from the White House he said his organization was for Gov. Hughes and would do its utmost to aid in the successful enactment of his policies. He predicted that Gov. Hughes would win out in his fight with the Legislature, but would not discuss the subject of Gov. Hughes as a Presidential candidate in 1908.

H. J. Burkhardt, former Mayor of Batavia, N. Y., is being prominently mentioned for the office of Collector of Internal Revenue at Rochester, N. Y., made vacant by the resignation of Archie D Sanders. Secretary Cortelyou having returned to Washington, an announcement of an appointment to fill the vacancy is expected soon.

Representative-elect Langley of Kentucky talked with the President to-day about political affairs in his State. Mr. Langley, who has been in North Carolina, it is understood came to Washington at the request of the President.

Ex-Gov. Frank S. Black of New York came to Washington to-day to make an argument before the Supreme Court.

"Mr. Hughes is making an excellent Governor," said Mr. Black. "He is absolutely honest and of superior ability. He can go higher if he wants to. I don't know whether he wants to, because he is primarily a lawyer and is not a politician; in fact, the nomination for Governor of New York was not of his own choosing; but Gov. Hughes, in my opinion, can go as high as he desires in American politics. He has the ability to admirably fill any position."

THE PRESIDENT'S VACATION.

He Will Go to His Summer Home in Oyster Bay on June 12.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—President Roosevelt will leave Washington for his Summer home at Oyster Bay on June 12. He looks forward to a long period of rest and recreation. Secretary Loeb says that no speeches are to be made by the President after he leaves Washington until he goes to Canton, Ohio, for the unveiling of the McKinley Monument, Sept. 30. From Canton the President will return to Washington for the Fall and Winter season.

The President is to make two speeches on Georgia Day at the Jamestown Exposition on June 10. One of these is to be at the opening of the Georgia Building and the other before the National Editorial Association. He will reach Washington on the 11th from Jamestown and on the following morning go to Oyster Bay.

KNOX WANTS NO BOOM.

Is Not After the Presidency Nor Connected with the Thaw Case.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 22.—It was made plain here to-day that Senator P. C. Knox does not want his name used in connection with the Presidency, at least not at this early stage in the game; also that he is in no way connected as counsel in the Thaw case. Both of these points were emphasized by him in an interview. In reply to a question he said:

"I don't know how it feels to feel like the next President. You might ask Mr. Bryan. And, by the way, I wish you would not use my name in connection with the Presidency."

"Did the Thaw case bring you to Pittsburg?" Senator Knox was asked.

"No; I have nothing to do with the case," he answered. "I wish you would say that I have absolutely no connection with the Thaw case. I have never had anything to do with it."

A PARADOX.

I seem to like to versify;
On wandering from prose intent
Am I. And yet
The violet
Has never lured me for a cent;
Rhymes, somehow, do not fly from me,
Smooth rhythm comes without much strife.
And yet—just think—
No bobolink
Has ever figured in my life!

Unruly stanzas stay in place;
Gay measures, without hitching, stand;
Wild triolets
Are household pets;
The sonnet eats out of my hand;
The villanelle and the ballade
As willing captives have I led.
And yet—this Spring
Has failed to bring
A rush of verses to my head!

THOMAS R. YBARRA.

"RICH MEN'S PLOT" CLIMAX COMING

Senator Bourne, in Eagerness to Square Himself, Declares for Third Term.

SO ANTICIPATES PENROSE

The Pennsylvania Senator Braces Himself for the Leap Into the President's Band Wagon.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The climax to President Roosevelt's revelations about the "rich men's conspiracy" a few weeks ago is coming, and coming fast. The people who derided that story of the President's as a "brain storm," and predicted that nobody would take it seriously, have another chance to learn that he is the shrewdest politician in the United States.

That "brain storm" story of the President was given out on April 3 and published April 4, eighteen days ago. In those eighteen days the persons involved in the story of the Bourne dinner have had opportunity to find out whether or not the people believe the tale and whether or not its publication has helped their standing in their several communities.

The result is that they are now falling over each other to get into camp and to declare for Roosevelt for a third term.

"Bull" Andrews, Senator Quay's old lieutenant, now of New Mexico, has been in Washington for quite a while on some mysterious mission. Andrews's relations to Senator Penrose are well known.

Penrose has disappeared completely. It was made known a while ago that he was coming to the White House to swear allegiance, and then the visit hung fire and finally seemed to have been declared off. But "Bull" Andrews has been at the White House, and probably has been in touch with Penrose, though nobody in Washington except Andrews knows where Penrose is.

To-day it became known among a certain few in Washington that on Wednesday Penrose is to issue a statement declaring for Roosevelt for a third term and coming into camp in the most unreserved and thoroughgoing manner possible.

This news got around to Senator Bourne—how, nobody knows, but it is suspected that "Bull" Andrews leaked. It threw Bourne into a panic. He could see Penrose getting in out of the wet and leaving him out in the open to bear the brunt as the host at the dinner where conspiracy was talked. Bourne's loyalty to the President has not been attacked, except by whatever inferences may have been drawn from the fact that he was the host, and that some of Roosevelt's enemies, including Penrose, were there. Nevertheless, Bourne was scared, and felt that he would have to square himself. He went up to the White House this afternoon and saw the President, and came back greatly troubled. He determined to foil Penrose by getting into the Roosevelt bandwagon ahead of the Pennsylvanian, and by making his declaration so flat-footed that whatever Penrose may have to say on Wednesday will look like a mere echo of Bourne. Accordingly he issued the following:

Bourne's Statement.

"In my opinion, a great crisis now confronts this country. The reactionaries are determined, if possible, to obtain control of the Government and use it for their own personal advantage and to the detriment of the people.

"True Republican policies, as promulgated by Lincoln and enlarged and exemplified by Roosevelt, are the rights of man and the absolute sovereignty of the people. The issue now before the country is: Shall the advocates of the rights and liberties of the people and of the power and majesty of the Government, or shall the enemies of both prevail? The people must decide.

"I know that President Roosevelt is not a candidate to succeed himself. I realize that he would greatly prefer that the people select some other person to succeed him in 1908. I am, however, convinced that the exigencies of the situation demonstrate the necessity of the people commanding President Roosevelt to accept the nomination for a second elective term. The President equally with any other elective officer of this Government, is after all but the servant of the people. If the people command him to serve a second elective term, he certainly must feel it his duty so to do. How could he do otherwise? He can no more decline to accept a nomination made by a Convention instructed by the people than he could refuse to serve if we were engaged in war with some foreign power and he was drafted. No man can put his personal wishes or desires above the command of the people, especially no person who has been honored as President Roosevelt has been by the American people."

Always for Roosevelt.

After Bourne had read this over it still did not seem to him that he had blanketed Penrose's fire sufficiently. So he got up a statement of his record on the third-term question to show that this was no sudden switch on his part, as it is on Penrose's, but that he has been for Roosevelt all along. He showed that he put a Roosevelt plank in his platform when he ran for the Senate, and made speeches on the subject.

In that story of the "rich men's conspiracy," the men who boom the President for a third term, were included among the conspirators as urging something that the President will not accept in order to further their reactionary ends.

Either Penrose has overlooked that allegation or is too badly scared to weigh it, or does not take any stock in it, and thinks the way to please the President after all, is to boost him for a third term. Bourne, on the contrary, recalls it perfectly well, and is worried about it. He takes the President at his word about the third term, and is afraid of getting into trouble with Roosevelt by his statement to-day. In fact, he is so badly worried by the fear of a blast from the White House that nothing would have induced him to put forth his statement of to-day but the fear of his constituents, who cannot be placated in any other way. As between getting in wrong with Roosevelt and with his constituents, he prefers to take his chances on irritating the President.

It is, of course, possible and even probable that Penrose takes the same view of it, and that it is not to please the President, but to save his scalp, that he contemplates making his statement on Wednesday. It will be recalled that the Pennsylvania Legislature adopted a resolution denouncing the "rich men's conspiracy" a day or two after the plot was revealed at the White House. Penrose has had eighteen days in which to find out how much that story has improved his standing in Pennsylvania, and possibly the reports that Henry C. Frick has decided to go after his Senatorial place may have had their effect.

OBJECTS TO THIRD TERM.

Pennsylvania House Rejects Resolution for Roosevelt.

HARRISBURG, Penn., April 22.—Mr. Bluestone of Allegheny County offered a resolution in the House to-night, asking President Roosevelt to be a candidate for a second elective term as President.

The resolution was defeated by a viva voce vote without debate.

Prof. Wren Made Dean at Tufts.

MEDFORD, Mass., April 22.—It was announced to-day that Prof. Frank G. Wren, Walker Professor of Mathematics at Tufts College, has been appointed by the Trustees Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences and of the Faculty of the College of Letters. He will succeed Dean Shipman. He is one of the youngest men in the Faculty.

A German comedian made up like one of the Rogers Brothers and presenting about the same variety of dialect, and another who sputtered like Louis Mann used to do in the Weber-Fields shows when he told about the "niee fat schlekens," were supposed to furnish the comic relief in the dramatization of Upton Sinclair's "The Jungle," produced by the Proctor-Keith company at the Fifth Avenue theatre last night. It was labor wasted. There was comedy and to spare. One of the alleged Germans was labeled Tamozius and the other Valentina. When they were not busy pretending to play their violins they threw dialect at one another in disputes about the helpful Marija of the story, with whom they were both in love. They discoursed, too, about a bagful of eggs ultimately to be spilled, also for the sake of comic relief. Previous to that a sausage, redolent memory of the late unpleasantness in packing house circles, had made its entrance in state, wheeled down to the footlights in a baby carriage, from which it was removed to the manifest delight of everybody on the stage.

The scene was a bar room in a Packingtown saloon, and thither the sturdy Jurgis had come with his bride Ona, glorious in a wig of golden tresses. All was merry as a marriage bell until the gray-about-the-temples villain entered, this time Connor, the boss, who wanted Ona because she was "different from the others."

When things were at their worst, with the whole family out of work and the baby dying, he placed the key of his "quiet, cozy little flat" at Ona's disposal, and after she had declared she would rather die than yield, she appeared at the rendezvous, which turned out to be a particularly noisy place, where a number of perfect ladies in low-neck gowns and callow youths in ill-fitting evening clothes were leading the simpleton's life. Needless to say, she repented her folly in time to save her honor, but not in time to prevent a misunderstanding with Jurgis. He had previously declared that he was going to get a drink if it killed him, but he was more conservative in his next statement. "I am going to kill Connor," he said—"if I can."

There was a scene strangely reminiscent of the one in "Camille," in which Armand showers the lady with gold, only Jurgis had nothing but hard words to shower. This, indeed, he did with plenty of vigor, for loss of food and exposure apparently had no effects on his vocal organs, however else it may have undermined his constitution.

It was inevitable that "The Jungle," in passing from the book to the stage, would have to undergo transformation into flamboyant melodrama, but something positively like genius was required to turn it into such a melodrama as this. The names of the characters were the names of the book, and one did occasionally hear a reference to the "awful" life of Packingtown, but apart from the solitary sausage in its chair of state, there was little to remind one that here was the outcome of a novel that has stirred two continents, started all sorts of official investigations, and lifted a large burden from the shoulders of the export statistician.

To go into details about the acting would be to visit the sins of the authors upon the actors. But Thomas Chatterton is to be credited with a clever bit.

Mr. Sinclair and Miss Margaret Mayo are named as collaborators. But clumsier hands are in evidence.

In "The Undertow," produced for the first time at the Harlem Opera House yesterday afternoon, Richard Wells, a newspaper reporter, manages to swing an election in favor of an independent candidate for Mayor, who has declared himself against various corporate monopolies, including a valuable street railway and gas franchise. The reporter is occasionally incapacitated by his fondness for strong drink, but in his weakest moment he is not to be compared with the pusillanimous creature whom he selects to represent the people. So one gets the impression that though Wells is a magnificent manipulator he is a mighty poor judge of men. And there is little surprise when the Mayor betrays his trust and sells out to the capitalist to save himself from prosecution for embezzlement.

This moment, with the consequent uprising of the people provides the cue for what is obviously intended to be the big scene of Eugene Walter's play. In it the heroic newspaper man takes the centre of the stage, hurling defiance at the men, who seem to hold all the cards, and backed up by an angry and excited mob.

"The Undertow" is a play that has apparently been inspired by the success of others of the "pulse of the time" class, but it has some excellent scenes, a number of strikingly effective situations, and three or four very interesting characters. One rather questions the verity of the methods of political transaction as Mr. Walters reveals them, but business in melodrama on the stage and business off of it seldom agree.

"I think politics are so cute," remarked one fluffy little creature in the play, and popular approval will undoubtedly depend largely upon how general that sentiment may be. Such love interest as there is to the story is purely incidental, in fact is almost lost sight of in the maze of political subterfuge. And for popular success your love interest certainly does count a lot.

The Keith-Proctor Stock Company plays the piece excellently, considering the conditions. George Howell, as the scheming capitalist, Paul McAllister as the heroic reporter, and Dudley Hawley as an all-round good fellow of the newspaper office, being excellently contrasted types. A good bit is contributed by George S. Trimble. Miss Morgan, Miss Randolph, and Miss Scott are agreeable in the feminine rôles, in this case scarcely important as compared with those of the men.

BUFFALO BILL'S REHEARSAL.

Exciting Test Performance of the Show, Which Opens To-night.

At the rehearsal of Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show at Madison Square Garden last night many exciting incidents were witnessed by the invited guests. One man was thrown from a green horse and hurt, while one of the Devlin Zouaves was injured while giving an exhibition of wall scaling.

The Wyoming girls, who are with the show for the first time this year, gave some of the cowpunchers pointers on daring riding, Miss Shafer appearing on the back of a bucking broncho that had just come from the range. In fact, all of the horses used in the show, and there are several hundred of them, have just come from the range, and this adds to the excitement of the exhibition.

There were nineteen numbers on the programme, including a reproduction of the battle of Summit Springs, in which Indian warfare was well illustrated. Many of the Indians who figured in last night's show were engaged in the famous battle in Eastern Colorado. To-day Major Gen. E. A. Carr, who commanded the United States troops in the battle of Summit Springs, will be at Madison Square Garden, with Gen. Nelson A. Miles, to see the reproduction of the battle, in which Col. Cody also participated.

Col. Cody was there last night, riding Homer Davenport's Arabian stallion, Muson. He gave a new exhibition of his marksmanship, as did Johnny Baker.

The train hold up is one of the new features of the show this year, and includes the dynamiting of the express company's safe. In addition to the grand review, introducing the rough riders of the world, the race of the races, the United State Artilery drill, pony express, emigrant train, stage coach attack, and Mexican part of the show, there are jugglers, Arabs, and Japanese, in various feats of agility. The show opens to-night.

"LITTLE JOHNNY JONES" HERE.

George Cohan Says He Will Not Appear in This Role Again.

George M. Cohan began an engagement of two weeks in "Little Johnny Jones" at the Academy of Music last night. These are announced as Mr. Cohan's final appearances in one of the rôles that won him his popularity.

During the present season he has been appearing in "George Washington, Jr.," the most recent of his musical plays, but the other piece has been continually on tour.

NOAH'S ARK ON THE STAGE.

Harry Bulger Sails as the Bo'sun in a New Musical Comedy.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 22.—"Noah's Ark," with Harry Bulger as the bo'sun, sailed into the Academy to-night. It is the first effort of Clare Kummer, a new author in that field. Bulger's songs, "Reincarnation" and "There's a lot of things that Noah never knew," caught the audience. Others in the cast were Sallie Fisher, Matda Snyder, Hattie Arnold, Stanley Forde, Edwin Wilson, William Murphy, and Dan Williams.

Though introducing Noah, the ark, the animals, Noah's sons and their wives, the author has peopled the ark and Mount Ararat with a variety of other characters which add variety to the scene.

HENRY B. HARRIS HOME AGAIN.

Manager Says Edeson Will Open In New Play at the Hudson in August.

Henry B. Harris, who has been on a tour abroad, came home yesterday on the Amerika, and last night at the Hudson Theatre briefly outlined his plans for the coming season.

"Robert Edeson will open his London engagement in 'Strongheart' at the Aldwych Theatre on May 6," said Mr. Harris. "A year from the present time I shall present Rose Stahl in 'The Chorus Lady' at one of the Frohman theatres in London. At the Colonial Theatre, in Boston, in October of this year, I will produce 'The Struggle Everlasting,' the new emotional play by Edwin Milton Royle, with a prominent English actress in the leading role.

"Later on I shall send a 'Lion and the Mouse' company to London to try our luck a second time. The cast will be practically the same as that of the first company that visited London, but the play will be done under my own management, and we hope for better results.

"In this city we will have a new play at the Hackett Theatre to follow 'The Chorus Lady,' and Mr. Edeson will open with a new play at the Hudson in August."

TICKET SPECULATORS' WAR.

It Will Begin To-night by a Public Demonstration by Independents.

The Independent ticket speculators met last night at the Colonial Theatre to take some action against the so-called house speculators, who, they claim, are favored by the managers of various theatres at the expense of the other men.

From the Colonial the speculators went to a meeting place on Columbus Avenue, where they unanimously voted to make war with the assistance of banners and sandwich men. These men will make their first appearance to-night between the hours of 7 and 11. The first banner will bear a device saying that certain houses favor house speculators, and the nine following banners will give the names of nine houses. One of the "Independent" speculators says this action is taken on advice of counsel, as an announcement, and not as a boycott.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

The final week of "The Three of Us" at the Madison Square Theatre began last night. There will be the last appearances of Carlotta Nilsson in the leading role.

The Astor Theatre will be closed to-night and to-morrow night to prepare it for the opening of the revival of "Before and After" on Thursday evening.

Although the Actors' Fund Fair will not open until Monday, May 6, the first gun will be fired on the afternoon of Friday, May 3, when a baseball game will be played for the benefit of the fund by teams from "The Red Mill" and George M. Cohan's companies at the Polo Grounds.

"The Lost Paradise," as played by the William Morris Stock Company, began the second week of its run last night at the Lincoln Square Theatre.

Marie Allean, who plays the role of the maid in the last act of "Comtesse Coquette" at the Bijou, was ill last night and her part was taken by her understudy.

Louis Bishop Hall, who plays the architect in the second act of "The Great Divide," has left the company to accept a stock engagement in Milwaukee. His part for the final week of the production this season will be played by Bertram Harrison, general stage director for Henry Miller.

As a testimonial to Miss Hedwig von Ostermann, who for many years has been a favorite with German theatregoers, Hermann Sudermann's play in four acts, "Das Blumenboot," will be enacted for the first time to-night at Mr. Conried's Irving Place Theatre.

Klaw & Erlanger's production of "The Round Up," the new Western drama by Edmund Day, which was first presented at McVicker's Theatre in Chicago last Monday night, will be the opening attraction at the New Amsterdam Theatre early in September. The "big" scene of the play is an Indian fight in the third act, in which two prospectors have a battle with the Apaches in the Bad Lands of Arizona.

The final week of Henry W. Savage's production of Puccini's opera, "Madame Butterfly," began last night at the New Montauk Theatre, Brooklyn. Since the original production and run at the Garden Theatre, Manhattan, the company has made an extended tour through the large cities of the West.

MISS BURLINGAME TO BE A BRIDE TO-DAY

To Wed Tracy Hoppin, Nephew of J. Pierpont Morgan, in St. James's Church.

THE GARY-DULA WEDDING

Plan to Visit the Jamestown Exposition—Benefit for Washington Square Nursery.

To-day and to-morrow will bring many weddings. To-day's chief event is the wedding of Miss Constance Burlingame, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Livermore Burlingame, and granddaughter of the late Anson Burlingame, at one time Minister to China, and Tracy Hoppin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Street Hoppin of Providence, grandson of former Gov. William Warner Hoppin of Rhode Island and nephew of J. Pierpont Morgan. The ceremony will take place at 4 o'clock in St. James's Church, Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Street. It will be followed by a reception at the home of the bride's parents, 47 East Eighty-third Street. Miss Mary Dows, a niece of Mrs. Benjamin Brewster, will be the maid of honor.

Frederick S. Hoppin, Jr., will be the best man, and there will be a number of ushers.

The plans for the wedding of Miss Rena Dula and Eugene Windom Gary, not heretofore published, are as follows: Miss Dula will have her sister, Miss Belva Dula, as her maid of honor. Her other attendants are to be Mrs. Weightman, Mrs. E. S. Edgar, Jr., and little Josephine Edgar will be the flower girl. Mr. Gary's brother will be his best man, and the ushers will include Robert Dula, Jr., and Mr. Minnegerodt. The wedding will take place to-morrow at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Byron Dula, 1,073 Fifth Avenue.

PLAN TO VISIT JAMESTOWN.

Several Parties Getting Ready to Leave for the Exposition.

A number of well-known New Yorkers are planning early visits to the Jamestown Exposition. Gen. Frederick Dent Grant and Mrs. Grant have taken a suite of rooms at the New Chamberlain Hotel at Old Point Comfort, and will do considerable entertaining. Mr. and Mrs. Francis Burrall Hoffman and Mr. and Mrs. Van Vechten Olcott are among those who will attend also. They will leave town on Thursday.

Frederick Gallatin, who is going down on his yacht, Riviera, Monday next, will take a party of guests.

CONCERT FOR NURSERY.

Calve, the Giliberts, and Dalmores to Sing at Sherry's.

A concert will be given this afternoon at Sherry's for the benefit of the Washington Square Day Nursery and Summer Home. Mme. Calvé, Mr. and Mme. Gilibert, and Mr. Dalmorès of the Manhattan Opera House Company, are among the artists who have consented to appear.

Among the patronesses are Mrs. Henry C. Frick, Mrs. Charles H. Dixon, and Mrs. Le Roy Dresser, the Misses Georgine Iselin, Annie Leary, and Ruth Lawrence.

Social Notes.

Miss Amy Baker will give a recital at Sherry's on Friday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock and will be assisted by Frederick William Gunther, bass, and Bruno S. Huhn at the piano. Miss Baker gives these recitals every Easter season. She will give some French recitations and other attractive numbers.

Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, who has been visiting friends in Quebec, has arrived at the Hotel St. Regis.

The Misses Julia and Alice Meyer, who were in town for the wedding of Miss May Tuckerman and G. H. Kinnicutt, at which they were attendants, have returned to Washington.

Miss Nelka de Smirnoff has come from Russia, and is the guest in Washington of her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Wadsworth.

The Columbia University Class of '82 will give a dinner to-night at Delmonico's.

Elsie Janis Seen in Vaudeville.

After two seasons as the star in "The Vanderbilt Cup," Elsie Janis made her reappearance in vaudeville yesterday afternoon at the Colonial Theatre, under the management of Percy Williams. She sang a new répertoire of songs and gave new imitations. The house was crowded and gave her a cordial reception. It is now considered probable that after an engagement in vaudeville Miss Janis will re-enter musical comedy under the management of Liebler & Co., independent of the Aborns.

"The House of a Thousand Candles."

Special to The New York Times.

WORCESTER, Mass., April 22.—"The House of a Thousand Candles" was put on the stage at the Worcester Theatre to-night by the Malcolm Williams Stock Company. Mr. Williams made a hit as Bates, a servant, turning into a detective. It is a dramatization in four acts of Meredith Nicholson's novel.

Deneen Signs Theatre Ticket Bill.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., April 22.—Gov. Charles S. Deneen to-night signed the Theatre Scalping bill, which forbids the sale of theatre tickets through brokers at prices other than those printed on the tickets, or those obtaining at the box offices of the playhouses.

TECLA'S Reconstructed GEMS are made from small particles of the natural stones melted together, and are therefore as genuine as the gems made by nature. Mounted only with genuine diamonds in platinum and gold settings of rare individuality. M. TECLA & CO., 929 B'way.

CONSOLO GIVES A RECITAL.

Young Pianist Heard for the Second Time Here This Season.

Ernesto Consolo, a pianist, who at present lives in Chicago, gave a recital last evening in Mendelssohn Hall. This young man, heard here once before this season in a sonata recital with Hugo Heermann, the violinist, is an interesting and clever pianist of the brilliant type. He has almost an operatic manner of playing, and was successful in the more showy numbers on the programme and even in a Scarlatti Gigue. A Bach-Liszt prelude and fugue in A minor was a matter mostly of technique for this man, and Brahms's F minor sonata, played last week by Lhévinne, was a matter mostly of notes. Neither the Italian nor the Pole put the divine fire into this massive structure, but Lhévinne was more successful than his successor.

Two Sgambati numbers, Chopin's B minor Scherzo, Cyril Scott's "Solitude" and "Pierrot," and the Weber-Tausig "Invitation to the Dance," completed the programme. The audience was not a large one. It is almost too late in the Spring for a piano recital to meet with success.

WILLY HESS RESIGNS.

Boston Symphony's Concert Master Gives Way to Stuttgart Musician.

BOSTON, April 22.—The resignation of Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to take effect at the close of the present season, was announced to-day. Mr. Hess has led the first violins of the orchestra for three years, and severs his connection with the organization voluntarily because of the need of rest.

His successor will be Carl Wendling, who comes to Boston on a leave of absence from his duties as concert master of the Hoftheater at Stuttgart, Germany.

"THE MIKADO" BARRED.

British Admiralty Issues Formal Orders on the Subject.

LONDON, April 22.—The Admiralty has issued orders forbidding any naval band to play selections from Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Mikado" in the course of the coming visit to England of Prince Fushimi, a cousin of the Emperor of Japan.

MINING SHOW CLOSED.

Management Suddenly Hangs Up a Sign After a Week's Run.

Visitors to the Mining Exposition at the Grand Central Palace found last night a large placard upon the door with the inscription, "Mining Show Is Closed." It had been only open for a week and it was intended to keep it running for some time. No fuller information of the reasons for the sudden change of plans of the directors was vouchsafed, but it was gathered that as the exposition had been kept strictly to business, it had not proved such an attraction for the public as had been expected.

It was a venture of the North American Mining Exposition Company, of which James P. Williams is President, Smith H. Freeman Vice President, and H. O. Rockwell Treasurer.

T. W. THROCKMORTON DEAD.

Aged Red Bank Farmer Succumbs After Hearing of Brother's Death.

RED BANK, N. J., April 22.—Tyler W. Throckmorton died to-day at his home here after a long illness. He was eighty-four years old and was the brother of Joseph A. Throckmorton, President of the Second National Bank, who died on Saturday at his own home, at the age of eighty years. Tyler was at first not told of his brother's death, as it was believed the shock would kill him, but yesterday they broke the news to him. The shock, together with the long siege of sickness he had undergone, proved too much for the old man.

Tyler was a prosperous farmer and also a well-known civil engineer. He held several local political offices and was Director in the Second National Bank, of which his brother was President up to the time of his death. He leaves a widow and three children.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

The Rev. Dr. William W. Lord.

The Rev. William Wilberforce Lord, D. D., died in the Clendenning, West 103d Street, yesterday at noon. He was rector of the church attended by President Jefferson Davis of the Confederate States and was a Chaplain in the Confederate Army.

Dr. Lord was born in Madison County, N. Y., in 1819, and was graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1845. He taught in Amherst for a time, and in 1850 became a priest of the Episcopal Church. He went through the siege of Vicksburg as a Chaplain of the Confederate Army, and at the same time served as rector of Christ Church of Vicksburg. After the war he served as rector of several churches in the South, and was one of the founders of the University of the South. Later he came to the North, where he became rector of Christ Church, Cooperstown, N. Y. He remained in this church until he was compelled to retire because of the infirmities of age. He was author of a number of poems which attracted attention.

David A. Bunn.

The burial of David A. Bunn, a former Appraiser of the Port of New York and at one time President of the Otsego County Association, will take place to-day at Morris, Otsego County, N. Y. Mr. Bunn, who was 57 years of age, died in St. Mary's Hospital, Jamaica, Queens Borough, on Saturday, of chorea, from which he had suffered since he was a boy. He had been in the hospital but three days when he succumbed to the malady.

Mr. Bunn, who was born in Morris, Otsego County, lived in Richmond Hill at the time of his death. Besides his parents he leaves five brothers and two sisters. Funeral services were held on Sunday by the Rev. William P. Evans of the Church of the Resurrection, Richmond Hill. Mr. Bunn was a favorite with the children of his neighborhood, all of whom knew him as "Uncle Dave."

Frederick Beck.

Frederick Beck, probably the oldest and one of the largest wall paper manufacturers in this country, died at the German Hospital on Sunday, after an operation performed on last Wednesday.

He came to this country in 1847, when 18 years of age. In 1860, with a small capital, Mr. Beck began making wall paper. He had one floor in a building in Ninth Avenue, between Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh Streets.

A great matter of pride with Mr. Beck was the number of men he had brought up from boyhood, and who had been with him since he established his large concern. To the loyalty and hearty co-operation of these men Mr. Beck attributed much of his business success.

He leaves a widow, three daughters, and one son whose residence is in Germany; also numerous grandchildren.

Franz Kjellman.

UPSALA, Sweden, April 22.—Franz Kjellman, Professor of Botany at Upsala University, died to-day. He accompanied Nordenskjold on several of his polar expeditions.

Franz Reinhold Kjellman was born in 1846, on the Island of Bromo. In 1868 he studied at Upsala, and after his return from several polar expeditions he became a professor at the Upsala University. He wrote many accounts in book form of these expeditions, among which was the Swedish Expedition of 1872 to 1873.

Frau Heinrich Knote.

MUNICH, Bavaria, April 22.—Frau Heinrich Knote, wife of the leading tenor of the Royal Court Opera here, is dead. She was born in the United States, where her husband is well known.

Frau Knote was a member of a Brooklyn family. Her grandfather was one of the founders of Plymouth Church, while her father, the Rev. J. Leonard Corning, was a Congregational minister who preached in several of the larger cities up the State. He was also United States Consul at Munich, and it was there that his daughter met Herr Knote. While he was making his first appearance in New York Herr Knote was presented with a laurel wreath, which contained a large amount of mining securities. He afterward learned that this was given to him by Mr. Corning.

Music for the Summer House

Should be care-free music. Not music laboriously produced. Not music that requires you to make unnecessary exertions. Not music that brings with it vexatious annoyances.

The Tel-Electric Piano Player produces ideal summer music. No pumping is required—nothing to watch—you can play in the dark. You can even take the piano player on the porch, leaving the piano in its present position; and, more important than all else, the Tel

SUPREME COURT—Scudder, J.—Opens at 10:15 A. M. Nos. 25, 26, 30, 14, 29.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

NATIONAL STEEL AND WIRE COMPANY.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the National Steel and Wire Company of 114 Liberty Street by these creditors: Pennsylvania Steel Company, $62,396; Westmoreland Coal Company, $9,344, and Bank of North America, $10,000. It was alleged that the company is insolvent and committed an act of bankruptcy by a receiver being appointed for the assets of the company on Dec. 22 last. It is a Maine corporation. When the receiver was appointed it was stated that the liabilities were $2,500,000.

S. & M. SCHULMAN.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Samuel and Moses Schulman, who compose the firm of S. & M. Schulman, skirt manufacturers at 48 East Eighth Street, by these creditors: Kremer & Kremer, $154; Harris Handman & Brothers, $226, and Fox & Weinberg, $151. It was alleged that they are insolvent, made preferential payments, $2,000, and transferred accounts, $1,400. They began business on Nov. 21, 1905, and claimed a capital of $5,000.

EUGENE FREUND.—Eugene Freund of Lynn & Freund, cafe, 44 East Fifty-ninth Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $3,067 and $1,250, in stock. Lynn filed a petition in bankruptcy on April 6.

NORTH SIDE BREWING COMPANY.—Judge Hough of the United States District Court has granted an application by Stern, Singer & Barr, attorneys for Edward G. Benedict, receiver of the North Side Brewing Company of Third Avenue and 168th Street, authorizing the receiver to borrow $85,000 by issuing receiver's certificates to advance money to customers to pay for liquor tax certificates on May 1. Mr. Singer said there are 135 customers of the brewery, ninety-seven of whom in this city and neighboring towns will require advancements of money to pay for the licenses. The assets consist of the brewery and plant, valued at $600,000 as a going concern, mortgages of $325,000; chattel mortgages on saloons, $48,000, of which $15,000 are hypothecated; accounts, $15,000; beer, $10,000, and supplies, $2,000.

DUNN & ZUCKERMAN.—Judge Hough has appointed Peter Alexander receiver for Dunn & Zuckerman, furniture dealers at 2,035 Second Avenue. It was stated that the entire stock of $4,000 was removed ten days ago, and the store closed. Outstanding accounts are estimated at $2,000.

A. ADLER & CO.—Schedules in bankruptcy of A. Adler & Co., wholesale flour, 116 Broad Street, show liabilities $8,362, and assets $113. The largest creditors are the Washburn-Crosby Company, $2,296, and George A. Zabriski, $2,252.

ABRAHAM HARTMAN.—Abraham Hartman, dealer in furniture at 103 and 118 Columbia Street, made an assignment yesterday to Gustave Hartman. Liabilities are $4,000, and assets $1,000. He had been in business four years.

Discharges from Bankruptcy.

Judge Hough of the United States District Court has granted discharges to these bankrupts:

PETER BAKER, liquors, 149 Amsterdam Avenue; liabilities, $2,329.

JOSEPH D. CRONAN, real estate agent, 26 Courtlandt Street; liabilities, $34,905

SHARP GAINS THROUGH LIST

Short Covering a Factor—Some Outside Buying—Money Going Inland Again.

In place of the dullness and narrow fluctuations which characterized business upon the Stock Exchange in the closing days of last week, there was presented by yesterday's market the spectacle of moderate activity and a steady rise in prices, which at the close of the day left active shares with gains of from 1 to 4 points. The volume of transactions was not large, falling well below the million-share mark, and while the commission houses reported some outside buying, the trading was in the main confined to professional traders. It was apparent that the efforts of these speculators to recover stocks sold short last week, or earlier, were largely responsible for the extent of the day's advance. A part of the greater cheerfulness displayed by the financial community as a whole was attributable to the temporary lull in the flood of unfavorable advices which has been pouring into Wall Street from the crop territory. Upon the grain markets there occurred sharp recessions in wheat prices, and this was taken as a good omen by the stock market. Another matter of favorable import was the outlook for a lowering of official discount rates at London, Paris, and Berlin before the end of the present week. The complete halt in the gold movement to this side, which was further emphasized yesterday by an advance in foreign exchange rates, particularly demand sterling, to the highest point of the year, together with the additions to its holding through substantial receipts of South African gold has so fortified the Bank of England that a reduction in its rate on Thursday is now confidently expected in London, and this prospect finds reflection here. The Bank of France is recovering from London the gold it sent to that capital at the end of last year, and is otherwise gaining a position which will enable it to lower its rate in the near future. At Berlin the heavy April payments are well out of the way and the German financial world is looking, therefore, for a reduction in the present onerous 6 per cent. rate maintained by the Imperial Bank. At the moment there is apparently nothing in the progress of affairs in Russia to interfere with Continental money markets. The strain under which these markets have recently been explains adequately the situation set forth in the dispatch printed in this newspaper yesterday morning, to the effect that the foreign bankers have not availed themselves of their option to take up all of the remaining half of the recent New York, New Haven & Hartford 140,000,000 franc 4 per cent. debenture loan. A portion of this optioned half of the issue has been taken, and, so far as the railroad itself is concerned, it is in full possession of the entire proceeds of the loan.

In spite of the unfavorable character of Saturday's bank return and the continued outflow of money to inland cities from this centre, the money market continued to display great ease. Call money rates failed to touch the 3 per cent. rate established during the closing days of last week, and time loans for several of the usual periods were obtainable at slight concessions. The sharp upturn in demand sterling seemed to indicate the repayment to London of loans contracted there earlier in the year, and suggested the possibility that this movement had been one of the factors in the last two bank statements. Rates at interior cities continued to work against New York, and the probability is that the outflow of this character will be as heavy as it was last week. From the Sub-Treasury the banks gained substantially, and thus far have to their credit from this source $1,195,000, which compares with a gain of $1,039,000 in the same period of last week.

PHILADELPHIA, April 22.—The market was active in spots, with Reading furnishing one-half of the day's business. United States Steel contributed half of the remainder. Philadelphia Rapid Transit, Lehigh Valley, and Lehigh Navigation trust certificates were in good demand and rose sharply. There was more commission house business, owing, probably, to continued growing ease in money. The close was strong.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

That intangible something called sentiment reversed itself in the speculative market yesterday and the dullness and distress of the concluding days of last week gave way to an appearance of strength, activity, and optimism. When the résumé of the day's operations was completed it was found that only three or four stocks showed a fractional decline from the final prices of Saturday, and the figures on the advance side of the account were very imposing. An analysis showed that the trading was limited from the point of view of activity to half a dozen stocks, and two issues furnished more than one-third of the total transactions. The feeling in brokers' offices seemed to be an unhappy combination of cheerfulness and skepticism. The tape conduced to hope, but the events of the past few weeks have been a strain on the faith of the brokerage fraternity.

"I have been trying all day to be bullish, but I cannot get any encouragement except from the ticker, and that is not cloquent enough to be convincing," grumbled a trader in a big house. "Whether it is exaggerated conservatism, or shattered nerves, or basic disbelief in the outcome I cannot tell, but it is hard work getting up enthusiasm when your words of cheer are received with grunts of dissent and even the broker hesitates to say you are right, although it looks like an order. I suppose so many of our local prophets have lost their reputations recently that the new crop is chary of taking a definite position. I went into a foreign banking house to-day, a place where they have goods to sell, and expected to find there at least some trace of my rainbow, but they were as gloomy as a two-dollar broker in a market like that of last Saturday. My optimism seems to be a positive irritant. For that matter I am not any too sure of it myself."

***

There is a grim humor in the way the financial district treats the now famous green bug, but your grain houses treat him with due deference. There is not enough doing in stocks for grain houses to disregard completely the possibilities of the grain market and the assistance which a scare of the particular nature of this particular bug gives to a waning interest in grain options. One banker, who has followed crop news with interest, inquired yesterday of one of the members of a house identified to some extent with grain as to the precise nature of the wheat situation and the real destructiveness of the much quoted green bug. The grain man in question was silent for a moment, but he finally remarked that his opinion on the subject was not quite fixed. While in Chicago its importance as a destructive element appeared to him very great; with the cessation of its interest in grain and the development of a bullish attitude on stocks his point of view had changed. "I think," he concluded, "that the real destructiveness of the green bug is developed in the Chicago wheat-pit."

***

Bankers volunteer no new explanation of the heavy increases in loans in the bank statements of the past two weeks. The recall of funds by out-of-town institutions and the passive attitude so far as the loan market is concerned of some of the trust companies are more or less logical explanations of the situation. Whether this feature of the bank statement predicates a firmer tone for money in the immediate future is a question that all bankers do not answer in precisely the same way. That they are a little afraid of a firmer tone in money, or, to put it more accurately, that they look for it, might possibly be deduced from the general nature of the comment heard in banking circles.

***

Mystery is one of the elements that lend glamour to pool operations in the market. And the Street thrives on mystery; even in dull times it is a sustaining influence. Just now the mystery is whether any of the so-called big pools have been seriously crippled. You talk to a member of a pool and you feel that the eternal granite hills are not more solid, more secure. But you listen to the gossip, the suggestions that rise no one knows where and fill the district, and you believe that the dissolution of this or that pool is imminent. Disregarding both the inspired word and the speculative chaff, it seems very clear that there are weak sisters among the pools, but it seems equally certain that unless we get another speculative cataclysm the retreat of this organized speculation will be orderly.

***

One pool has been bandied about in the gossip for weeks as a likely candidate for mortuary honors, but unless one of the most interested members has a constitutional misconception of the nature of the truth its situation is sound. Big speculators are identified with it, and the fact appears to be that two members sold their holdings while one has been having some difficulty to determine in what direction lay his duty. The elimination of the three, however, would still leave a powerful group with over 70 per cent. of a certain stock and nerve enough to hold on for a long time. Incidentally the present agreement is a hard and fast one, not one of convenience for speculators of nimble wits and easy-going partners.

***

Little tragedies of the speculative world come to light daily, some inspiring sympathy, while others are received with grave faces and ill-concealed smiles. Within a year an ambitious young man, whose personality radiated self-appreciation, had an idea that he would like to become a member of a certain house. His idea was fostered by the house in question which had an eye single to the commissions one friend of the young man might produce. Disregarding the fact that the young man's capital, at least that portion which he desired to put into the business—for he was a very practical young man—was more on paper than in currency, a deal was made and the results temporarily justified the judgment of those concerned. But the Ides of March wrought a fearful change in the speculative capacity of many men big and little. He has ceased to be interested in stocks. His young friend has gone back to his former duties, voicing a distaste for all things speculative.

***

Within a few days some of the current gossip concerning cripples in the financial district will be put to the test of actual development and it will be seen whether so many reorganizations will take place as have been predicted. Some new details are coming to light concerning the heavy reduction of the clerical force in certain houses of more or less erstwhile spectacular speculative fame, and it is said that a division of the partners is certain within the next ten days. The denial in one instance has been rather explosive, and has found its way into the Street talk as one of the idiomatic utterances of one of the breezy partners. It is candidly admitted that if the gossip had no foundation the language needs no justification.

***

Statisticians abound in the financial district, and the man with the chart and the man with the figures are very much in evidence. Certain houses tolerate some very pronounced specimens of this particular cult of bores, but others are so chilly that the chart players do not obtrude their views on the other customers. One interesting compilation, however, that is being quoted just at present shows by means of averages the character of the speculative markets in the years immediately preceding the Presidential elections since the time of the civil war. These averages may not be conclusive, but if the analysis is carried to its ultimate result it would seem to show that these years preceding Presidential elections are not really adverse years from the point of view of the stock market. No one assumes, of course, that these figures can measure possible developments of the next twelve months, inasmuch as there is nothing in the figures that will adjust itself readily to political as well as speculative conditions.

THE FOREIGN MARKETS.

Developments of Yesterday in London, Paris, and Berlin.

LONDON, April 22.—Money was in liberal supply and the demand was quiet in the market to-day. Discounts were easy. The Bank of England obtained the bulk of the £250,000 in gold available.

Prices on the Stock Exchange were steady, but trading was dull. The nearness of the settlement and the approaching new issues, including the Strits Settlement loan of £5,000,000, checked business. Consols hardened fractionally, but other first-class securities scarcely moved.

Copper shares were very active and improved in sympathy with the metal.

Americans ruled quietly firm in the forenoon at a shade over parity, and later the receipt of the New York opening prices infused a little more life into the trading, Union Pacific being the most favored. After further fractional improvement the market closed quietly firm.

Japanese Imperial 6s of 1904 closed at 101½.

The Indian Secretary to-day obtained an option on £175,000 in gold, due here shortly.

Bar silver quiet at 30 5-16d per ounce.

Money, 1½@2 per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 3@3 1-16 per cent.; for three months' bills, 3¼ per cent.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 10.90; Lisbon, 2.25.

PARIS, April 22.—Prices on the Bourse to-day opened firm, and then trading became dull and so remained until the close of the market. Russian Imperial 4s closed at 73.80, and Russian bonds of 1904 at 425.

Three per cent. rentes, 94f 42½c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f 18½c for checks.

BERLIN, April 22.—Trading on the Boerse to-day opened quiet, with an irregular tendency, but improved later upon the prospect of a reduction of the Imperial Bank will per cent to-morrow and reduce the bank's rate of discount. The rate is now six per cent.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Money on call on Stock Exchange collateral loaned at 1¾@2¾ per cent., with the last loan at 2 per cent. Most of the day's loans were made at 2½ per cent.

Time money was quoted at 3½@4 per cent. for sixty days, 4@4¼ per cent. for ninety days, and 4¼@4½ per cent. for four, five, and six months.

Mercantile paper rates, 6@6½ per cent. for sixty to ninety days' indorsed bills receivable, and 6@6½ per cent. for choice four to six months' single names.

Clearing House statement: Exchanges, ; balances, ; Subtreasury credit, $22,267.

The local banks have gained $1,105,000 since Friday, as compared with a gain of $1,923,000 in the same time last week.

Sterling exchange was strong. Nominal rates were $4.84 for sixty days and $4.87 for demand. Actual rates for demand closed at $4.8695, sixty days at $4.8310@$4.8315, and cables at $4.8650@$4.8655. Commercial bills were $4.82½@$4.82¾.

Francs, 5.23¾ plus 1-16 for long and 5.18¾ less 3-64 for demand. Reichsmarks, 94¾ and 95; guilders, 40⅝ plus 1-16.

Exchange on New York at domestic centres: Boston—18 2-3 discount. Chicago—25c discount. New Orleans—Commercial, 500@75c discount; bank, $1 premium. Savannah—50c discount; selling, 75c premium. Cincinnati—30c discount. St. Louis—20@25c premium. Charleston—Buying, 50c discount; selling, 1-10 premium.

SILVER QUOTATIONS.

Bar silver was quoted in London at 30½d per ounce, and in New York at 65½c per ounce. Mexican dollars were 50c.

LONDON CLOSING QUOTATIONS.

FLOATING OF JAPAN'S LOANS.

Mr. Takahashi Says Little American Money Was Obtained.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 22.—Korekiyo Takahashi, the Japanese financier, who has just completed his mission of floating loans aggregating $115,000,000, in London and Paris to redeem the war bonds of Japan, arrived in San Francisco on his way home yesterday.

"The loans floated abroad," he said, "are now mostly held by London bankers, the stringency of money in Paris being chiefly responsible for this fact. Japan will pay 5 per cent. for this money, which will be used in redeeming the 6 per cent. bonds issued during the war. No difficulty is now encountered by Japan in raising money. Her credit has been unquestioned since her achievements in the war, and foreign capital is daily pouring into her in increased amount.

"The United States bought about $60,000,000 of the war bonds, but has contributed little or no capital for investment in Japan since. The reason for this is patent. Men with money in the United States can get bigger returns for it here than anywhere else, and they do not have to go abroad to seek investments. Japan will probably attract very little American capital while the present reign of prosperity continues in the United States."

METAL MARKET REPORTS.

Copper metal for both spot and future delivery, in the London market yesterday, advanced 5s. from the last prices of Friday. The closing quotations were £99 15s. per ton for both. Pig tin closed strong at an advance of £2 15s for spot and £2 5s for futures, at £188 15s and £186 15s respectively. Lead was unchanged at £20. Spelter was steady at £25 15s. Iron warrants were strong at 56s. for standard foundry and 56s 3d for Middlesboro.

The closing bid and asked prices of copper and other metals on the New York Metal Exchange yesterday for spot delivery, compare as follows with those of Friday:

OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Brisk Trading and Strong Tone Developed in the Broad Street Market.

RISE IN BOSTON COPPER

Transactions of 9,000 Shares Leave It 1⅝ Higher Than Saturday's Close—Davis-Daly Down.

Curb stocks were strong yesterday under brisker trading than has appeared in the outside market for some time, and at the close the list, with a few exceptions, was higher. In mining shares Boston Copper attracted attention in an upward movement which opened at 28¼, ¾ above Saturday's close, and continued to 29¼. The close, after transactions of 9,000, was at 29, a net gain of 1⅝. The Cole-Ryan stocks were also substantial gainers by the day's trading. Butte Coalition jumping from an opening at 26 to 27¾ on transactions of 1,550 shares. Greene-Cananea went from 10½ to 11, closing at 10⅞ after sales of 2,240, a net gain of ⅜. Nipissing made the best market yesterday that has appeared in this issue for months. A steady rise set in after the opening, which was at 13¾, ¼ above Saturday's close, carrying the stock up to 14½. Sales reached a total of 12,800. One of the weak issues in yesterday's market was Davis-Daly, which sold off before comparatively small offerings to 10½, a loss for the day of ¾ of a point. In the Industrial list, interest centred in Manhattan Transit, which began one of its periodic booms, going up from 4¾ to 5⅝. The close was at 5¼, after sales of 4,500.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

George Blumenthal of Lazard Freres will sail for Europe on Thursday on the Amerika. He will spend six months abroad.

A seat on the Stock Exchange is reported sold at $70,000, which is $500 better than the price said to have been obtained for a seat sold last week. The record price, reached last Summer, is $95,000.

A meeting of the members of the Produce Exchange will be held to-morrow at 3:15 P. M. for the purpose of choosing a Nominating Committee of nine members to select officials for the ensuing year.

The Directors of the Lord & Taylor Company have put the common stock on an 8 per cent. basis by the declaration of a 2 per cent. quarterly dividend, payable May 1 to stockholders of record April 25. The dividends hitherto in force have been at the rate of 7 per cent. a year, or 1¾ per cent. quarterly.

Shipbuilding Co. Receivership Ends.

TRENTON, April 22.—Upon the filing of the last supplementary report in the United States Shipbuilding Company receivership to-day Judge Lanning discharged the receiver, James Smith, Jr. The report showed that there is now in the hands of the receiver $2,117.15, which goes to the creditors of the defunct concern, that at the last report there was $14,824.17, of which the State of New Jersey got $7,320 for franchise tax of 1905. The action to-day ends the famous case here.

TRAVIS NOW A BROKER.

Golfer to Manage a Branch Stock Exchange House in West 85th Street.

Walter J. Travis, the amateur golf champion, who held the title both here and in England, embarked in the stock brokerage business yesterday as the manager of a branch office at 5 West Eighty-fifth Street for the Stock Exchange house of Waterman, Anthony & Co. He is the latest of a long line of young men famous in the annals of amateur sport to gravitate to Wall Street.

If Mr. Travis eventually joins the Stock Exchange, he will find plenty of famous golfers on the board. Some of the more recent golfers to become members are H. C. Macdonald, who two or three years ago was a champion at Shinnecock and West Brook; Harry Hollins, and R. C. Watson.

In the last year Larned, Wright, and Clothier have joined the Exchange, and with the Wrenn brothers, who have been members for some years, would make the Stock Exchange pretty hard to beat at tennis. In the other branches of amateur sport the Exchange is equally well represented. Something like a year ago Daly, the famous Harvard, and later West Point, football player, became a member, and he found there already Capt. Hincke and a full eleven of other ex-Harvard players. Yale is represented by more than a score of ex-crew, track, gridiron, and diamond men, of whom perhaps the most readily recalled is Gilbert C. Greenway, Jr. It has often been said of the Stock Exchange that it might be called an asylum of ex-college athletes.

THE CHEMICAL BANK IN ITS NEW HOME

Opens Business in Imposing Structure After Moving Over $7,000,000 in Cash.

30-TON VAULT IS A FEATURE

Dining Room Provided for Clerks, Who Will Never Leave the Building in Working Hours.

The Chemical National Bank, which is one of the oldest banking institutions in New York, opened or business yesterday morning in its new building, which has been for more than two years in course of construction on the plot of ground at 270 Broadway, the site of the bank's modest old quarters, once a relic of old New York.

The books had all been moved into the new building on Saturday, along with aoma $7,000,000 in currency, which was carried in boxes and sacks from the temporary offices of the bank, in the Barclay Building, at Duane Street. The money mada a fair-sized truckload.

The time for the moving of the currancy had been kept secret, and though no such sum of easily transportable money had probably ever before passed through the streets of New York in one compact load, the plain-clothes men and detectives who accompanied the precious freight, both on the truck and following on the sidewalk, didn't see a ripple in Broadway.

All day yesterday President William H. Porter and the other bank officers were kept busy receiving callers, who included officers of the principal financial institutions downtown. Mrs. Hetty Green, who is one of the bank's most famous customers, was not among the callers.

The new building is one of the finest of its kind in the United States. Some of the visitors yesterday said it was the equal of the National Park Bank Building in Broadway, near Fulton Street, hitherto the show place among the city's banking institutions. It is smaller than the National Park Bank, which is also distinguished by the magnificence of its mural paintings.

In the Chemical's new building the only attampts at mural decoration are four allegorical figures, one in each pendentive, rapresenting Ceres, Boreas, Helios, and Neptune, the earth, air, fire, and water of ancient chemistry.

The vestibule is finished in Pavonazzo marble and the corridor in white-veined statuary marble. The banking room, which is 70 feet wide by about 170 feet long, abutting on Chambers Street, is 85 feet high, surmounted and lighted by a dome roofed in the centre with stained glass. It is finished in panels of veined white marble relieved by Chippelino marble of an olive tint.

The department offices are separated from the main room by waist-high partitions of pink marble and dull bronze.

In a four-story section of the building which rises over part of the corridor well back from the Broadway entrance are dining rooms for both officers and employes, where luncheon is served. The clerks do not leave the bank from the time they arrive in the morning until quitting in the late afternoon.

One of the most interesting features of the new building is the vault, which is unlike any other in the city. This is built on a small gore of land about 25 feet square, extending south from the banking room. To this a masonry structure has been built up to the level of the first windows of the banking room.

Here the thirty-ton safa stands supported, in effect, in mid-air. It is about eighteen feet deep, twenty feet wide, and two stories high. Standing on masonry columns, it allows room for the watchman to pass beneath, and it has an equal space between its top and the ceiling of its house, which is in plain view of the banking room.

The Chemical National Bank, though its State charter only dates from 1844 and its National charter from 1865, really goes back to 1823. In that year was chartered the New York Chemical Manufacturing Company for the purpose of "manufacturing drugs, medicines, paints, and dyers' articles." The original charter expressly forbade the concern to do a banking business, but in the following year the articles of incorporation were amended to provide for the appointment of Commissioners to receive subscriptions to the capital stock of the company to the amount of $500,000, and empowered them to employ all of this capital except $100,000 in the banking business.

The bank operated under this charter until 1844, when the Chemical Bank was organized, with a capital of $300,000, which remained the capital of the Chemical National Bank until last January. Then the capital was increased to $3,000,000 by taking $2,700,000 out of the surplus and undivided profits and adding it to capital.

On its $300,000 capital the bank has paid dividends, which make a remarkable record. From 1849 to 1854 12 per cent. was paid, the next year 18 per cent., and from 1856 to the end of the Civil War 24 per cent. In the next four years, notwithstanding the hard times that immediately followed the war, dividends of 36 per cent. were paid, which in 1870 were increased to 40 per cent.

In 1871 and 1872 60 per cent. was paid. In 1873, notwithstanding the panic, and for tha succeeding fourteen years, a 100 per cent. rate was maintained, and from 1888 to 1906 150 per cent. was regularly diabursed. With the increased capitalization tha dividends have been established on a pro rata, or 15 per cent. basis.

The Chemical has always been a mercantile bank, and it caters entirely to mercantile patronage. Its accounts are chack accounts, and, contrary to the usual custom among banks nowadays, it allows no interest on deposits.

Besidea President Porter, who came to the institution from the Chase National Bank, the Directors are Frederic W. Stevens, W. Emlen Roosevelt, Augustus D. Julliard, George G. De Witt, Robert W. Goelet, and Joseph B. Martindale.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT.—Evidences of rain in the Southwest, coupled with a sharp decline in the St. Louis market, led to weakness yesterday. Other influences were the increase by 808,000 bushels in the visible supply against 2,022,000 bushels decrease last year; heavy interior receipts, larger estimates for car-lot arrivals at Chicago to-day. Northwest receipts of 763 cars, compared with 437 cars a year ago, and the Winnipeg arrivals of 350 cars, where 199 cars were received on the corresponding day last year. The declining tendency was varied at times by sharp rallies, based on reports that bugs were causing great damage in Missouri and that the outlook in Kansas was worn. Numerous complaints of winter killing and some of too much rain were received from the Ohio Valley. Liverpool was easy and ¼d lower. Other markets also declined, except Budapest, which closed 3 points net higher. Cash wheat in New York was easy, closing as follows: No. 2 red, 83¼c, elevator, and 84¼c, free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 93½c, and No. 2 hard, Winter, 88c, free on board, afloat, opening navigation. After the close July sold up to 87⅞c on rumore of 30 loads for export.

CORN.—Although relatively stronger than wheat, corn was not especially firm, except right at the opening, when it sold higher than Saturday on lighter receipts at Chicago than had been expected and the advance of ¾d in Liverpool. World's shipments were about 700,000 bushels larger than the previous week and the visible supply decreased 850,000 bushels. Export business amounted to 10 loads. Cash corn in New York closing steady, as follows: No. 2, 57½c, elevator, and 55c, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white, 57½c, and No. 2 yellow, 55c, free on board, afloat.

THE COTTON MARKET.

Less Active and Lower—Closes at Net Loss of 3 to 8 Points.

WEATHER IN COTTON STATES.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The Federal Weather Bureau issues the following forecast for the Cotton States for Tuesday and Wednesday:

South Carolina and Georgia—Rain Tuesday. Wednesday, fair; fresh southerly winds.

North Carolina—Rain Tuesday and probably Wednesday; fresh southeast to south winds.

Eastern Florida—Fair in southern, rain in northern portion, Tuesday. Wednesday, fair; fresh southwesterly winds.

Western Florida and Alabama—Showers Tuesday. Wednesday, fair; fresh westerly winds.

Mississippi and Louisiana—Fair Tuesday and Wednesday; fresh southwest to west winds.

Eastern Texas—Fair and warmer Tuesday. Wednesday, fresh westerly winds.

Western Texas—Fair and warmer Tuesday. Wednesday, fair.

Oklahoma, Indian Territory, and Arkansas—Clearing Tuesday. Wednesday, fair, warmer.

Tennessee—Rain Tuesday. Wednesday, partly cloudy.

The cotton market was active yesterday and prices ruled lower, although showing a pretty steady tone at the decline. The close was steody at a net loss of 3@8 points. Sales for the day were estimated at 150,000 bales.

The opening was steady at a decline of 3@8 points, which was considered a little better than due on the showing of the English market for futures. Reports from central sections of the belt were that replanting would be necessary there as well as in the Eastern belt. One wire from Texas said that more replanting would be necessary than in the past fifty years. Estimated receipts at New Orleans for to-day were heavy, but exports for the day exceeded the port receipts by nearly 30,000 bales. Private cables from Liverpool attributed the decline there to American selling.

The range of contract prices in the local market was as follows:

	High.	Low.	Close.	Sat. Close.

NEW HAVEN'S LOAN A SUCCESS

Half Already Sold to French Bankers Who May Take the Balance.

Denial was given yesterday to the statement printed in The London Times that the New York, New Haven & Hartford foreign loan had proved a failure and that the French underwriting syndicate was not likely to take more than half of the issue of 145,000,000f of the 4 per cent. debentures. The facts in the matter as learned in authoritative quarters yesterday are that the entire issue was sold by the New Haven to Kuhn, Loeb & Co., who in turn sold half of the issue to the syndicate of French bankers, the latter reserving the privilege of buying the balance of the issue.

No public offering of the issue was made in Europe as had originally been planned, but the bonds were sold privately instead through circulars issued by the French bankers and their correspondents in other Continental countries. In this way there have already been placed the entire amount that the French bankers purchased in the first instance, and in addition Kuhn, Loeb & Co. have been called upon and are still being called upon for further allotments of the bonds. The belief was expreased in well-informed banking circles yesterday that there was no doubt that the entire issue would be taken up by the French bankers.

The public offering of the bonds in Europe was not made for the reason that the French bankers did not consider the time propitious for auch a public offering and the sale of the bonds privately was decided upon. The reaponse to this private offering of the bonds, it was said yesterday, more than met the expectations of the French bankers and of the road's bankers here.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 22.—President Mellen of the New Haven road, when the cable dispatch stating that the road was not succeeding in disposing of its large issue of bonds in France was ahown him, said he had no information on the subject, and that it was impossible for him to either confirm or to deny the

THE CANADIAN COMPANY

Controlling Water Power for Use in Towns and Mines of Cobalt.

This investment will bear the closest scrutiny. It has a foundation of absolute earning power. It is proposed to supply a demand for power which is in excess of the total possible supply. This is an unfailing source of revenue, the proceeds of which can be exactly computed, as the following schedule shows:—

The Company has obtained a concession from the Canadian government to install a power plant on the Montreal River, which will develop electric power and light for the towns and mines of the Cobalt district.

10,000 H. P.	is the maximum development.
5,000 H. P. PLANT BEGUN. CONTRACTS LET	The contract has been let for a plant developing 5,000 h. p., which in distribution under contracts will supply 7,000 h. p.
DEMAND FOR POWER	Over 7,000 steam h. p. is now in use at a cost of over 100% in excess of the power this Company will supply. Three towns also require light and power. The demand for the power which this Company will supply DOES NOT HAVE TO BE CREATED—IT ALREADY EXISTS. More than this, THE DEMAND IS URGENT AND INSISTENT. In commercial terms, there is a market eagerly waiting for the goods we can supply before the manufacture of them is begun.
INCOME	7,000 horse power, at $50 ..... $350,000 10% on the stock $150,000
SURPLUS	$200,000, less expenses of $50,000.
SUBSCRIBERS	Some of the best bank and trust company people of New York and Canada are connected with this enterprise.
UNDERWRITERS' SYNDICATE	To take 400,000 shares of stock, or any part, at 65 cents per share; par $1.00. This is the last of the issue. It is intended for small as well as large investors.
PAYMENTS	Easy, as disbursements are made only as work progresses. 25 per cent. cash, balance two, four, and six months. 10,000 shares cost $6,500. First payment cash, $1,625; second, third, and fourth payments each $1,625. 5,000 shares cost $3,250; first payment cash, $812.50; second, third, and fourth payments each $812.50. 1,000 shares cost $650; cash, $162.50; second, third, and fourth payments each $162.50. 500 shares cost $325; first payment, $81.25; second, third, and fourth payments each $81.25 200 shares cost $130; first payment each $32.50; second, third, and fourth payments each $32.50. 100 shares cost $65; first payment $16.25; second, third, and fourth paymente each $16.25.
MINE POWERS	All water power developments connected with mining operations bring big returns.
SURE RETURNS	A secure investment, with returns as large as most mines. Wealthy Canadians have made millions out of water powers.
THE ISSUED CAPITAL	Is limited to $1,500,000. $400,000 only is offered.

ICE TRUST MAY GO INTO COAL BUSINESS

Meeting of Shareholders Called to Act on Proposed Charter Changes.

LOSES MONEY IN WINTER

Under the New Plan Losses Would Be Overcome and Profit for Whole Year Assured.

Stockholders of the American Ice Securities Company, it was learned yesterday, have been notified by circulars issued under date of April 18 that a special meeting of the shareholders will be held at Camden, N. J., on April 29 to act on proposed changes in the company's charter. The portion of the charter which it is proposed to change is Section 3, in which the objects of the corporation are set forth in great detail.

The amendments which are to be acted upon cover so broad a field that some of the stockholders have been mystified by tha proposed changes. The officers of the company showed no disposition yesterday to throw much light on the company's purpose, at least not so far as details are concerned.

One of the officials said that the purpose of the changes was to broaden the company's powers so that it could raise money all the year around instead of during only six months of the year.

"We have been doing a Summer hotel business," he salo, "losing money six months out of the twelve. We propose to change this so that we can make money all tha year around. We have our organization and our teams and all that, and we propose to get some use out of them in Winter."

This suggested that at the bottom of the proposed changes was a desire to carry out the proposal advanced some time ago that the ice company in Winter become a coal and wood company. The officials of the company would not admit yesterday that this was the fact. They were not ready, they said, to discuss details.

One of the proposed clausea specifically provides, however, that the company shall hava tho right to deal in coal, wood, lumber, building material, and other merchandise in any way used in the construction of buildings.

One of tha clauses in the proposed amended charter empowers the American Ice Securities Company to acquire, hold, and operate steamships and other vessels, and to engage in the business of carriage of passengers or freight upon tha high seas or upon any other waters. This led to the suggestion yesterday that the motive in the changes in the ice company's charter was to be found in a plan on the part of C. W. Morse, who is largely interested in the American Ice Securities Company, to turn over his steamship interests to the ice company as a convenient holding company. Mr. Morse said that there was absolutely no basis for such a suggestion, and that the proposed changes had to do merely with technicalities, it having been found that under the terms of the original charter the company was restricted in the conduct of its business.

INCREASE IN LOANS.

Statistics Show Mortgage Conditions Much Better Than Last Year's.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

At a time when there is so much complaint about the difficulty of securing loans upon real estate security it seems worth while to call attention to the fact that up to date this year there has been lent on boad and mortgage in the three principal boroughs $39,000,000 more than in the corresponding period of last year, or, in round numbers, $198,000,000, as against $159,000,000, or over 31 per cent. more.

An inspection of the weekly analysis in The Record and Guide shows for the week ended Thursday loans amounting to $10,475,000, as against $9,008,000 in the corresponding week last year. Furthermore, this year's loans have been placed at a lower average rate of interest than last year's. $4,258,000 of last week's having been placed at 5 per cent. or less, as against $1,715,000 in the corresponding week last year. And again, the banks, trust, insurance, and title companies put out $2,745,500 last week, which is 60 per cent. more than they did in the corresponding week last year. Isn't it about time for the capers on adverse financial conditions to overhaul their literature on this subject and do a little expurgating? JOHN L. PARISH.

Where Quality Counts.

Can you name anything else under the sun in which quality counts for more than in New York Real Estate to-day?

You can pay too little for profitable investment, as well as too much—some forget that—for quality counts as well as price.

There's the natural quality—what Nature does for the place to begin with.

And there's developed quality—what superior improvements and protective restrictions insure to you, in establishing and maintaining its permanent high-grade character.

For residence is the ultimate purpose, whether you're to live there yourself or to make a profitable turn—the man who buys from you wants quality, too.

And he'll get it—you'll get it—at

SENATOR REYNOLDS'

where a naturally beautiful, healthful tract is being rapidly transformed, at a cost of a million dollars or more, into the handsomest, highest grade residential park in Queens Borough, with 20 miles of parked boulevards and avenues, concrete sidewalks and curbs, 12 blocks of public parks and gardens, hedge fences throughout, a $50,000 clubhouse and the best types of residential architecture.

Add to all this, accessibility—within city limits, just south of Jamaica, on three lines of transit, including the third rail system, directly affected by the vast schemes of transportation improvement now nearing completion, with a $15,000 station recently completed upon the property, a 30 minute running time to New York on opening of subway and tunnels, and in the direct line of most rapid upbuilding and enhancement of values.

And this is but part of the story To fully realize why Laurelton has been selling steadily right through this long, hard winter, with practically no advertising—why it appeals so strongly to both homeseeker and investor as the greatest value in all Greater New York to-day—you must see the property itself and learn all the particulars. Write at once for free railway fares, illustrated booklet, birdseye panorama and maps showing the elaborate scheme of improvements, together with prices and terms.

Right on the Sound
At Whitestone Landing.

In natural beauty and variety of attractions, this residential park has not its equal anywhere near New York. Sweeping views of Sound and woodland are commanded from every point.

HEALTHFULNESS IS INSURED BY ITS HIGH ELEVATION.

Its evolution into a high class and exclusive suburban colony is now in full progress. Houses ranging in cost from $6,000 to $15,000 are in course of construction, and will be finished in May.

The physical improvements of the property, for which we have spent over a quarter of a million dollars, are all but completed. They include sewer and water mains, electric light, graded streets with cement sidewalks, a sea wall along the shore front, and various ornamental landscape effects.

As for transportation conveniences—there are trains every half hour during the busy hours of the day, and the railroad station is right at the foot of the eminence on which this park is located.

REFEREES' NOTICES.

SUPREME COURT, COUNTY OF NEW YORK. —AARON M. JANPOLE and LOUIS WERNER, plaintiffs, against CHARLES MORRIS and TILLIE MORRIS, his wife; Simon Ruppin, Jennie Weill, John Weber, the name "John" being fictitious, &c., et al., defendants.

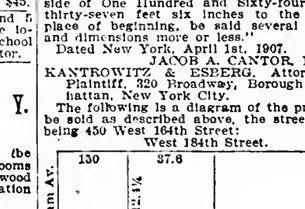
In pursuance of a judgment of foreclosure and sale duly made and entered in the above-entitled action, bearing date the 29th day of March, 1907, I, the undersigned, the referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction, at the New York Real Estate Salesroom, Nos. 14 and 16 Vesey Street, the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 24th day of April, 1907, at 12 o'clock noon on that day, by Samuel Goldsticker, Auctioneer, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold, and therein described as follows:

"All that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, with the building and improvements thereon erected, situate, lying, and being in the Borough of Manhattan, City and County of New York, bounded and described as follows:

"Beginning at a point on the southerly side of One Hundred and Sixty-fourth Street, distant one hundred and eighty-seven feet six inches easterly from the corner formed by the intersection of the southerly side of One Hundred and Sixty-fourth Street and the easterly side of Amsterdam Avenue, running thence easterly and parallel with the said One Hundred and Sixty-fourth Street one hundred and twelve feet four and one-quarter inches; running thence northerly and parallel with the easterly side of Amsterdam Avenue, one hundred and twelve feet four and one-quarter inches to the southerly side of One Hundred and Sixty-fourth Street, and thence westerly along the southerly side of One Hundred and Sixty-fourth Street, thirty-seven feet six inches to the point or place of beginning, be said several distances and dimensions more or less."

Dated New York, April 1st, 1907.
JACOB A. CANTOR, Referee.
KANTROWITZ & ESBERG, Attorneys for Plaintiffs, 320 Broadway, New York City, Borough of Manhattan.

The following is a diagram of the property to be sold as described above, the street number being 446 West 164th Street:



The approximate amount of the lien or charge to satisfy which the above-described property is to be sold is $35,179.46, with interest thereon from the 28th day of March, 1907, together with costs and allowance amounting to $231.40, with interest from March 28th, 1907, together with the expenses of the sale. The approximate amount of taxes, assessments, or other liens, which are to be allowed to the purchaser out of the purchase money or paid by the referee, is $180.29 for assessments and $45.00 for croton water, and interest. The premises will be sold subject to a prior mortgage in the sum of sixty-five hundred dollars, with interest thereon from November 1, 1906, at the rate of five and one-half per cent. per annum.

The premises will also be sold subject to covenants and restrictions against nuisances, if any; which covenants, however, shall not prohibit or interfere with the erection or maintenance of apartment houses or tenement houses, with or without stores. Also subject to monthly tenancies.

Dated New York, April 1st, 1907.

JEROME TO TEST SULLIVAN'S PULL

He Will Demand That Convicted Slugger Get a Heavier Sentence.

CASE UP TO JUDGE CRAIN

Tammany District Leader Interceded to Save Prisoner, Whose Record Is a Bad One.

District Attorney Jerome filed notice yesterday with the attorneys for Daniel Sullivan, upon whom Judge Crain in General Sessions on Friday first suspended sentence for robbery, and whom, after a protest from Mr. Jerome, he later sentenced to two months in the penitentiary, that he should appear before Judge Crain to-morrow and ask that the sentence be revoked on the ground that it is inadequate. Instead of two months, Sullivan might have received fifteen years' imprisonment for the crime.

In the notice filed yesterdey Mr. Jerome states that he shall ask that the sentence of two months be set nside, and that a sentence, adequate to the crime, considering the record and previous convictions of Sullivan, be pronounced.

Mr. Jerome's motion is based upon several affidavits, all having to do with previous assaults committed by Sullivan. Copies of these are attached to the notice. These affidavits throw considerable light upon Sullivan's record. This record shows that Sullivan was convicted of assault in 1901, and that sentence was suspended by Judge Newburger. The first of Mr. Jerome's affidavits has to do with this case. It is that of Harry Hyman of 314 East Ninth Street.

First Case Against Sullivan.

According to Hyman's affidavit, he, with John Whitman, Joseph Schwartz, two sisters named Selmer, and a Miss Hyman, now Mrs. Schwartz, visited Cosmopolitan Park, on Amsterdam Avenue, near 169th Street, to attend a picnic in August, 1901. His party were seated around a table in the park, Hyman states, when Sullivan and two companions approached. The men had a dog with them, and ordered it to jump upon the table. The dog did so. The hats of the women were upon the table, and Sullivan and his friends swept them off, and Sullivan and his friends from the park.

Hyman's party left the grounds about midnight, and Whitman was assaulted outside the grounds by Sullivan and had his skull fractured. Sullivan was indicted for the crime, but sentence was suspended.

In an affidavit signed by Policeman J. Oscar Goetz, the policeman swears that on Dec. 24, 1902, he was patroling Amsterdam Avenue. As he passed the saloon at No. 2,157 a man named Raffael Crispi rushed from the door. He was bleeding from the nose and mouth, and told Goetz that he had been assaulted in the saloon. The policeman went into the place, and Reffael pointed out Sullivan as the man who had struck him. Sullivan was fined $10.

An affidavit signed by David Short, a plumber, apparently refers to the time when Sullivan was discharged by Magistrate "Battery Dan" Finn, although accused of felonious assault. This was in 1906. According to Short's affidavit, he was in the saloon at 165th Street and Amsterdam Avenue on a day in June of that year. Sullivan was there and beat him so badly his skull was fractured.

Sullivan's present case grew out of an assault upon George Herrlinger, a brewery worker. Sullivan met him as he was leaving a saloon and assisted him home. In front of the house he struck him down and was robbing him when Mrs. Herrlinger opened the door. Sullivan struck her in the face, but before he could escape he was arrested.

Tammany Leader Interested.

When Sullivan was arraigned for sentence on Friday, James J. Hagan, formerly Warden of the Tombs and a Tammany district leader, was seated upon the bench with Judge Crain. Hagan had been one of the first to congratulate Judge Crain upon his elevation to the bench several months ago. Mr. Hagan was apparently satisfied with proceedings until Assistant District Attorney Appleton sent for Mr. Jerome after the suspension of sentence. Then, according to the Assistant, Mr. Hagan remarked that there was certainly no need of Jerome's presence.

Should the District Attorney's motion be denied to-morrow he can still demend that Sullivan be sentenced for the assault in 1901.

DOCTOR GOT THIEF AFTER LONG CHASE

Pursued Him Barefooted for Ten Blocks at 4:30 o'Clock in the Morning.

BURGLAR HAD AMMONIA GUN

Discharged It Twice at Dr. Camac, but Failed to Blind Him—Stole Four Gold Watches.

Barefooted, and wearing only a thin suit of pajamas and a light Spring overcoat, Dr. Charles N. B. Camac of 108 East Sixty-fifth Street, chased a burglar for nearly ten blocks yesterday morning, finally landing the culprit, who said he was John G. Gordon of Lynn, Mass., in the basement of an apartment house in Sixty-second Street, near Lexington Avenue. When Policeman John J. O'Brien of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station reached the basement where the physician was holding the burglar at bay, he found the burglar panting for breath and the doctor nursing a pair of very sore feet.

It was about 4:30 o'clock in the morning when Dr. Camac, who is a very light sleeper, heard steps on the stairs leading from the hallway to his room on the second floor. This is what ho saw: A masked man, with a jimmy in one hand and a dark lantern in the other, while out of the top pocket of his coat stuck the handle of what appeared to be a large revolver.

Thief Pulls Ammonia Gun.

Dr. Camac, who is not a nervous man, realized that he would have to keep his wits about him if he was to gain the mastery of his unwelcome visitor. The burglar was just as cool. The latter kept his eye on the doctor, and then quietly withdrew from his pocket the dangerous-looking weapon.

The sound of the discharge was like that which follows the release of the syphon in a seltzer bottle. The gun was of the ammonia type, and the little bulb had been filled. But the burglar, who had intended to blind the doctor, missed his aim. When he realized this he took to his heels and the physician, snatching up a Spring overcoat from the rack in the hallway, gave chase.

Into the street the burglar dashed with the barefooted physician only a few feet behind him. Up Sixty-fifth Street, in the direction of Park Avenue, the pair ran. At Park Avenue the burglar, who had reloaded his ammonia gun, vaulted into one of the little iron railing inclosed gardens that decorate the avenue above the New York Central tunnel.

A moment later Dr. Camac jumped over the iron railing, when the burglar suddenly turned on the physician and discharged for a second time the contents of the ammonia gun. Again the burglar missed fire. Over the railing into the avenue the burglar vaulted, with the barefooted doctor still in pursuit.

Doctor Corners Burglar.

At Sixty-third Street the burglar turned east and ran to Lexington Avenue, where he once more changed his course, this time going south on the avenue. At Sixty-second Street the burglar spied an open basement, and into this he jumped. The doctor began to yell for the police, all the time keeping his eye on the ammonia gun, which the burglar was trying to reload.

The doctor's shouts reached the ears of Policeman O'Brien, who a few moments later reached the basement. O'Brien gave the burglar a whack on the head with his billy, and then dragged him to the station house. When they searched the prisoner the police found on him four gold watches and several gold trinkets worth in the aggregate about $300, the dark lantern, and the ammonia gun. Later the prisoner was taken to Police Headquarters, where Capt. McCafferty's men identified him as Albert Wiggins, a man with a long police record.

In the Yorkville Court yesterday morning the prisoner said that he "just leaned against the Camac front door and it opened." He was held in $1,500 bail for examination this morning.

The doctor had his sore feet attended to at the Presbyterian Hospital.

NO RENT MONEY; NO CONCERT.

Man with $350 to Pay for Carnegie Hall for Benefit Didn't Arrive in Time.

The vocal and instrumental concert arranged for the benefit of the Italian disengaged chorus of the Metropolitan Opera House, most of the members of which have been without positions since the strike over a year ago, did not come off at Carnegie Hall last evening as announced. The artists were there, ready to sing; the orchestra was there, ready to play; and most of the members of the disengaged chorus were there, and the public was there in sufficiently large numbers to warrant the giving of the concert, but the man who had the $350 for the rent necessery to open Carnegie Hall did not put in an appearance until twenty minutes after eight, and then it was too late.

At 8:20 the management announced that there would be no concert, and offered to refund the money at the box-office. The lights in the hall had been lit, and everything was in readiness to proceed had the man with the money appeared in time.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The barometric conditions are much broken up to-night. Pressure has been falling over almost the entire country during the last twenty-four hours.

Winds along the New England end Middle Atlantic Coast will be fresh to brisk southwest; South Atlantic Coast, fresh and variable.

Steamers departing Tuesday for European ports will have fresh west winds and fair weather to the Grand Banks.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND WEDNESDAY.

Eastern New York and New England—Fair Tuesday; showers Tuesday night and Wednesday; fresh southwest winds.

New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, and Delaware—Rain in south, fair in north portions Tuesday. Wednesday, showers; fresh south winds.

	1906.	1907.		1906.	1907.
3 A. M.	55	43	4 P. M.	60	63
6 A. M.	50	42	6 P. M.	57	61

DROPS BUCK FROM THE ARMY.

Deserting Lieutenant's Name Stricken from Rolls by the President.

First Lieut. Louis F. Buck, Artillery Corps, U. S. A., who is a native of this city and was at one time a well-known officer of the Twenty-second Regiment, N. G. N. Y., has been dropped from the rolls of the army as a deserter. The order was made by President Roosevelt, who waited nearly two months after the desertion before directing it.

At the Twenty-second Regiment armory it was said yesterday afternoon that members of that organization had heard that the Lieutenant had got into trouble.

At the conclusion of the Spanish War Buck was one of the young officers selected by President McKinley from the volunteer organizations for a commission in the regular army. He was appointed as a Second Lieutenant and assigned to the Artillery Corps. Several months ago the Government sent him to the Artillery School at Fort Monroe, Va., where he was a First Lieutenant (student) at the time of his disappearance.

Buck has been missing nearly two months, and in all that time, so far as is known, none of his friends or former comrades in the National Guard has seen or heard of him. It is said that he is in debt, and that there are other charges against him under which he will be tried should he be found. All the regular army posts throughout the country have been notified of his desertion and are under instructions to arrest him should his presence be in the neighborhood of any post become known.

Buck is the second officer in the Department of the East to desert within a year. The other was Lieut. Hamilton, who was stationed at Governor's Island. He was found guilty of various infractions of the military regulations, and sentenced to prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

SEVEN ITALIANS HELD.

Seven Italians, who were rounded up in the Italian quarter at Johnson Avenue and Humboldt Street, Williamsburg, late on Sunday night by Capt. Murphy of the Stagg Street Station and his men, were arraigned yesterday in the Manhattan Avenue Court on a charge of carrying concealed wapons. Several had revolvers, daggers, and stilettos.

Magistrate O'Reiley held each in $500 bail for a hearing.

FLOAT AND FERRYBOAT BUMP.

The Montauk Loses Guard Rail and Her Passengers Get a Scare.

The ferryboat Montauk of the Hamilton Avenue Line, running from Hamilton Avenue, Brooklyn, to the Battery, collided with a car float of the New Haven Road which was being towed up the Buttermilk Channel at 1:30 P. M. yesterday afternoon. The vessels came together just off the Brooklyn slip of the ferryboat. The accident was the result of a misunderstanding of signals and the strength of the tide. There were about 140 passengers on the ferryboat, as well as fourteen trucks.

The Montauk struck the float bow on, and with a shock that threw several horses from their feet and caused considerable excitement among her passengers.

The guard rail and some of her superstructure was smashed, but she was not seriously damaged below the water line, and proceeded into her slip without assistance.

BIG WAVE SWEEPS LINER.

Doctor and Chief Engineer of the Prinz August Wilhelm Injured.

Between storms and burglars the steamer Prinz August Wilhelm had a very exciting round trip to Kingston and return. The voyage ended here yesterday.

On the outward passage, when in a howling norther, the vessel was boarded by a wave of great height which swept her decks from stem to stern. Doors were stove in and saloon and staterooms flooded. The doctor and the chief engineer were thrown against a partition and sustained injuries which necessitated a stay in the ship's hospital.

During the return voyage thieves gained an entrance to the officers' quarters and carried away many trinkets and a quantity of jewelry. When the vessel reached her pier Detectives Moody, Leeson, and Aikmen searched the ship, but without result. The thief is supposed to be one of the crew.

PATRONAGE CLUB IS GIVEN TO TAFT

Roosevelt Makes Known That Ohio Federal Office Holders Should Beware.

SANDERS IS AN EXAMPLE

Burton to be on the Fighting Line of Taft Forces—Secretary in the Background.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Secretary Taft will not join in any scramble for the Ohio delegation, will not make any political speeches there, and will sail for the Philippines on Sept. 1, according to his original schedule. Theodore F. Burton will represent him in Ohio, and will camp on Foraker's trail and make a speech wherever Foraker does. Taft's interests will be thoroughly looked after.

President Roosevelt, meanwhile, plans to aid Taft and Burton in Ohio just as he plans to aid Hughes in New York, by throwing the Federal offices to their supportere. This is the most terrific blow that could be landed on the solar plexus of such leaders as Foraker and Dick. The sentiment of their State is for Taft, and what strength Dick has in opposing the Administration rests on the power of patronage. This power the President has set in to take away from him.

President Roosevelt has called on Taft and Burton to fill the last Ohio vacancy in Federal offices, the Toledo Collectorship of Internal Revenue, held by George F. Waldorf. This is the more significant because the Senators have indorsed Gen. W. W. Macken for this job. There is small likelihood that this National Guard General will be the choice of Taft and Burton. The leading candidate from their standpoint at this time is C. Locke Curtis, a Toledo newspaper man and a reform Republican, although they have reached no final decision.

Already President Roosevelt has followed the recommendations of Taft and Burton in appointing a Federal Judge, when the Senators had another candidate. His appointment of Ralph Tyler as Auditor for the Navy Department was a frank effort to counterbalance with the colored voters Foraker's Brownsville performance. In short, all the political strength that may lie in Federal patronage is at the disposal of Taft and Burton in their fight with the Senators.

More than that, Federal office holders in Ohio will do well to avoid all communications with the Senatorial camp if they desire to hold their jobs. What happened to Archie Sanders, Internal Revenue Collector, and a Wadsworth lieutenant in New York, may happen to Federal office holders in Ohio. His resignation, it will be remembered, was demanded on short notice.

A squeal may be expected against this new ferocious use of Federal patronage, but the innocent bystander will grin as he remembers how deftly Dick, Foraker, and their predecessors at the head of Ohio's Republican machine have used Federal patronage to reward friends and punish enemies in the days when they controlled its disbursements.

If any evidence was lacking as to whom President Roosevelt had picked for a favorite in Ohio, this latest move will probably supply the deficiency.

Regrets Actions of Labor Men.

Burton is to be the figure on whom all eyes will have to be trained during the fight that is now to begin. He is to Taft what Taft is to Roosevelt. He, and not Taft, will be the active head of the Administration forces in the actual fighting. He will make an aggressive fight, not a defensive one. Foraker and Dick have been in Ohio now long enough to find out the sentiment of their State and to discover against what tremendous odds they will have to labor, and it has not escaped attention that since they got out there all the confident predictions which issued from their headquarters in Washington have ceased. Everything that has come from them has been extremely non-committal and not at all truculent. Burton is aware that the winning cards are on the Taft side of the table; that the Senators, and not Taft, are on the defensive, and he intends so to force the fighting that the whole country shall see this as plainly as everybody sees it in Ohio.

Mr. Burton is not disposed to let the Senators forget that Foraker challenged the Taft forces to a decision by open primary. When Mr. Burton began to catch up to-day with the newspapers he was deprived of during his trip he remarked that Senator Foraker did not seem to have pressed his challenge for an open primary since his first issue of it, and especially since his Canton speech.

Mr. Burton will insist that Foraker be taken at his word and will hold to his proposal. He will remind Foraker of this primary proposition at frequent intervals until the senior Ohio Senator sees fit to call the State Central Committee together and take practical steps toward securing the primary he has requested. Mr. Burton believes this primary should be held as soon as possible and certainly on or before the municipal elections in November.

Mr. Burton will deliver an address to Republican clubs at Trenton, N. J., Friday evening of this week, which will be the opening gun on the Taft side for this campaign. He had accepted this invitation before he left on his trip South, and he will now take advantage of the occasion to make some pertinent comments on recent political developments. Since this Trenton speech is to be delivered away from home it will not have as close a local application as it would if made in Ohio, but Senator Foraker will have no difficulty in recognizing it as aimed at him.

Taft Still Silent.

In the statement Mr. Burton will soon issue the Cleveland man will cover the purely local questions which he cannot take up in his remarks at Trenton. Mr. Burton will go to Cleveland about May 4, when he will take up the fight in Ohio in earnest.

Secretary Taft to-day preserved the attitude of dignified silence which he is determined to follow. He was besieged by correspondents at every turn, but he declined to discuss politics. He would talk freely about Panama or Cuba or Porto Rico, but Washington declined to get interested in these. The Secretary laughed away all other questions. He had a conference over the long-distance telephone to-night with his brother, Charles P. Taft, and it has developed to-day that the single criticism the Secretary has ready for his family campaign manager is directed against the Charles P. Taft statement making the Secretary a Senatorial candidate.

Secretary Taft is a candidate for but one office, and he does not care to figure, even for strategical purposes, as a candidate for the Senate. The Secretary announced to-day that he would make speeches at the Universities of Iowa and Minnesota before he goes to the Philippines. The college speechs in the West will not be of a political nature, the Secretary said.

$1,000,000 GIFT TO NEGROES.

Miss Anna T. Jeanes, a Quaker, Benefits Southern Elementary Schools.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 23.—Miss Anna T. Jeanes of this city, by deed of gift executed last Monday, created an endowment fund of $1,000,000 in perpetuity, the income from which is to be applied toward the maintenance and assistance of elementary schools for negroes in the Southern States. It is said to be by far the largest single gift for public elementary school purposes ever donated by any philanthropist in this country.

Booker T. Washington, President of Tuskegee Institute, and Hollis Burke Frissell of Hampton Institute are appointed trustees of the fund, while the Pennsylvania Company for Insurance on Lives and Granting Annuities of this city is appointed the fiscal agent of the trustees.

Miss Jeanes provides also for the investment of the fund as follows: In United States Government bonds or the bonds of the States of Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, Alabama, Virginia, Maryland, and Missouri, and of any city in those States having a population of 500,000 or more inhabitants.

To Mr. Washington and Dr. Frissell is left the work of selecting a Board of Trustees to help in the administration of the fund, but if either of those foundation Trustees dies or declines to serve, or if for any other reason such board is not established within six months, then the Trustees of Hampton and of Tuskegee are requested and empowered to select and create from members of their own Boards of Trustees to administer the fund in the manner directed in the deed of gift.

Miss Jeanes, who is more than 80 years of age, is the last member of an old Quaker family. She is a daughter of Isaac Jeanes, a merchant. Her home is in Germantown. In 1903 she built a home at a cost of $200,000 and endowed it with $300,000 for aged Hicksite Friends at Washington Lane and Green Street, Germantown.

GEN. ROE IS OVERRULED.

Governor Orders National Guard to Drill with United States Troops.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 23.—Major Gen. Roe, Commander in Chief of the National Guard in this State, was overruled by Gov. Hughes to-day. An order was issued accepting the invitation extended by the Secretary of War for the detail of some National Guard regiments from this State to co-operate with the regulars in testing the effectiveness of the coast defense plans formulated by the Chief of Artillery of the United States Army.

The order designates for the service the Seventh Regiment, the Thirteenth Regiment, Coast Artillery; the Eighth Infantry Battalion, and two companies of the Forty-seventh Regiment.

It was learned here to-day that when the invitation was first issued from the War Department by Assistant Secretary of War Oliver, Major Gen. Roe, after talking the matter over with some officers of the National Guard, recommended that the invitation be not accepted.

One of the chief objections was that the Seventh Regiment and other National Guard contingents assigned to the coast defense tests would not be in position to retain their organization while engaged in the work. The coast defense test would necessitate the splitting up of a regiment into small contingents for distribution at various points along the coast to work with the regular troops. It was recalled to-day that at the time of the Spanish war the Seventh Regiment declined to go to the front on this very ground.

The Governor's action followed the letter of Assistant Secretary of War Oliver, deprecating the alleged reluctance of certain National Guard officers on the subject of co-operation with the regular army in such exercises. It was the topic of much comment here to-night. It gave rise to much speculation as to what fate the future would hold for Major Gen. Roe. The conduct of Gen. Roe in connection with the case of Capt. Wendel, whose application for dismissal he was in favor of granting without inquiry regarding criminal charges against him, was disapproved by the Governor, who took no pains to show that he regarded it a most startling departure from the ordinary procedure in an instance of that kind.

It was the Wendel case which directly led to the introduction of the Wainwright bill, providing for a general investigation of the National Guard administration. The Governor is said to be aware that heavy pressure was brought to bear from National Guard quarters to prevent the passage of this measure. Nevertheless it passed both houses.

ULTIMATUM BY THE PILOTS.

More Money or a Strike on May 1—Two Companies Avoid Trouble.

It was announced yesterday by the officers of the American Association of Masters, Mates, and Pilots that there will be no strike of first, second, and third officers of the Brunswick and Bull steamship lines, as negotiations with these companies for a settlement were started yesterday.

The National President of the association, John C. Silva of Boston, and General Manager Luther B. Dow of the union had a conference yesterday. Capt. Dow said afterward:

"There will be a general walk-out on May 1 of the first, second, and third officers on the boats of all the lines which have not settled up to that time. Either the advance asked for must be granted by that time or the men will quit. There will be no strike on the boats of the Brunswick and Bull lines, as they will settle. The other lines have had fair notice. I can hardly believe, in view of the moderation of the requests, that they will face a strike."

President Silva said that a strike at prcsent would be serious for the companies, as there are vessels coming to port for many weeks ahead with heavy cargoes of fruit and market truck. In three days there would be a big blockade.

The State Board of Mediation and Arbitration, which is a part of the Labor Department, took a hand in the matter yesterday. John J. Bealin, the New York agent of the bonrd, called on Capt. Dow and offered the services of the board as an intermediary in case of trouble. His offer was accepted.

JAMES EADS HOW EXPELLED.

Driven from the Welfare Association, Which He Founded.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, April 23.—James Eads How, Socialist and philanthropist, and heir of James B. Eads, builder of the Eads Bridge here, has been expelled from the Welfare Association, which he founded and to which he gave a fortune to uplift the proletariat.

Gen. Fry, who led Coxey's Army to Washington, led in the movement to expel him.

ONLY ONE SENATOR FOR RHODE ISLAND

Legislature Adjourns with Deadlock Unbroken Despite Pressure on Republicans.

SINGLE VOTE IS CHANGED

Colt Gets 39 Votes Finally—Wetmore Men Wear Red Carnations and Goddard Men Red Roses.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, April 23.—Despite the pressure brought to bear by the Republican organization, the Rhode Island Legislature adjourned this evening without having elected a Senator to succeed George Peabody Wetmore. Only one vote was changed by the final efforts of the party leaders, and on the eighty-first and last ballot the vote stood: Col. R. H. I. Goddard, Providence, (Democrat,) 41; Col. Samuel Pomeroy Colt, Bristol, (Republican,) 39; George Peabody Wetmore, Newport, (Reupblican,) 30. Thus until the Legislature meets next January Rhode Island will have only Senator Aldrich in the upper house of Congress.

The contest was the most protracted and stubbornly fought in the political history of the State. The last notable struggle for the Senatorship in Rhode Island was in 1875, when Gen. Ambrose E. Burnside of civil war fame was elected on the twenty-eighth ballot.

The joint assembly was in session today from noon until 6:30 P. M., except for a brief recess for luncheon. In this sitting twenty-five ballots were taken.

Intense interest was shown in the closing proceedings by citizens, and all the afternoon the passageways at the State House were thronged with spectators. They were anxious to see what effect yesterday's resolution of the majority of the Executive Committee of the Republican State Committee would have on the supporters of ex-Senator Wetmore, who were urged to support Col. Colt, the majority candidate.

When the first ballot of the day—the fifty-seventh—was taken, Representative Hoxie of Charlestown, who had been a Wetmore supporter, changed and voted for Colt. Mr. Hoxie said after the ballot that the future of the Republican Party in Rhode Island was at stake, and that in the interests of party harmony he cast his vote for Colt.

This was the only change of the day. After the sixty-seventh and sixty-eighth ballots had been taken with no changes a recess until 3 o'clock was voted.

After recees tho Wetmore men came in wearing red carnations, and the Goddard supporters had white roses in their buttonholes, while the Colt men were not decorated. After the seventy-second ballot had been taken, with the same result as the sixty-ninth, Senator Gardner of Providence objected to more voting, declaring that it was only child's play. His motion to adjourn was defeated.

When the seventy-sixth ballot showed no change, Representative Burlingame of Newport moved that unless an agreement should be reached by 6:30 o'clock the Assembly adjourn. This motion prevailed. Five more ballots were taken, and the session ended.

In the last half hour of the joint session many of the members went to the anterooms and were slow in responding to their names. The closing scenes included a demonstration by the Democratic members who had voted for Col. Goddard since the first ballot was taken last January.

Although Gen. Charles R. Brayton, the Republican National Committeeman from this State, was one of the members of the Executive Committee of the State Committee who signed the appeal to the Wetmore supporters, it is not known that he was active during the day in Col. Colt's behalf. He was in a room at the State House all the afternoon.

At the conclusion of the balloting both houses held separate sessions and completed unfinished routine business before adjourning finally.

H. H. ROGERS GOING CRUISING.

But Not to Europe and Only When Spring Behaves Decently.

Wall Street heard yesterday that H. H. Rogers is about to take a long vacation, which, according to the story, is to be largely spent abroad. The fact that his big ocean-going yacht, the Kanawha, is being put into commission was taken as confirmation downtown of the rumor, which went so far as to say that Mr. Rogers would make his start on or about May 8, and that the Kanawha would take him abroad.

In denying the story, Mr. Rogers was a little less specific than is his custom. When asked if he was about to take a long vacation, he laughed.

"I wish I were," said Mr. Rogers.

He added, however, that he was going cruising on the Kanawha as soon as we had a proper brand of Spring weather, but, as for going to Europe, he wouldn't go on the Kanawha even if he did intend to go. His cruise when the weather clears was not going to be an extended one. It would be confined to American waters.

FATHER ARRESTS HIS SON.

Takes Boy to Station for Punishment for Turning in False Alarm.

Believing that his son should be punished for turning in a false fire alarm, George F. Blake of 205 West Sixty-seventh Street, after he had heard the story of the police, questioned his ten-year-old son, George, last night, and after getting a confession took the boy to the West Sixty-eighth Street Station, where he had a charge of malicious mischief entered against him.

On last Friday afternoon a false alarm was turned in from Seventh-fifth Street and Amsterdam Avenue. It was at the time that the school children from the public school in West Seventy-seventh Street were getting out. Policeman Bolton investigated, and decided that the Blake boy was guilty. Then he told the boy's mother.

When Mr. Blake took the boy to the station house last night he said to the Lieutenant at the desk:

"Here is my son; he has confessed to me and he should be punished."

The boy was released on bail furnished by his father. He will be arraigned in the Children's Court to-day.

LONDON, April 23.—The condition of Col. John Caldwell Calhoun of New York, who has been ill for a fortnight at the Carlton Hotel, is such that his wife and son have been summoned here by cable. Mrs. Calhoun sailed from New York on Saturday, and their son sails in a few days.

Sir Francis Laking, the King's physician, who is attending Col. Calhoun, said to-day that the patient was progressing favorably. The exact nature of his malady has not been disclosed, but it is known that Col Calhoun has been delirious for a portion of the time he has been ill.

ROUVIER GIVES UP HIS PAPER.

Will Not Found a Financial Daily—Our Securities in Better Esteem.

Special Cablegram.

PARIS, April 23.—Maurice Rouvier, former Minister of Finance, has abandoned the plan to found in Paris a daily paper specially designed to treat of financial news and questions from an independent standpoint. Negotiations to that end have been dropped for the present at least.

In the course of conversation M. Rouvier said there was a much better feeling in France in regard to American securities, and tho Bourse to-day closely reflected the improved conditions in New York. The inquietude which reports of American railroads being in need of five milliards had aroused was diminishing, but was not yet dissipated.

With regard to the general financial situation M. Rouvier said he fully agreed with the view expressed in THE NEW YORK TIMES leader of April 12, that "the world is suffering from that absorption of liquid capital which is characteristic of great prosperity." The only point on which he might join issue was the railway situation, apart from which America was in an excellent financial posture as regarded Europe. So long as the United States could furnish the Old World with a magnificent supply of wheat and cotton annually it need fear no financial pressure as a debtor Nation.

MAINTENON IS RETIRED.

PARIS, April 23.—W. K. Vanderbilt has decided to send Maintenon to the stud as the result of a strained tendon.

This closes the raeing career of the famous horse, which, bought as a yearling for 23,100 francs, won for his owner nearly a million francs in stakes alone, or exactly 908,525 francs.

The breakdown of Maintenon practically destroys the plans of Mr. Vanderbilt for what was to have been his most extensive turf enterprise in England, Mr. Vanderbilt having named Maintenon for the Ascot Gold Cup, to be run in June, with the hope to bring about another meeting between his great horse and the English Derby winner Spearmint, which horse beat Maintenon in the Grand Prix de Paris of last season.

Maintenon and Prestige, both in Mr. Vanderbilt's stable, were the great horses of their age in France last season, and this season Maintenon gave every evidence of having improved in proportion to his age. He has been a winner already this season on two occasions, his last victory having been earned with 137 pounds up, in easy style, for the Eugene Aram Prize, over a course of one mile and a quarter.

BERLIN, April 23.—Now that the Economic Committee, which acts in an advisory capacity to the Government in tariff matters, has accepted the provisional arrangement with the United States, Government circles here expect that the Reichstag will readily assent to the step taken.

The officials, however, say that no party in the Reichstag will vote for the agreement with any degree of enthusiasm. They will all agree to it on the ground that it will be a choice of the lesser evil, as no party in Parliament is willing to take the responsibility of inaugurating a tariff war with the United States.

INVENTOR HAMMOND IS HELD AS INSANE

Typewriter Manufacturer Said to Have Been Wasting His Large Fortune.

SIDEWALK COURT SESSION

Magistrate Stands in Rain to Commit Wealthy Man to Bellevue for Examination.

James Bartlett Hammond, inventor of one of the first practical typewriters and President of the Hammond Typewriter Company, was committed to the psychopathic ward at Bellevue yesterday by Magistrate Walsh of the West Side Court for observation as to his sanity.

The warrant for Mr. Hammond's arrest was issued on Monday by Magistrate Walsh, and charges him with talking incoherently in the Cumberland Hotel on April 22 and with being a victim of insane delusions. Accompanying the warrant were two affidavits prepared by John Holden, a lawyer, of 141 Broadway.

The Charges.

The first affidavit, signed by Thomas F. Hammond of 157 Sickles Avenue, New Rochelle, a brother of the prisoner, read as follows:

I am the brother of James Bartlett Hammond, and have been associated with him for many years. During the past year he has used daily to excess drugs and alcoholic stimulants. At the present time he is a mental and physical wreck, and is a victim of locomotor ataxia in a very bad form. At present he is a menace to the public because of the delusions he is a victim of, and his total incapacity to look out for his own interests in the slightest degree. He has a large estate which is being gradually dissipated, and the possession of which deponent believes designing people are trying to get by dishonest methods and without any consideration for same.

The other affidavit, signed by Albert Bryce, manager of the Hammond Typewriter Company, reads:

For many years, and especially during the past year, I have attended to the private affairs and living arrangements of James Bartlett Hammond. During that time he gave but little attention to business and appeared at the office infrequently and was unable to understand business matters. He often suggested putting a padlock on the factory and closing it, as he didn't care to discuss business. He was drunk at least once every day during the past year, and used drugs, especially antipyrine in enormous quantities. He is subject to delusions of all kinds, and particularly that he is pursued by detectives and that there are schemes under foot of depriving him of his property and liberty.

During this period he has been refused accommodation at several hotels in this city because of his offensive conduct and habits; that last December he was placed in a sanitarium in Yonkers, but the proprietor refused to keep him there, saying that he was a lunatic and should be in an insane asylum.

The said Hammond is in receipt of a large income, and has in his possession a large amount of cash and negotiable securities. The money he is spending on unworthy and disreputable persons, and there is great danger that unless he is placed under restraint his entire fortune will be dissipated or fall into other hands by dishonest methods. That this day the proprietor of the Cumberland said he was out of his head and ought to be taken into custody to protect him against himself and others.

The warrant was given to a private detective who was employed by Thomas F. Hammond, and served by him early yesterday afternoon on Mr. Hammond at the Cumberland Hotel, his place of residence. Detective Birmingham led Mr. Hammond to a cab which was in waiting, and they then drove to the West Side Court. Following in another cab was Thomas F. Hammond and Mr. Bryce.

When the two cags reached the Court House they were met by another cab in which sat Dr. Carlos F. Macdonald and Dr. William B. Coley, two alienists.

Court Session on the Sidewalk.

Word was sent to Magistrate Walsh that it would be very difficult to get the alleged insane man out of the carriage and into the courtroom, so the Magistrate, accompanied by the Court Clerk, the stenographer, and several court officers, adjourned to the sidewalk, where he held an extempore court.

Rain was falling, but this did not prevent a large crowd from gathering to see the unique epectacle of a Magistrate holding an open-air session with the prisoner seated in a cab.

The Magistrate stood at the open door of the cab and the witnesses gathered in a semicircle behind him.

"Are you Mr. Hammond?" asked Magistrate Walsh of the old man in the cab.

"I am," said the inventor with a smile.

"How do you feel?" continued the court.

"They say I am not well," and the smile broadened.

"Take the minutes," said the Magistrate, addressing Mr. Davis, the court stenographer.

The prisoner's brother was sworn. He testified that the inventor was insane, that he was an habitual drunkard, a user of drugs, and a man who squandered his money on disreputable persons.

Mr. Bryce was the next witness. He swore to the same facts, adding that when he presented important documents to the President of the company for his consideration he would be greeted with: "I wish I was in Dixie," "Paddle your own canoe," or some similar song.

"Often," continued the witness, "when I would urge Mr. Hammond to read the documents, he would threaten to put a padlock on the factory and close it. He imagined his employes were trying to get his property from him."

"Next witness," said the Magistrate.

Dr. Carlos F. MacDonald was sworn, and testified that from a casual examination of the prisoner he believed him to be insane. Dr. Coley, also an expert on insanity, with an office at 5 Park Avenue, gave similar testimony.

"You are committed to Bellevue for examination," said the court to the man in the cab.

The inventor only smiled.

Magistrate Walsh then handed a commitment paper to Court Officer Birmingham. The policeman jumped on the cab alongside the driver.

"Make way!" cried the court officers, opening up a lane through the large crowd. The drivers whipped up their horses and the three cabs clattered down the street and around the corner. Magistrate Walsh then readjourned court to the official courtroom upstairs.

The Inventor's Career.

Mr. Hammond was born in Boston on April 23, 1830, the son of Thomas and Harriet W. Hammond. He was graduated from the University of Vermont in 1851, and later attended Union Theological Seminary and studied philosophy and science at the University of Halle, Germany.

During the civil war he was a correspondent for The New York Tribune; at the close of the war he devoted many years to mechanical experiments, and patented in 1880 a typewriting machine, made on scientific principles. He introduced the ideal keyboard and true alignment in the machine that bears his name. The machine was put on the market in 1884.

VINTAGE CHAMPAGNES.

Non-vintage champagnes are blends of various vintages of no special merit. Vintage Champagne is produced entirely from grapes grown in an exceptionally good year, which year is invariably indicated on the label. The Vintage of 1898 was one of the best in recent years; hence Monopole 1898 and Dry Monopole 1898 are sold at a premium in all other markets of the world. In the United States this excellent vintage: Monopole Red Top 1898, "modsrately dry." Dry Monopole Brut 1898, "very dry," is now sold at non-vintage prices for the purpose of making this brand of wine a favorite.—Adv.

WILD BOAR HUNT FOR GATES.

John W. and His Son Lease a Game Preserve in France.

John W. Gates and his son, C. G. Gates, who is the head of the Stock Exchange house of C. G. Gates & Co., intend to have a try this Summer on their annual trip abroad at wild boar hunting. To trip abroad at wild boar hunting on the Continent. To this end they have leased a shooting box in the Province of Savoie, France.

In Wall Street yesterday the size of the preserve was variously reported between 7,000 and 100,000 acres. Savoie is on the Italian border, and its mountains are the wildest part of the republic. Wild boar is the principal game, but tradition has it that some of the old wolves of mediaeval France are occasionally heard from.

BAN ON RACE TIPSTERS.

Fraud Order Issued Against "Sure-Thing" Men at Gravesend.

The postal authorities in Brooklyn and Manhattan are investigating advertisers who offer to give "sure-thing" tips on the races for a consideration. Yesterday a fraud order forbidding him the use of the mails was issued against a tipster who livee near the Gravesend race track.

This man advertised in several newspapers that he was in a position to sell "inside stable information." Chief Inspector Mayer sent one of his men to see the tipster. The man was unable to tell from whom he received his alleged information, and his case was reported to Washington. Other supposed fake racing tipsters are being investigated.

SHOT TO AVENGE DAUGHTER.

Ex-Judge Loving, Thomas F. Ryan's Superintendent, Explains Killing.

Special to The New York Times.

LYNCHBURG, Va., April 23.—Ex-Judge W. G. Loving, who late yesterday afternoon shot and killed Theodore Estes at Oak Ridge, the country estate of Thomas F. Ryan, was to-day admitted to $5,000 bail. Loving, who is superintendent of the Ryan estate, was told by his daughter that Estes had assaulted her. He drove eight miles before locating the young man, and then killed him with a double-barreled shotgun.

Commissioner Payne, who allowed Judge Loving's bail, made this statement:

"Judge Loving learned that Estes had taken his daughter riding Sunday night, and had brought the girl back home drugged and unconscious. Judge Loving waited until he could get the full story from the girl's lips, and then he took his gun and went in search of Estes."

Judge Loving said: "When I heard the story from the lips of my dear one I was insane. I waited to learn all the facts, and then nothing in God's or man's power could have stopped me from taking his life. I did it after careful consideration."

Barry Snead, a brother-in-law of Judge Loving, learned of Loving's intention and made a desperate effort to stop him. He reached Oak Ridge three minutes after the shooting.

YALE APPLAUSE TOO WARM.

Students Warned Not to Break More Glasses and Furniture.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 23.—In the last month an orchestra has played for Yale men at the evening meal at the Yale dining hall. So enthusiastic have the students been that they have broken hundreds of dollars' worth of furniture and glassware in showing their approval.

The dining hall management finally took the matter up with the college authorities and each student has received a notice to "hereafter confine their applause to handclapping and yelling."

FISHING CRAFT WRECKED.

Schooner C. W. Parker Breaking Up on the Jersey Coast—Crew Saved.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 23.—The fishing schooner Charles W. Parker, Capt. Walter Lawson, and eleven men went ashore on the Inlet bar late this afternoon, and is a total wreck. The heavy seas which were running sent the vessel over on her beam end and she started to break up before the life savers could reach her.

Capt. Lawson and his men took to their dories and fought their way through the heavy surf to the shore. All were saved, and the only life lost was that of the craft's mascot, a black dog, which was washed overboard and drowned while the men in the dories were trying to rescue it. The vessel was just starting on a fishing cruise.

SAYVILLE, L. I., April 23.—Flags are flying at half-mast at the country seat at Oakdale of Commodore Frederick G. Bourne, former President of the Singer Manufacturing Company, and director of many other companies, because of the death of his aged mother.

The Bournes started sometime ago on an eight months' tour of Europe. Answering cablegrams, Mr. Bourne, Sr., said he would return at once. Except for that there will be no break in the extensive touring plan of the Bournes abroad.

CURFEW LAW FOR PLAINFIELD

Children Under 14 Must Stay Off the Streets There at Night.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., April 23.—Mayor Charles J. Fisk issued a sweeping order to the police to-day ordering that all children under 14 years of age be kept off the streets after 8 o'clock at night when unaccompanied by their parents.

The order transmitted to Chief of Police Kelly instructed him to announce to his men at roll call that wherever a child of tender age was found in the street after that hour, the policeman should tell the child to go home, and in the event of a refueal to take the little one to its parents.

ROOSEVELT REPLIES TO LABOR ATTACKS

Declares That He Was Right in Denouncing Moyer and Haywood.

A SQUARE DEAL DEFINED

Union Men Sharply Criticised for Trying to Influence the Course of Justice in These Cases.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—In a letter addressed to Honoré Jaxon of Chicago, Chairman of the "Cook County Moyer-Haywood Conference," made public today, President Roosevelt replied to the criticisms by labor unions of his letter to Representative Sherman in which he referred to Moyer and Haywood, officials of the Western Federation of Miners, charged with implication in the murder of ex-Gov. Steunenberg of Idabo, as "undesirable citizens."

Mr. Roosevelt's reference was made to a conversation which Representative Sherman had with E. H. Harriman, in which the latter is alleged to have said that whenever he wanted legislation from a State Legislature he could buy it; that he could buy Congress, and that, if necessary, he could buy the judiciary. The President's comment was:

This was doubtless said partly in boastful cynicism and partly in a mere burst of bad temper because of his objection to the Inter-State Commerce law and to my actions as President. But it shows a cynicism and deep-seated corruption which the man uttering such sentiments and boasting, no matter how falsely, of his powers to perform such crimes, at least as an undesirable a citizen as Debs, or Moyer, or Haywood.

Mr. Roosevelt's letter to Mr. Jaxon reads:

"April 22, 1907.

"Dear Sir: I have received your letter of the 19th inst., in which you inclose the draft of the formal letter which is to follow. I have been notified that several delegations bearing similar requests are on the way hither. In the letter you, on behalf of the Cook County Moyer-Haywood conference, protest against certain language I used in a recent letter which you assert to be designed to influence the course of justice in the case of the trial for murder of Messrs. Moyer and Haywood.

Regrets Action of Labor Men.

"I entirely agree with you that it is improper to endeavor to influence the course of justice, whether by threats or in any similar manner. For this reason I have regretted most deeply the action of such organizations as your own in undertaking to accomplish this very result in the very case of which you speak. For instance, your letter is headed: 'Cook County Moyer-Haywood-Pettibone Conference,' with the headlines 'Death Cannot, Will Not, and Shall Not Claim Our Brothers.'

"This shows that you and your associates are not demanding a fair trial, or working for a fair trial, but are announcing in advance that the verdict shall only be one way, and that you will not tolerate any other verdict. Such action is flagrant in its impropriety, and I join heartily in condemning it.

"But it is a simple absurdity to suppose that because any man is on trial for a given offense he is therefore to be freed from all criticisms upon his general conduct and manner of life. In my letter to which you object, I referred to a certain prominent financier, Mr. Harriman, on the one hand, and to Messrs. Moyer, Haywood, and Debs on the other as being equally undesirable citizens. It is as foolish to assert that this was designed to influence the trial of Moyer and Haywood as to assert that it was designed to influence the suits that have been brought against Mr. Harriman. I neither expressed nor indicated any opinion as to whether Messrs. Moyer and Haywood were guilty of the murder of Gov. Steunenberg. If they are guilty they certainly ought to be punished. If they are not guilty they certainly ought not to be punished.

Incitements to Violence.

"But no possible outcome either of the trial or the suits can affect my judgment as to the undesirability of the type of citizenship of those whom I mentioned. Messrs. Moyer, Haywood, and Debs stand as representatives of those men who have done as much to discredit the labor movement as the worst speculative financiers or most unscrupulous employers of labor and debauchers of Legislatures have done to discredit honest capitalists and fair-dealing business men.

"They stand as the representatives of these men, who by their public utterances and manifestoes, by the utterances of the papers they control or inspire, and by the words and deeds of those associated with or subordinated to them, habitually appear as guilty of incitement to or apology for bloodshed and violence.

"If this does not constitute undesirable citizenship, then there can never be any undesirable citizens. The men whom I denounce represent the men who have abandened that legitimate movement for the uplifting of labor with which I have the most hearty sympathy; they have adopted practices which cut them off from those who lead this legitimate movement. In every way I shall support the law-abiding and upright representatives of labor, and in no way can I better support them than by drawing the sharpest possible line between them on the one hand and, on the other hand, those preachers of violence who are themselves the worst foes of the honest laboring man.

"Let me repeat my deep regret that any body of men should so far forget their duty to their country as to endeavor by the formulation of societies and in other ways to influence the course of justice in this matter. I have received many such letters as yours. Accompanying them were newspaper clippings announcing demonstrations, parades, and mass meetings designed to show that the representatives of labor, without regard to the facts, demand the acquittal of Messrs. Haywood and Moyer. Such meetings can, of course, be designed only to coerce court or jury in rendering a verdict, and they therefore deserve all the condemnation which wou in your letters say should be awarded to those who endeavor improperly to influence the course of justice.

Challenges Support of Public.

"You would of course be entirely within your rights if you merely announced that you thought Messrs. Moyer and Haywood were 'desirable citizens,' though in such case I should take frank issue with you and should say that, wholly without regard to whether or not they are guilty of the crime for which they are now being tried, they represent as thoroughly undesirable a type of citizenship as can be found in this country; a type which, in the letter to which you so unreasonably take exception, I showed not to be confined to any one class, but to exist among some representatives of great capitalists as well as among some representatives of wage workers.

"In that letter I condemned both types. Certain representatives of the great capitalists in turn condemned me for including Mr. Harriman in my condemnation of Messrs. Moyer and Haywood. Certain of the representatives of labor in their turn condemned me because I included Messrs. Moyer and Haywood as undesirable citizens, together with Mr. Harriman.

"I am as profoundly indifferent to the condemnation in one case as in the other. I challenge as a right the support of all good Americans, whether wage earners or capitalists, whatever their occupation or creed, or in whatever portion of the country they live, when I condemn both the types of bad citizenship which I have held up to reprobation. It seems to me a mark of utter insincerity to fail thus to condemn both, and to apologize for either robs the man thus apologizing of all right to condemn any wrongdoing in any man, rich or poor, in public or in private life.

Meaning of a Square Deal.

"You say you ask for a 'square deal' for Messrs. Moyer and Haywood. So do I. When I say 'square deal' I mean a square deal to every one; it is equally a violation of the policy of the square deal for a capitalist to protest against denunciation of a capitalist who is guilty of wrongdoing and for a labor leader to protest against the denunciation of a labor leader who has been guilty of wrongdoing. I stand for equal justice to both, and so far as in my power lies I shall uphold justice whether the man accused of guilt has behind him the wealthiest corporations, the greatest aggregations of riches in the country, or whether he has behind him the most influential labor organization in the country. Very truly yours, "THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

"Mr. Honore Jaxon, Chairman, 667 West Lake Street, Chicago, Ill."

LABOR CONDEMNS ROOSEVELT

President Criticised for His Utterance Concerning Moyar and Haywood.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 23.—The Central Labor Union of Indianapolis adopted a resolution last night condemning President Roosevelt for his reference to President Moyer and Secretary Haywood of the Western Federation of Miners as undesirable citizens in a letter to Congressman Sherman of New York. The resolution concludes:

"Resolved, by the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, That we condemn these utterances as being unfair and unjust, and that they reflect no credit on the man who inelstently cries for a square deal."

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 23.—The State Federation of Labor, in session here to-day, wired President Roosevelt for an explanation of his alleged assertion that Haywood and Moyer, the Idaho miners, are not desirable citizens.

DISCUSS IDAHO'S AFFAIRS.

Bonaparte and United States Attorney Ruick Confer.

BALTIMORE, April 23.—N. M. Ruick, United States Attorney for Idaho, visited Baltimore this afternoon and had a conference with Attorney General Bonaparte. The conference had been postponed until to-day on account of the indisposition of Mr. Bonaparte, who has been confined to his house for some days with grip. He is now much better, and hopes within a day or two to return to work.

It was the desire of the Department of Justice to be fully informed as to the condition of public business in the United States court in Idaho, and particularly as to the prosecutions for alleged land frauds now pending there.

The conference between the Attorney General and Mr. Ruick lasted more than two hours, and at its conclusion Mr. Ruick returned to Washington. The Attorney General declined to say anything of what passed. He did not deny, however, that among the matters discussed were the prosecutions for extensive land frauds in Idaho, said to have been begun by the present Federal Grand Jury.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—"I have not come to Washington to make an appeal to the President or to the Department of Justice," said Senator Borah of Idaho, as he left the White House to-day, after a brief call on the President.

"The reports that indictments have been returned against me or my clients for alleged land frauds," continued the Senator, "are simply rumors. I know nothing of any such indictments. The Grand Jury has not yet reported its findings, and no one seems to have any official knowledge of the reported indictments."

Senator Borah, who is assisting in the prosecution of Haywood, Moyer, and Pettibone, officials of the Western Federation of Miners, who are alleged to be implicated in the murder of ex-Gov. Steunenberg, said that the trial, which is to begin early in May, will, in his opinion, last about two months.

MARVIN BOY DEAD NOW THE BELIEF

Warrant for Man Who Detective Says May Have Disposed of the Body.

KILLED ON A WAGON

Possible Accident Which It Is Believed the Suspect Sought to Conceal—Stories Are Conflicting.

Special to The New York Times.

DOVER, Del., April 23.—Acting upon evidence given to the Kent County Grand Jury now in session by State Detective Frank of New Jersey and on his own sworn belief, Magistrate E. F. Wood of this city to-day issued a warrant for the arrest of Frank Butler, charging him with being an accomplice in the death of Horace Marvin, the four-year-old eon of Dr. Marvin, who disappeared from his home near here early in March.

Butler is one of the men who was working at the Marvin home on the day of the little boy's disappearance, and is the last person said to have seen him alive. Armed with the warrant, Detective Love to-night boarded the steamer John P. Wilson, bound from Philadelphia for Lebanon, in this State. Butler is a deckhand on the steamer, and it is the intention of the detective to place him under arrest as soon as the boat reaches Delaware waters.

The first point to be touched by the steamer Wilson after leaving Philadelphia will be Bowers Beach, near the Marvin farm. From there Butler will bs brought to Dover, and at once be put through an inquisition by the Grand Jury.

The theory of Detective Love is that little Horace was in some unexplained manner killed by or on one of the wagons being loaded with some of the household goods of Charles Wood, who had sold the farm to Dr. Marvin. Fearing possible consequences, Butler put the body of the child in ons of the grain bags, and afterward buried it. An alleged conversation with a man named Caldwell, who was with Butler at the time of Horace's disappearance, contributed largely to the issuing of the warrant for Butler's arrest.

The substance of this information is that while Butler asserts that Horace was on the bay stack, playing at a particular time, Caldwell says he was not there. Further, according to the detective, as related to the Grand Jury, Caldwell says that one of the bags loaded on the wagon supposed to have contained corks was apparently much heavier than corks would have made it.

Caldwell asserts that Butler guarded this sack while he was driving the wagon and emphatically denies that it was left, even temporarily, at his (Caldwell's) house. Caldwell says the sack which he noticed weighed at least forty or fifty pounde, much more than the supposed bag of corks would have weighed.

WIFE HAS A. T. POST ARRESTED

Charges the Broker-Aeronaut with Ill-Treating Her.

Augustus T. Post of the banking firm of E. D. Sbephard & Co. of 31 Nassau Street, and well known as an aeronaut and automobilist, was arrested yesterday at the Holland House, where he has apartmente, and arraigned in the Yorkville Police Court on a charge of having maltreated his wife. The charge was pressed against him by Mrs. Post.

In obtaining the warrant on which the arrest was made Mrs. Post charged that at the Holland House on Sunday night Mr. Post beat her and scratched her so severely that she was badly hurt. She exhibited a bruised and scratched arm in support of her allegations. She also told Magistrate Baker that she had endured this sort of treatment for three years and could stand it no longer.

Mr. Post declined to discuss his wife's charges. He declared that he expected everything would be amicably settled before May 1. Mrs. Post then requested that ths hearing be adjourned until that date, and this was done by the court. Mr. Post was accompanied to court by Lawyer Henry A. Stickney of 30 Nassau Street. Mrs. Post was unattended by legal advisers. She said her representatives were Battle & Marshall of 170 Broadway.

On Sunday night Mrs. Post left the Holland House, where she had been living with her husband for three years, and engaged an apartment at the Buckingham. When seen there she said that she had been married to Mr. Post for eight years and had lived happily with him for five years, but ths last three years had been most unhappy. She also intimated that sho would seek legal satisfaction against a woman relative of Mr. Post, and reiterated her charges of brutality against him. She added that the present action would not be the end of the trouble.

Mr. Post is still staying at the Holland House, but attempts by reporters to reach him there last night were futile. No statement was issued by Mr. Stickney, his counsel. Mr. Post is about 40 years old. His wife is several years older. He is known among his friends as a mild-tempered man, and his friends expressed surprise last night at his arrest on such a charge.

T. F. RYAN BUYS ETCHINGS.

Purchaser at Last Season Sale of American Art Gallery.

The interesting collection of 120 etchings, engravings, and mezzotints of the collection of Theodore Offermans, sold at the American Art Galleries last evening, brought good prices, with a total return of $6,335.50.

Interest centred around the Whistler exhibits, and ten of theso brought most of the high prices. "The Beggars," ehowing one of the Venetian alleys, on old paper, with margins, brought the highest price of the sale, going to H. Wunderlich & Co. for $410. E. S. Benjamin paid the second highest price, $390, for "The Palaces," a Grand Canal scene in Venice, and the same buyer paid $300 for "The Little Lagoon," another one of the Venice set. George Buese paid $150 for "The Piazetta," Frederick Keppel & Co. $145 for "The Little Mast," and C. W. Kraushaar $120 for "The Maet." The same buyer gave $65 for the "Bead Stringers." Mrs. H. B. Livingston paid $70 for "The Forge," and the two other Whistlers, "La Vieille aux Loques" and "Rotherhithe," went for, respectively, $55 and $65.

"Solitude," after a painting by Daubigny, signed, artist's proof on vellum, by Theophile Chauvel, who is noted for his etchings of this school of artists, went to Keppel & Co. for $350.

A number of examples of Seymour Hayden's work in the collection brought prices varying from $22.50 up. His "Sunset in Ireland" brought the best price, going to Keppel & Co. for $200. His "A Lancashire River" brought $100.

Thomae F. Ryan bought a number of etchings, notably those of paintings of W. Dendy Sadler, by various artists. For "He's a Jolly Good Fellow" he gave $130. for "Toddy at the Cheshire Cheese" $105, and from $40 up for several others after this painter. Mr. Ryan also paid $100 for a signed artiet's proof engraving of "The Honorable Miss Bingham," by Samuel Cousins, after the painting by Sir Josbua Reynolds.

Warner Van Norden was another purchaser. Mr. Van Norden paid $50 for the lot of Tissots, the only things by him in the collection. These were in two frames, one "Tbe Title Page," an open book, and four others in another frame—"The Return," "The Fatted Calf," &c. These were originai dry points, signed artist's proofs.

Many people were at the sale in spite of the weather, and among them a large number of dealers. Tbis was the last sale at tbe American Art Galleries for the season.

HOSPITAL BRIDE A WIDOW.

W. A. DeWitt, Whom Miss Nellson Married, Dies.

William Archibald De Witt, ths young real estate dealer, who was married a week ago last night to Miss Elizabeth Nellson of 129 East Fifty-seventh Street, while propped up with pillows on his bed in Roosevelt Hospital, died yesterday of a complication of diseases, partly due to the taking of bichloride of mercury.

Mr. DeWitt was taken to the hospital in a very critical condition the day before he was to be married to Miss Nellson. He had taken, by mistake, a solution of bicbloride of mercury tbat he had mixed for antiseptic purposes, thinking it was water.

When the night of the wedding came Miss Nellson insisted on being married, and the ceremony was performed by an uncle of the bride. The bride then took a room in the hospital and remained at the bedside of her husband until his death yesterday morning.

Coroner's Physician O'Hanlon, who performed the autopsy, said that young De Witt died of a combination of gastro-enteritis, acute Bright's disease, and suppurative necrosis of the pancreas, due to taking bichloride of mercury. There was no reason to attribute the young man's death to suicide, Dr. O'Henlon said last night.

HEARST HEARD FROM.

Chicago Gets Information of Plan to Capture Presidential Nomination.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Ill., April 23.—A report that William Randolph Hearst is laying plans to force the Democratic Party to nominate him as its next candidate for President of the United States to-day reached the Democratic leaders here.

In substance the plan attributed to Mr. Hearst is to use branches of the Independent League, to be started all over the country. The league will hold its convention and nominate Hearst for President and some Southerner, preferably, for Vice President, in advance of the Democratic Convention, calling upon the Democrats to indorse Hearst, with a chance of winning, or name a candidate of their own and be defeated by the Independence forces.

It is recalled that Hearst obtained his nomination for Governor of New York last Fall by similar methods.

GIBBONS ANSWERS SABATIER.

Cardinal Is for Real Separation of Church and State.

NEW ORLEANS, April 23.—Cardinal Gibbons, replying to a statement by Paul Sabatier, in which M. Sabatier speaks of the Cardinal as being "so proud of the separation between Church and State in America" and recommends him to read the Papal bulletins "which absolutely condemned it," gave out the following interview to-day:

"In arguing for eeparation of Church and State, I do not presume to speak for other countries, or for other conditions. I speak only for my own country and its conditions, although I may venture the opinion that, whatever the opinion of the French Episcopate may be with regard to eeparation of Church and State, it would be better for that country if they could enjoy the real eeparation of Church and State as it is in this country.

"I am therefore unalterably attached to the separation of Church and State in this country, and have always expressed my belief and satisfaction in it. I so expressed myself in its favor thirty years ago, I did so later on in Rome itself, and I have no hesitation in expreesing the same solemn belief to-day.

"Indeed, I cannot speak too highly of the present relations between Church and State here, whcre the Civil Government holds over us the arm of its protection, without interfering with our rights of conscience in proclaiming the truths of the Gospel."

Cardinal Gibbons is in New Orleans to participate in the bestowing of the pallium upon Archbishop Blenk to-morrow.

TALE OF A GRATEFUL TROUT.

Freed from a Snake, It Does Its Best to Return the Favor.

(From an Occasional Corrcspondent.)

BINGHAMTON, April 23.—Hearing a great splashing in a brook that runs past his place Thomas Von Trump, a farmer of Kattellville, investigated on Sunday and found a big blacksnake on the bank close to the water with a fair-eized trout in its mouth. The snake wae trying to ewallow the fish, but had not yet succeeded.

Seizing a club, the farmer killed the snake and liberated the fish, which, though wounded, managed to swim away.

The farmer told the story, and yesterday morning a man who looke like Mr. Van Trump visited the brook to look for the trout. He found it swimming lazily near a log. The man threw a line in and declares that the grateful fish, mistaking bim for its benefactor, steered other trout up against his hook, enabling him to make a fine string.

LAWYER RAY HELD FOR BLACKMAIL

Accused of Sending Threatening Letter to Dr. Besser, Who Beat Process Server.

JEROME MAKES COMPLAINT

Quoted as Saying That This Form of Collecting Disputed Debts Has Got to Stop.

Thomas Hasset Ray, member of tbe law firm of Phillips & Ray, whose offices are at 34 Nassau Street, was held for the action of the Grand Jury yesterday by Magistrate House in the Centre Street Court on the charge of blackmail.

Ray's arrest, as well as some incidental action, was brought about at least in some measure, through the fact that Dr. Herman Besser, who is the complainant in the case, is a Harvard man and a physician and professor of some years' experience in this city. During bis professional career the Doctor hae picked up some information regarding his righte as a citizen. Another fact bearing on the case is that at Harvard Dr. Besser entered considerably into the athletic life of the university.

The present trouble for Ray really started through some glase tubes, bulbs, and other articles which were sent to the New York Polyclinic Hospital about a year ago. Dr. Besser had then been appointed a professor at that institution, and in demonstrating his system of treatment known as electro-radio-therapy, needed some articles for demonstration to young physicians taking a post-graduate course. He went to tbe firm of E. Machlett & Son, dealers in surgical instruments, on East Twenty-third Street, to see about it.

There, he says, he talked with a clerk, who told him that the firm would be glad to send tbe articles he needed to the hospital for the advertising there would be in it—so many young doctors eeeing and handling the instruments. The goods were sent, but after a trial were found unavailable for the work which was to be done and were sent back. Soon afterward the hospital was aeked to pay a bill of $106. Payment was refused, and some eort of a euit was threatened, which, however, did not come to trial.

One week ago last Saturday Dr. Besser was made aware that be was to be sued individually for the bill. Mrs. Besser told him tbat a man who said he was a process server had been at the door all day waiting for the doctor's return and annoying his patients.

Before Dr. Besser got out of bed on Monday morning he heard a commotion in the hallway leading to his flat. He rather surmised who the person was, he confessed yesterday. Pulling on some clothing, Dr. Besser met the process server. He was 6 feet in beight. Dr. Beseer is much sborter than that.

Before he had a chance to acknowledge himself the process server had shoved the eubpoena at him. Instead of paying much attention to tho paper Dr. Besser, as he freely acknowledged yesterday, aimed for the process server's noss and hit the mark. He followed up by grabbing the six-footer by the collar and where a hold on the clothing is easy, and threw him out of his hallway.

On the following day, Dr. Besser eays, he was called up on the telephons by a man wbo said first that he was telephoning from the Marshal's office, but afterward confessed that he was Mr. Ray. The further conversation, as Dr. Besser repeated it yesterday, wes something like this:

"I am coming up to serve you myself at about 3 o'clock this afternoon. Do you expect to treat me as you treated the process server?"

"If you come as a gentleman you will be treated as a gentleman," Dr. Besser says he replied. "If you come like the process server did you will be treated like bim."

The next day Dr. Besser received a typewritten letter signed in writing with ths name of Phillips and Ray. As Dr. Besser gave out this letter from memory it was as follows:

Our Mr. Kutner informs us that while endeavoring to serve you with a summone and complaint he was assaulted by you, and we write this letter to state that unless you settle the Machlett claim on or before April 17 at 12 o'clock noon we will begin civil as well as criminal proceedings against you.

Dr. Besser took this letter to District Attorney Jerome, who, he says, declared: "This way of collecting debts has got to be stopped!"

The District Attorney went before Magistrate House and showed him ths letter. County Detective Russo was soon afterward ordered to arrest Ray.

When arraigned before Magistrate House yesterday Ray said in answer to a query why he had written such a letter:

"Judge, I didn't know it was a crime to write a letter of that sort."

His bail was fixed at $1,000, which was furnished.

It was said shout the Criminal Court Building that the scheme of sending belligerent process servers had become common, and that if a man who was being served had any spirit he was apt to act as Dr. Besser acted, with this differences—that when thereafter a criminal suit was threatenod for assault he was very apt to feel culpable and pay the debt. This, it was pointed out, was what Mr. Jerome meant when he said: "This thing has got to stop."

JOHNSON SEIZES TRACKS.

Injunction Fails to Stop Traction Plans of Cleveland's Mayor.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, April 23.—Despite a court order and various kinds of opposition from the Cleveland Electric Railway Company, Mayor Johnson to-night put the 3-cent fare line in poseession of the tracks on Central and Quincy Avenues.

The Cleveland company's franchise on these avenues expired at midnight, and it intended to rip up tho tracks. The Mayor held that the other company had the right to use the tracks and more then 100 policemen were eent out to prevent interference with them. Late to-night six cars of the new concern were smuggled on to the lines, blocking traffic, but holding possession.

A temporary injunction was granted late to-day by Judge Ford against Mayor Johnson and the Forest City Railway Company, on application of the Cleveland Company. It prohibted the Forest City Company from operating on Central and Quincy Avenues. The application for the injunction was based on the alleged financial interest of Mayor Johnson in the Forest City Railway.

In order to avoid the injunction, the Municipal Traction Company to-night transferred its leaee of tho Forest City Railway Company to the Low Fare Company. By thia transaction the Municipal Company went out of business, and the new concern disregarded the injunction.

Graves were desecrated to-day in the rush to complete the Low Fare Company's lines in Sumner Avenue Southeast. The Eaet Ninth Street Cemetery, the oldest in the city, was invaded, and thirteen trolley poles were put in it. Bones of pioneere were dug up and covered in a pile of dirt. What disposition was finally made of them is not known. The trolley poles were in eome instances eet against tombetonee.

MRS. EDDY'S PEACE PLAN.

Gladly Accepts Office in the International Conciliation.

Chooeing Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy ae Fondatéur, the American branch of "The Aesociation for International Conciliation" was launched yesterday. Andrew Carnegie, Seth Low, Nicholas Murray Butler, and other famoue Americans arc interested in the movement, which was advocated here by Baron d'Estournelles de Conetant, founder and world President of the aeeociation, who came here to attend the Peace Conference.

The suggeetion that Mrs. Eddy become the firet American Fondateur was made at the close of a meeting held in the Firet Christian Science Church last Friday afternoon to interest members of that body in the association. A letter came beck from Mrs. Eddy on Monday last, in her own handwriting, addressed to John D. Higgine of the Firet Church. Her letter follows:

Pleasant View, Concord, N. H.
April 22, 1907.

First Church of Christ, Scientiet, New York City, Mr. John D. Higgins, Clerk:

My Beloved Brethren: Your appointment of me as Fondateur of the Aesociation of International Conciliation is most gracious. To aid in thie holy purpose is the leading impetue of my life. Many years have I prayed and labored for the consummation of "on earth peace, good will toward men." May the fruits of your grand association, pregnant with peace, find their birthright in divine science.

Right thoughts and deeds are the sovereign remedies of all earth'e woe. Sin is its own enemy. Right has its recompense, even though it be betrayed. Wrong may be man's highest idea of right until hie grasp on goodness grows stronger. It is always safe to be just.

When pride, self, and human reason reign, injustice is rampant. Individuals, ae nations, unite harmoniously on the basis of justice, and this is accomplished when self is lost in love—in God's own plan of salvation. "To do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly," is the standard of Christian Science.

Human law is right only as it patterns the divine. Consolation and peace are based on the enlightened sense of God's government.

Lured by fame, pride, or gold, euccese is dengerous, but the choice of folly never fastens on the good or the great.

Because of my rediscovery of Christian Science, and honest efforts (however meagre) to help human purpose and peoples, you may have accorded me more than is deserved, but 'tis sweet to be remembered. Lovingly yours,

MARY BAKER G. EDDY.

The make-up of the American Branch of the association officially is as follows: Honorary Presidents—Andrew Carnegie and Andrew D. White; President—Nicholas Murray Butler; Vice President—Congressman Richard Bartholdt; Secretary—Hayne Davis; Treasurer—Robert A. Franks. Besides these, there are on an Executive Committee Dr. Lyman Abbott, James Speyer, Richard Watson Gilder, and Stephen H. Olin.

DICKINSON TRIAL.

Testimony in the Case of Secretary of State of New Jersey.

TRENTON, N. J., April 23.—Testimony was heard to-day regarding the relations of Secretary of State Samuel Dickinson and the wife of Joel Cory, a salesman for the Trenton Tile Company of this city, who lives at 1,893 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

This testimony has to do with the $100,000 slander suit brought by Col. Dickinson against Mayor Mark M. Fagan of Jersey City because of the allegations made by the Mayor in his many efforts to persuade Gov. Stokes not to reappoint Col. Dickinson Secretary of State last Winter. Mr. Dickinson was reappointed.

Mr. Cory, who is 77 years old, his wife being 58, testified that Col. Dickinson had a standing invitation to come to his house, to stay over night whenever he wanted to, and to go out driving, to theatres, and anywhere else he pleased with Mrs. Cory. Cory said his wife and Col. Dickinson had taken several trips together, going to Europe several times.

Mr. Cory was not anxious to answer questions. In reply to one he said that he "knew as little about Long Branch as about heaven, and that is mighty little."

The hearing scheduled to take place to-day in the suit for $100,000 damages was postponed. The other testimony was taken before Frederick W. Gnichtel as a Special Master in Chancery. Col. Dickinson produced Cory in his own behalf. He explained that he was going on a business trip that migbt keep him away until Fall. Tbercfore he might not be back in time for the Dickinson-Fagan trial.

DALY ROUGH, ACTRESS SAYS,

Bruised Her Arm and She Is Leaving Company Because She Protested.

Jennie Eustis, who plays the rôle of Mrs. McLean in "The Boys of Company B" at the Lyccum Theatre, is to leave the company a week from Saturday night. Last night Miss Eustis gave out a statement, in which she said that, while she disliked the publicity of the explanation she had to offer, she felt she must protect herself from a statement that she had been discharged to make room for a more competent player. She went on to say:

"I am really leaving the company because of trouble with Arnold Daly. Last Friday night he decided that he wanted an exit changed. He told me nothing about it, and when I went to make my exit in the usual manner he took me roughly by the arm. I was indignant at his conduct, and did not readily yield. After the curtain call I remained and told him plainly that he should not have done it. Aside from the discourtesy I hated to be made awkward before the audience. He became excited, but not nearly as excited as I was. I received my two weeks' notice the following day.

"On my arm there are still three large marks where Mr. Daly grasped it. They are the best proof of my story. I tried to conceal them, but they attracted the notice of other girls in the company."

DRAMATICS AT THE ARTS CLUB

Shakespeare Club Helps In a Joint Programme.

Tbe National Arts Club and the Shakespeare Club held a joint meeting last night at the Arts Club house, at which an elaborate musical and dramatic programme was offercd. The audience took every available inch of room.

The only professional actress on the programme was Amelia Bingham, who is a member of the Shakespeare Club. She wae announced for a "scene." When ehe went on the stage she expressed her surprise at the announcement, and delivered Portia's speech from "The Merchant of Venice."

The address of greeting to the guests was made by Dr. Charles Henry Babcock, and the response by A. C. McMillan, President of the Shakespeare Club. Musical selections were given by Mrs. Mary Churchill Atkins, Marguerite Fry, and Mme. Noldi, who sang arias from "Romeo and Juliet" and "Giocanda."

The dramatic part of the programme consisted of two scenes from "Hamlet," a scene from "The eMrchant of Venice," and a scene from "Othello." Mrs. Olcott Payne appeared as the Melancholy Dane, assisted by Mrs. A. C. McMillan as the Quen and Measrs. J. Ward Warner, John M. Kyle, C. E. Smith, and J. W. Babbitt. Miss Caroline Fry appeared as Ophilia in one of the mad scenes. In "The Merchant of Venice" scenes Mrs. J. Ward Warner was seen as Portia, Novella Young aa Nerissa, and Henry Amerman as the servant. In the scene from "Othello" between Desdemona and Emilia in the last act Mrs. Adele Baldwin was Desdemona and Mrs. A. C. McMillan Emilia.

WEST OF OLD DAYS IN TOWN ONCE MORE

With a Train Hold-Up Added to the Other Deeds of Daring Shown

AND ALL THE OLD STUNTS

Col. Cody on the White Horse and the Indians and Cowboys as Fresh as Ever.

When the band struck up in Madison Square Garden last night and the cowboys, scouts, Indians, Cossacks, and all the rest of the Congress of Rough Riders filed out into the arena in the old, accustomed way, last of all came Buffalo Bill Cody himself, on the white horse, and swept the tanbark with his eombrero in a salute which had all the same easy grace which New York has cheered in so many previous Wild West shows.

Buffalo Bill seems no older witb the passing years, and when ne takes his gun in his hands he still hits the mark. That same was true of Buffalo Bill's show at the Madison Square Garden last night. It was as fresh as ever, and still hit the bull's eye fair and square. A big crowd was on hand to witness the first evening performance, and the big crowd departed much aatisfied.

The Wild West is not yet quite the smooth-running spectacle it will doubtless be by the end of the week, but the little side incidents, mainly furnished by some few horses who have not yet made up their minds to do all that is expected of them at a set time and place, only add so much more interest to the panorama. After all, the horses are the central feature of the performance, and the audience likes to feel that tho wild onee among them have not yet become tame and apt at "fuking."

The great attraction of this year's show is sure to be "The Battle of Summit Springs," which actually took place on July 11, 1869. The reproduction is the most realistic part of the performance, and, at its climax, the noisest and most smoky. At the opening of the scens a mob of Indians, with their squaws and pappooses and household utensils, come into the arena and camp for the night. When the topees are pitched they all have a dance, the youngsters joining in as exultantly as the tallest buck. Two white captive women are maltreated by the Indian women who have them in charge. Then all grows silent. The Indians withdraw into their tents for the night; only the horses and dogs are in sight—and one or two of the horses fool themselves by lying down.

Then come the attack of the troopers, the orslaught, the shooting, the general uproar, the smoke, and the rescue of the two white women. This is what the audience wants, and it does not hesitate to show its satisfaction.

The emigrant train is still attacked by Indians. The Deadwood stage coach is also still being rescued from savages by heroic cowboys at each performance. Moreover, in the rear of the Garden a full-sized railroad train is held up by bandits who are soon afterward killed or captured. Johnny Baker and Buffalo Bill still show the wonders of expert markmanship. The Cossacks ride as recklessly as of yore. And, altogether, if anybody fails to be properly thrilled he has only himself to thank for his disappointment. With rough riders of all nations, cowgirls, and Indans painted every color of the rainbow from black to green, what more can the heart desire?

It would not be fair to omit the artillery drill and the drill of the Devlin Zouaves, for these two parts of the entertainment won particular applause. Ths exhibitions of rough riding were as startling as ever. While Buffalo Bill himself was in the arena superintending the manoeuvres he became interested in one particularly bad broncho and the man who was endeavoring to mount him.

"Let bim go!" shouted the Colonel. They "let him go," and he went seven ways at once—like a horse and a rolling boat and a secsaw all at the same time.

The final episode of the show now is a holiday at the Colonel's ranch in Wyoming, and the lest moment is devoted to a grand parade of all the mounted participants.

So after four seasons the Wild West Show comes back to town. It has not left its atmosphere behind it in France or other foreign parts. Its spirit is the spirit of its founder—the spirit that makes us all believe we have mistaken our vocations and were really born to be red Indians or cowboys.

INDICTMENT IN BROOKLYN.

Said to be for a Missing Lawyer—Name Not Revealed.

An indictment which excited a lot of talk in the Court House was banded to Judge Fawcett in the Kings County Court by the Grand Jury yesterday. Judge Fawcett was about to have the paper read by the clerk when District Attorney Clarke jumped to his feet and said:

"It's a 'dead' indictment, Your Honor," meaning that it was one against a person who had not been arrested.

The indictment was placed in the hands of the District Attorney, who declined to make known the name of the man concerned. It was generally rumored that the person indicted was a well-known lawyer, who has been missing for several wecks and whose affairs have been under investigation.

DENNETT IN CELL, BOND THEFT GROWS

Trust Company of America Looking for a Man Higher Up in the Scheme.

DOUGLAS MAY TELL ALL

Clerk and Man He Dealt With Not Believed to be Principals—Loss May Reach $250,000.

With Oliver M. Dennett, banker, in a cell at Police Headquarters on a charge of receiving stolen goods, and his client, William O. Douglas, in the prison of the West Side Court awaiting arraignment on a charge of stealing sixty-one bonds of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad from the Trust Company of America, where he used to be the assistant to the loan clerk, the officials of that institution wound up the third day of their detective work last night pretty well convinced that there was somebody behind both Dennett and Douglas in the plot to defraud the company out of many hundred thousand dollars. But there was no tangible clue to the identity of the real backer of the undertaking.

The trust company succeeded yesterday in getting back all of the bonds which were found to have disappeared when Douglas's books were checked up last Saturday. But this was only upon the payment of $140,000 in settlement of the accounts with various brokerege houses where the bonds were placed, by Douglas, or by Dennett, or by both of them, as collateral security for the speculations in which Douglas and whoever was with him were concerned. And while the trust company officials, their counsel, and the various detectives still declined to state what the exact amount of the theft might be, it was gathered from, the size of the payment necessary to take up the brokers' accounts that the total present theft must have been at least $200,000, and possibly he $250,000 originally stated by Douglas when he was arrested on Sunday.

Douglas Threatens to Tell.

All of the developments of yesterday, quite aside from the tacit admissions of two of the men prominently interested in the investigation, went to strengthen the supposition that the mystery of the big theft was by no means cleared up and would not be until a third party in addition to Douglas and Dennett had appeared as a subject for police custody. Douglas himself, when the keeper of the West Side Court Prison brought him his morning papers after breakfast, gave the first color to the theory by saying:

"I'm innocent in this matter. There are others in the trust company who will be implicated in it before it is through, and if they don't let me out on bail soon or give me a chance to get bail I'll make it warm for some of them."

The statement of Douglas that others in the trust company were concerned was not credited, at least publicly, by officials of that institution. They went straightway about the business of looking up the bonds where they had been placed with the different brokerage houses named in the confession which Douglas made on Sunday night, but found that despite the orders from Dennett or Douglas calling for the release of these bonds, it would not or possible to obtain them until the underlying acounts had been straightened out. That put upon the shoulders of the trust company the entire losses of Douglas and Dennett, so far as the present series of thefts le concerned.

That the defalcation might, however, be a matter of much longer standing than anybody had supposed, was indicated by the langauge of the warrant upon which Dennett was arrested just before 6 o'clock last night. This charged that the banker, upon the complaint of Oakleigh Thorne, President of the trust company, "between April 10, 1906, and April 10, 1907, stole and received sixty-one bonds of the par value of $1,000 each of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company dated May 1, 1903, from the Trust Company of America, knowing the said bonds to have been stolen."

Light on Dennett's Career.

Nor did it appear that Douglas and Dennett were chance acquaintances of a few weeks' or months' standing, for further investigation developed the fact that Douglas and F. R. Moseley, who ran a Consolidated Exchange brokerage concern last year in which Dennett proved to be the active man, are half brothers. Both are young, both boyish in appearance, and, just as the trust company officials are convinced now that Douglas was the tool of other parties in taking the bonds, so the Consolidated Stock Exchange officials last October became convinced that Dennett was the man behind the extensive advertising campaign that drew their attention to certain features of F. R. Moseley's business that they did not like.

Dennett himself is only 33 years old, which places his operations in Boston ending a hasty trip to Jamaica in 1903 and subsequent arrest, of which THE TIMES told yesterday, back in his twenties. But Pinkerton men who are on the case and have, in fact, been his constant companions since the memorable visit to the Manhattan Club on Monday morning, declared that he was one of the coolest and most resourceful individuals in a trying position that they had ever come into contact with. This conception is borne out by his occupancy of the post of cashier of the Beacon Trust Company of Boston when but 28 years old and by a subsequent business experience that led him through a $200,000 failure and out of the law's clutches in 1903.

The Company's Statement.

Thus there appeared many ends of the matter to be traced down when the day's work began yesterday. The first thing that the trust company officials concerned themselves with was getting their bonds back, and to this end a meeting of the company's Executive Committee was called at 11:30 o'clock with the following present: Oakleigh Thorne, William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., George R. Sheldon, John D. Crimmins, Richard Delafield, Anson Flower, and John E. Borne. The Executive Committee determined to make good the losses in the accounts where the bonds were pledged, and after the meeting was over President Thorne gave out this statement:

> At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Trust Company of America held at 11:30, Mr. Oakleigh Thorne, President, stated that the assistant loan clerk, W. O. Douglas, had stolen certain securities; that some of said securities had been hypothecated by O. M. Dennett with brokerage houses, and that the maximum loss cannot exceed $140,000.
>
> If the contention of counsel for the company is sustained that the stolen bonds or their proceeds may be recovered from those to whom they were delivered, the trust company will lose nothing.
>
> Some of the securities were in the possession of Dennett while at the Manhattan Club, and were afterward delivered to the trust company.
>
> A thorough examination of the company just completed shows a capital of $2,000,000 and a surplus and undivided profit of $10,810,000.
> O. M. Dennett is in custody.

The statement conveyed officially for the first time an approximate idea of how many bonds were taken by Douglas. The maximum loss of $140,000 must necessarily have been secured by bonds substantially in excess of that amount, and figuring on the basis of the ordinary margin of collateral required for carrying a speculative account, that item would in itself explain the disposition of something like $175,000 of bonds. In addition there were the $20,000 of bonds recovered from between the mattresses of Dennett's bed at the Manhattan Club when the detectives visited that place on Monday in the company of the banker, making a total of at least $200,000 immediately traceable.

That, however, might easily be only one step in a long series of "borrowings" of honds from the trust company within the dates specified in the warrant for Dennett's arrest. According to banking men yesterday, it would be a matter of comparative simplicity for a loan clerk temporarily to abstract securities put up as collateral for time loans with his institution, use them as collateral in outside operations through a confederate, and then, by the substitution of new securities for them from time to time as the original ones were required in the discharge of the loans with the bank, continus the process indefinitely or until he wound up as Douglas wound up.

Arrest of Dennett Long Delayed.

The statement of Mr. Thorne that Dennett was "in custody" was another point of interest all day. William F. Sheehan, whose law firm, Parker, Hatch & Sheehan, appearcd as the active counsel for the Trust Company of America, did not know much about it up to noon. No more did any of the individuals who had been active in the matter, for Mr. Thorne referred reporters to Mr. Sheehan, and Mr. Shcehan to sx-Justice O'Brien and ex-Justics O'Brien to Mr. Thorne. Finally it was discovered that Dennett, in what was euphoniously termed "voluntary custody," was down in his own office at 42 Wall Street, crowded into a little eight by ten room with two Pinkerton men, two Central Office men, one or two of his own friends, and a stenographer.

The Central Office men, Lieuts. Driscoll and McCarthy, had been sent down upon a telephone message from Mr. Sheehan to the Detective Bureau that a warrant for Dennett's arrest was out and would be brought down to the office. That was early in the afternoon. Driscoll and McCarthy found Dennett keeping company with two Pinkertons, who had been his constant companions since Monday morning, when the Manhattan Club was visited, but found no warrant. They camped out and waited. So did a dozen or more reporters, who had previously found that Douglas was not to have his examination in the West Side Court until this afternoon.

It was a long wait. Not until 4 o'clock did Mr. Thorne put in an appearance at the West Side Court, in Fifty-fourth Street, to swear out the warrant for Dennett, and then there was a long conference between Mr. Thorne, Douglas, and Mrs. Douglas in the prison, and still more talk between the trust company President and Douglas's counsel, H. R. Honey. Mr. Thorne was asked if he had made any promises of immunity to Douglas as a condition of implicating other people. He replied:

"I have not made any promises of immunity to any one."

Finally, well after 5 o'clock, Detective Quinn of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, who made the original arrest of Douglas, started with John J. Clooney of Mr. Sheehan's firm and William H. Cheseborough, a Director of the trust company, for Dennett's office. They reached the office about 6 and served the warrant. The Pinkerton men thereupon began a search of the premises, but Dennett protested against having his desk opened without a search warrant, so that it was a case of having the Pinkertons wait until a search warrant could be obtained from the District Attorney's office. They would not say what the search of the desk revealed.

Dennett was taken to Police Headquarters, stood up before the detectives at evening roll call, and locked up. His counsel, Forbes J. Hennessey, was there, but nothing was said about bail, and Mr. Hennessey declared that neither he nor his client would have anything to say last night. Dennett will be arraigned before Magistrate Walsh in the West Side Court this morning.

SPRIGGS SEEKS NEW TRIAL.

New Evidence Alleged to Have Been Found in Case of Negro Abductor.

Application was made yesterday before Judge O'Sullivan, in General Sessions, for a new trial for Robert A. Spriggs, the negro who was arrested after a sensational raid in March of last year, and sent to Sing Sing for twenty years on a charge of abduction. The application was made by ex-Assistant District Attorney Townsend on the ground that new evidence had been discovered.

Mr. Townsend gave Judge O'Sullivan six affidavits signed by persons who had frequented Spriggs's place at 14 Cornelia Street, stating that Hattie Warren, the white girl whom Spriggs was chnrged with abducting and holding a prisoner in his resort, had been permitted to go about as she liked, and had never been kept a prisoner in the house.

Assistant District Attorney Garvan opposed the granting of the application on the ground that Spriggs had had a fair trial, and that several witnesses had sworn as to the character of his resort, and to the fact that although permitted to go out, Hattie Warren was always kept under close guard when away from Spriggs's place.

Judge O'Sullivan took the papers in the case, promising a decision in a few days.

DIED SAVING HER FATHER.

Mrs. J. Spicer Leaming of Cape May Succumbs to Burns Received at Fire.

Special to The New York Times.

CAPE MAY, N. J., April 23.—Mrs. J. Spicer Leaning, wife of City Solicitor Leaming, and sister of Vice Chancellor Leaming, who was so severely burned at a fire in her husband's residence yesterday afternoon, died this evening. She was trying to get her father, former Senator Jonathan F. Leaming, from his sick room, where the fire started from an exploded oil stove, when she was burned.

The ex-Senator, who is 85 years old, was seriously ill and he was so badly burned he may die from shock. The nurse, Miss Shreeve of Salem, N. J., was also badly burned in getting the Senator from his room. Mrs. Leaming was prominent in society and the church.

Oliver Smith Guilty of Slander.

TRENTON, N. J., April 23.—The United States Circuit Court jury to-day found Oliver Smith of Camden guilty of slandering and libeling William A. Reed of Philadelphia, and assessed damages of $775. The case grew out of a quarrel between Smith, President of the Benzonated Soap Company, and Reed, its Secretary. Smith asserted that Reed had falsified expenses, and that he was a "thief" and a "rascal," and "had robbed him of many hundreds of dollars."

NEW SKYSCRAPER FOR TIMES SQUARE

To be Built on the Southwest Forty-sixth Street Corner, So Realty Men Say.

BRILL BROS. MAY BE IN IT

Talk Also of a Big Store Building Where the Metropole Now Stands.

Rumors concerning big realty deals in and about Times Square came thick and fast yesterday, and before nightfall three stories were afloat to the effect that three great buildings would soon bs erected in the square. Tho first of these, it was said, would be a new theatre building on tho southwest corner of Broadway and Forty-sixth Street, in which Brill Brothers would have large interests.

This site was recently purchased from the Ross estate. At the head of the syndicate which purchased it last week were Walter J. Saloman and Jacob Wertheim. They refused to reveal their plans, but within the last two days they have acquired property adjoining, in Forty-sixth Street, buying the house at No. 204, and it was said last night that they were now negotiating for the purchase of four more houses adjoining, owned by James Churchill.

This tract would give them 23,000 square feet, on which they could erect the theatre building, with an entrance on Broadway, and still leave room for store fronts.

Brill Brothers, who are engaged in the men's furnishing and clothing business, have recently got into several big Broadway realty deals, ostensibly for renting purposes. Instead of occupying the ground floor of this new Forty-sixth Street building, it was said last night they might rent it out, but the more probable supposition was that they would occupy it themselves.

The theatre will occupy the greater part of the superficial area of the building. It will probably be known as the Times Square Theatre, and is likely to be managed by Joseph Brooks, the booking agent of Klaw & Erlanger.

No one would discuss the theatre part of the project, however, or indeed reveal in detail the plans formed in connection with it. Maurice Brill of the firm of Brill Brothers denied last night that his firm was interested "at present" in the enterprise. The new theatre building will go up just the same.

The next story concerning Times Square realty changes had it that Brokaw Brothers, the old-time clothing firm, was coming uptown to e new building which would be erected on the sites now occupied by the Hotel Metropole and the Saranne, with frontages on Broadway, Forty-second Street, and Seventh Avenue.

One of the hotel sites, it was said, was controlled by the New Amsterdam Bank, and the other by Charles W. Morse. One could not be sold, as it was a leasehold. Nevertheless the story concerning this property was that in spite of this a handsome building wuuld soon cover tho spaces occupied by these old-time hotels.

No une could be found to confirm this story. A member of the Brokaw firm said that so far as he knew his firm had no intention of moving its business uptown just yet.

The third report of something doing in Times Square was that a fourteen-story building was tu bc erected in Times Square north of the Times Building, to be occupied as a department store by a concern, which now owns a big department store in Chicago.

Like the other stories of coming business enterprises in the Square, no details could be obtained of the department store's plans. But that this and the theatre are soon to be, was confidently asserted by realty brokers who are in a position to know of deals under way.

BANKER'S AGED WIDOW WEDS.

Mrs. Kauffman Is 32 Years Older Than Her Husband.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 23.—St. Joseph's Catholic Church in Texas, Baltimore County, was packed with curious persons at noon to-day to witness the marriage of Mrs. Laura Brown, the wealthy widow of Alexander Brown, the banker, to Charles H. Kauffman of Boston.

He has denied the report that he was a coachman, and declared that he has business interests in Boston. The fact that he is thirty-two years younger than the widow, and that he wns never known in this vicinity until two or three months ago, has increased the interest in the wedding.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. C. Campbell, the rector, whose sister, Miss Mary Louise Campbell, was maid of honor. Just a few minutes before 12 o'clock Mrs. Brown and the bridegroom-elect arrived from the former's home, and in order to avoid the eyes of the curious who lined the thoroughfare on both sides, they hurried to the rectory of the church, where they remained while preparations for the ceremony were made.

The bride entered with William S. Keech, an attorney, who gave her away. She wore a gown of crêpe de chine, with hat and veil to match, and carried bride's roses.

After the ceremony the couple left for Boston. Upon their return they will reside at Elwood, the bride's magnificent country estate.

PRESSING CRAIN SENTENCE.

Jerome to Keep Up His Fight for Crook's Proper Punishment.

District Attorney Jsrome will carry into Judge Crain's own camp his war against the Judge's methods, when he appears in Judge Crain's part of General Sessions this morning to move that the sentence of two months imposed on Friday on Daniel Sullivan be revoked, and a heavier penalty inflicted. The method of the District Attorney to bring about this result is unusual, having been adopted only twice before by a District Attorney.

Mr. Jerome has not hesitated to show, however, that he believes the Sullivan cass to be one demending radical measures. Although the prisoner was indicted for robbery in the second degree, Judge Crain first suspended sentence upon him, and then, after a strong protest from Mr. Jeroms, sentenced Sullivan to only two months' imprisonment, although the maximum penalty for the crime of which he was convicted is fifteen years in the penitentiary.

The fact that seated upon the bench witb Judge Crain wben he pronounced this sentence was James J. Hagan, a former Warden of the Tombs, and a Tammany district leader, who hsd been one of the first to congratulats Judge Crain on his elevation to the bench snd to point for him the motto "Reward for Loyalty," contained on the floral piece which grseted the Judge when he entered his new courtroom, was discovered by the District Attorney when he hurried to the courtroom in response to an appeal for assistance from his assistant, Mr. Appleton.

Since Friday Mr. Jerome has devoted himself to obtaining affidavits from five msn, two of them policemen, which deal with Sullivan's previous escapades and tirow some light upon his criminal record. This already sbows three convictions for assault. In another case, although charged with felonious assault, Sullivan was discharged by n Police Magistrate, and in the instances where he was convicted he once escaped with a suspension of sentence and twice paid fines, one of $10 and the other of $25.

Mr. Jerome is anxious to uncover the mysterious "pull" by which Sullivsn up to date has managed to avoid punishment. In the last case, at least, he is determined that the convict shall pay the full penalty for his crime.

SHOT AS HE SLEPT.

Hack Driver Arrested as Assailant of Brooklyn Italian.

Biago Mardone, a peddler, who in the few years he hae been in this country has saved enough money to purchase several houses in South Brooklyn, was shot through the right lung early yesterday morning while asleep in bed in his home at 143 Nineteenth Street, Brooklyn. Members of a Black Hand society had sent Mardone several threatening letters in the last three months. In these letters demands for sums varying from $1,000 to $2,000 were made.

The injured peddler was hurried to the Norwegian Hospital, where he gave the police a description of the men.

William Cuff was driving in a funeral procession when Detectives Hussey and Fennell arrested him. Their attention was attracted to him by his hat, which was too large for him. It was later found at the station house that a light coat, and a vest left hy the assailant in the house of the wounded man fitted Cuff. Cuff was then taken to the Norwegian Hospital, where Mardone identified him as his assailant.

Last night Mrs. William Monszes of 225 Prospect Avenue, her son, and William W. Hammond, a boarder, picked Cuff out of a line of men in the station house as one of two men who had entered Mrs. Monszes's house six weeks ago, nnd in making his escape had shot Hammond in the throat, severely wounding him.

TUBE CITY ROAD SCANDAL.

List of 28 Councilmen, Alleged to be in Combine, Furnished to Cameron.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 23.—The Pittsburg & Tube City Railroad scandal has assumed proportions that threaten trouble for twenty-eight members of Pittsburg Councils. President C. S. Cameron of the Tube City has a list of names of twenty-eight Councilmen furnished to him, he alleges, by Common Councilman William A. Martin, instead of eighteen as was originally supposed. Martin indicated. Cnmeron declares, that these men were in a combine and could be induced to vote for the Tube City's ordinance if properly approached, Cameron to furnish the argument which, Cameron says, he understood to be money.

It was announced here this evening that after this list is produced Attorney John Marron will call Councilman Martin to the stand and question him concerning the Councilmen on this list. If Martin refuses to testify, it is said, he will be arrested and tried for obstructing justice.

WRECKS BLAMED ON RAILS.

Operating Officials Say a Dangerous Percentage Have Flaws.

CHICAGO, April 23.—Bad steel rails are causing many of the disastrous wrecks on American railroads, according to a statement mnde to-day by some of the most prominent operating officials in the United States, who are in Chicago attending the Spring meeting of the American Railway Association.

Aided by chemists and metallurgists, a committee has investigated this matter and has come to the conclusion that an exceedingly dnngerous percentage of the steel ralls manufactured to-day hnve the latent flaw which causes them to snap and break under the impact of a fast train.

Among the reports which have been prepared for presentation to the general meeting of the association to-morrow is one by the Committee on "Standard Rail and Wheel Sections." This report will recommend that a committee he appointed to discuss steel ralls with American manufacturers in an effort to improve the quality of the material.

MORSE'S FINAL PLANS FOR SHIPPING TRUST

Minority Holders in Four Companies Get Offers for Exchange of Stock.

AFTER HUDSON COMPANY

The Citizens' Steamboat Company Will Probably Accept Latest Proposition for Purchase.

The first step toward the final consummation of Charles W. Morse's plan for a coastwise shipping trust was made yesterday when the stockholders in four of the oceangoing lines which he and his associates already control, received circulars offering to exchange stock in the new Morse holding company incorporated in Maine some months ago under the name of the Consolidated Steamship Lines, for their shares of the smaller operating companies.

Beginning in 1901, with the consolidation under the name of the Eastern Steamship Company of the various small lines which constitute a practical monopoly of the traffic between the Maine ports and those of the Maritime Provinces, Mr. Morse has gradually added to his interests in coastwise shipping until by his purchase in February of the New York and Porto Rico Steamship Company he has gained control of the entire Atlantic and Gulf coast trade, with the exception of the Old Dominion and Morgan Lines and the minor services controlled by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company.

It has been known ever since the incorporation of the $60,000,000 Consolidated Steamship Lines that it was Mr. Morse's intention to get the benefit as soon as possible of the great economies which might be effected by the operation of all of his steamship lines under one administrative head, but nothing definite was learned about the terms of exchange until circulars were sent to stockholders of the Clyde, Mallory, Metropolitan, and Eastern Steamship Companies yesterday. The circulars, which were in duplicate except for the announcement of the size of the majority of the stockholders in each line who had already agreed to the plan, read as follows:

Morse's Stock Conversion Offer.

Up to the present time over a majority of the total shares of your company's capital stock has been exchanged for bonds and stock of the Consolidated Steamship Lines.

The stock of the —— Steamship Company is convertible into stock of the Consolidated Steamship Lines, share for share, and in addition thereto 4 per cent. collateral trust bonds of an equal par value.

If you will promptly send your certificates to Mr. N. H. Campbell, Treasurer, Room 902, 43 Exchange Place, New York City, indorsed in blank and witnessed, he will send you in exchange therefor the stock and bonds of the Consolidated Steamship Lines under this arrangement.

Of the Clyde Line it is announced that over 100,000 of the total of 140,000 shares have agreed to the exchange, and of the Mallory Line that "over a majority" of the 140,000 shares are willing.

It is expected that the Ward Line and the New York and Porto Rico Steamship Company will be taken into the merger later on practically the same terms. The Hudson Navigation Company, which is Mr. Morse's stronghold in the Hudson River trade, is not expected to enter the consolidation at present. It was learned yesterday that the Morse interests, through N. H. Campbell, Treasurer of the Hudson Navigation Company, have made a proposition to the stockholders of the Citizens' Steamboat Company, which is one of the minor rivals of the Morse river lines, offering to buy their shares providing all of the stock agrees to the offer.

Mr. Campbell, in his proposition to the Citizens' stockholders, asks that they deposit their shares with him and then, if al lof their stock is surrendered, says that Mr. Morse will make an offer which he in turn will submit to the stockholders. If the Morse offer is not accepted the stock will be returned. The Directors of the Citizens' Steamboat Company have already voted in favor of the proposition, and it is believed that whatever plans Mr. Morse may have involving the Hudson Navigation Company will await the outcome of his offer for the Citizens' Company.

All of Mr. Morse's coastwise lines have been reorganized since they came into his hands and care has been taken to adjust their capitalization with a view to an equable exchange for the securities of the merger company.

Morse's Biggest Lines.

The Clyde Line, which is one of the newest of Mr. Morse's purchases, has twenty-two steamers plying between New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Southern ports. It is capitalized at $14,000,000, and has outstanding $4,000,000 of bonds. The Mallory Line, for which Mr. Morse is understood to have paid $7,000,000 last November, has eleven vessels plying between New York and South Atlantic and Gulf ports, and is also capitalized at $14,000,000, with $3,500,000 bonds outstanding. Under the offer the bonds of the constituent companies remain undisturbed.

The Metropolitan Steamship Company has six ships in the New York and Boston trade, is capitalized at $3,000,000, and has bonds of $1,000,000. The Eastern Steamship Company, which is a consolidation of a number of small lines on the Maine coast, is capitalized at $3,000,000 and has over $1,500,000 bonds outstanding.

DEPEW TELLS WOMEN TO MIX IN POLITICS

They, Too, Can Legislate for the People's Happiness, He Says, in a Birthday Speech.

CHEERS FOR MR. HUGHES

Governor Applauded When Mentioned for the Presidency at a Luncheon of Woman's Republican Association.

The Woman's Republican Association of the State of New York celebrated Chauncey M. Depew's birthday, listened to its new glee club, and held it bi-ennial election yesterday. It was an all-day gala session, with the election and reports in the morning and a reception and luncheon with addresses in the big ballroom at Delmonico's following.

The ballroom was decorated with flags, there were smaller ones on several of the tables, a bugler from Governors Island bugled, and the glee club sang. There was a flag on the menu cards and a tri-color ice was served in red, white, and blue cups.

The unfurling of a flag was scheduled. It hung on a line in the centre of the room, and after the sounding of the reveille from the balcony it should have dropped with at least apparent spontaneity, but it didn't.

"Our flag will not come down," said Miss Helen Varick Boswell, rising to the occasion. "It cannot be pulled down," she added, as the bugler sounded again for boots and saddles and the flag bobbed a little under stress of a wild jerk.

"But we can see the stars," said Chauncey Depew; "they never fail us."

Mr. and Mrs. Depew, with Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Olcott, were the guests of honor. Mr. Depew's last speech to the Woman's Republican Club was made at its first meeting in 1899, and he was introduced as its real organizer. Yesterday he told what he thought of women who were interested in politics. In his opinion, he said, they could go as far as they liked, even to voting.

"When legislation makes for the happiness of the people," he said, "there is nothing men can do that women should not. I have asked the Congressmen in the States where women vote what the conditions were, and they have said that the woman's vote was a constant check on bad things and bad men.

"I asked a woman whom I met at the station in a town in one of those States what she thought about suffrage. She was about four feet high and her husband was seven.

"'Do you always vote as your husband wishes you to?' I asked.

"'Not much,' she answered emphatically.

"Then her husband felt that he was four feet and she seven.

"The women in England have long done much in politics, some of them doing actual work outside, and others, the more conservative, active in the salons where they do more than their husbands to influence politics."

Mr. Depew ran over the list of possible Presidential candidates, and the women applauded those they most favored, beginning with Roosevelt and giving Gov. Hughes the greatest share of applause.

"I am 45 years old to-day," said Mr. Depew, who was introduced as being a birthday celebrant, "though you may not think it, and I am a happy man for four reasons. First, because I married the right woman; second, because I am an American; third, because I am a New Yorker, and, fourth, because I am a Republican."

"I am a little afraid to go as far as Senator Depew does and say that women should vote," said Mr. Olcott. "I am afraid we men would have to compromise too much. I remember that story of the newly married man who was asked if he and his wife always agreed. He said no, but when they didn't they compromised.

"'Sometimes, you see,' he explained, 'Mrs. Smith will wish a red carpet, and I will prefer a green one. And then we compromise and get a red.'"

Miss Boswell described the Democratic Party in verse, comparing it to the "lightning bug":

The lightning bug is brilliant, but it hasn't any mind;
It stumbles through creation with its searchlight on behind.

The Glee Club sang with Mrs. Laura Sedgwick Collins, its leader, beating time, and one patriotic song was original—words and music by her.

The West End Woman's Republican Club was out in large numbers, 32, with a big centre table decorated with flags and its own banner for a centrepiece. It had for its guest of honor the one man at the table, the husband of its President, Mrs. William Grant Brown.

Mr. Brown apparently enjoyed his distinction of being the only man among thirty-one women, and ate his luncheon as though he had not been the bone of contention which nearly disrupted the West End Club in January. That was when its election took place, and Mrs. Brown, as a candidate, was strongly opposed by a faction of the society, which accused her of being the wife of a dearst man and therefore not possible as a good Republican President.

"We always accept husbands as honorary adjuncts to our officers," said a West End member yesterday.

The following officers were elected for the State Society: President—Mrs. James Griswold Wentz; Vice Presidents—Miss Helen Varick Boswell, Mrs. Frank B. Church, Mrs. C. L. Robinson, Mrs. William Cummings Story, Mrs. Charles Lloyd, Mrs. C. W. Fisk, Mrs. J. Mortimer Bell, Mrs. William Grant Brown; Recording Secretary—Mrs. Conrad Ruthrauff; Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. D. O. Haynes; Treasurer—Mrs. R. C. Benedict; Auditor—Mrs. Andrew Perry; Chairman Executive Committee—Mrs. Clarence Burns; Vice Chairman—Mrs. Jane Pierce.

COURT REMOVES SOUTHGATE.

Orders Him to Make Accounting of Whitmore Trust Fund.

Supreme Court Justice Leventritt decided yesterday to remove Henry Southgate as trustee of Harriet A. Whitmore, for whom a fund was provided by the will of Charles L. R. Hutchinson.

The plaintiff, Mrs. Whitmore, was Harriet A. Hume when Mr. Hutchinson died, in 1890. She was made the beneficiary of a trust fund of $70,000, the income to be paid to her for life. The estate consisted of cash and a certain debt owed by the firm of A. Hutchinson & Co. of Paris. Mr. Southgate was made the trustee, and $25,532.94 of the fund was paid over to him. The debt of A. Hutchinson & Co. was assigned to the Continental Trust Company, which collected the interest and turned it over to Southgate.

The complaint says that between 1894 and 1896, Southgate received $45,735, from which he deducted $4,735 for his commissions and expenses. Subsequently, the Continental Trust Company deposited to his credit the sum of $3,840.

Mrs. Whitmore alleges that since May, 1896, Southgate has paid her only $2,500, and that he has appropriated to his own use $1,061. In July, 1896, she alleges, he offered her $1,000 if she would agree to return to him $150. She was in great need at the time and accepted.

Justice Leventritt held that Mr. Southgate had been guilty of a breach of trust, and directed his removal, and that another trustee be appointed. He also directs Mr. Southgate to make an accounting.

CHIHUAHUA DOGS SCARCE.

Consul General Says That It Is Hard to Get True Specimens.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Consul General A. L. M. Gottschalk of Mexico City, in responding to numerous inquiries from persons in the United States in regard to the purchase of Chihuahua dogs, says:

"The Chihuahua dog, which as late as twenty-five years ago was quite commonly to be found in Mexico, is a curious little creature, popularly supposed to be a cross breed between the prairie dog and the jackrabbit. The animal resembles a small dog, whose weight is sometimes not over one and one-half pounds, with a disproportionately large head, bulging eyes, and long ears. The hair is usually scanty, showing the pink skin underneath. One of the marks is said to be an unclosed cranial fissure, through which the brain can be felt throbbing underneath the skin. These little animals are particularly destructive, and are constantly scratching at things with their long claws. They are quite susceptible of taming, if taken young, and in numerous instances the breed has been domesticated, although they seldom show the usual dog traits of sagacious and intelligent attachment.

"Unfortunately within the last twenty-five years the breed has become so largely mixed with small dogs of various mongrel types that it is now a most difficult thing to find in Mexico an example of the true breed. Such are sold occasionally at prices ranging from 200 Mexican pesos ($99.60 United States currency) upward. Even in Chihuahua these dogs are very rare. A few recent specimens sold in this city are said to have been specimens of the true breed."

DANGER IN FREE EYEGLASSES.

Jacob Mack Says It Threatens Schools with Dangerous Socialism.

Jacob W. Mack, Chairman of the Committee on Education of the City Club, has presented to the Board of Education a statement in regard to the question of providing eyeglasses for school children having defective sight, in which he says:

"I know something about the subject of deficient and atypical children, (physically and mentally,) and gave it much attention while Chairman of the Committee on Elementary Schools. It is perfectly proper for the Board of Education to see to it that only physically normal children attend the classes, and that deficiency of the eye, the ear, adenoid growths, and similar ills be cured in the interest of the children themselves and their classmates.

"But it is an entirely different matter to alleviate any of these conditions at the expense of the municipality. This smacks of Socialism, of a paternalism which is threatening to creep into our political system, and which should be strenuously opposed. One of its manifestations went even so far as to suggest or recommend the feeding of school children, and thus to relieve parents of the very first duty of parenthood. Only a portion of the children would avail themselves of the privilege; they would not remain unknown, and a line of demarkation between those who "have" and those who "have not" would be drawn, which it would be hard to obliterate. It would throw upon the schools the taint and reproach of charity schools, from which they would not recover in years.

"Let it be made known that there are so many children who need eyeglasses and whose parents are unable to furnish them, (others should be compelled to,) and I have no doubt that the needed eyeglasses will be provided promptly, without difficulty, and without calling upon the public Treasury. The public school system has been established to furnish education; it has not been established to furnish food, clothing, or eyeglasses."

TRIES SUICIDE ON LINER.

Second Engineer of the San Marcos Cuts His Throat.

When the Mallory liner San Marcos, from Galveston, reached Quarantine yesterday, her officers reported that earlier in the morning Second Engineer Hank Shaffer had attempted suicide by cutting his throat. Chief Engineer Allen found Shaffer unconscious in his stateroom. Immediately on the arrival of the vessel Shaffer was removed to the Hudson Street Hospital, where his condition was said to be very serious.

Capt. Davidson of the San Marcos said Shaffer had been in the employ of the line for several years and was well liked by every one connected with the company. He could give no reason why the man should want to end his life.

THINKS HE IS THE MAYOR.

Wife Wants David A. Ross Judicially Declared Insane.

Supreme Court Justice Bischoff signed an order yesterday for a commission to inquire into the sanity of David A. Ross of McGraw and Hammond Avenues. The application was made by his wife, Caroline S. Ross.

She declares that her husband is now a patient in the Manhattan State Hospital on Ward's Island. She says he is violently insane, imagining himself to be the Mayor of New York, and she wants him declared incompetent to care for his property, which amounts to about $30,000 in real and personal estate. He was committed to the asylum after attempting to set fire to his home.

FREMONT DENIES INTENT TO DECEIVE

Major Takes Stand in His Own Behalf Before the Court-Martial.

EXPECTED SISTER'S AID

Never Said He Owned Her San Francisco Properties So as to Get Loans from Banks.

Major Francis P. Frémont, U. S. A., who is being tried by court-martial in the Army Building on charges preferred against him by the officials of two Plattsburg (N. Y.) National banks, went on the stand in his own defense yesterday in an attempt to prove that he was perfectly sincere in his intentions to repay the various loans that the banks made to him, and the non-payment of which is the cause of his present trouble. He denied that he told the bankers that he was owner of the San Francisco properties, that he claims a contingent interest in, and said that he was sure that his sister, Miss Elizabeth Frémont, the owner of the property in San Francisco, would advance him sufficient funds to pay his indebtedness when those properties were sold.

The first and only witness called by the Government prior to Major Frémont taking the stand was E. G. Vaughn, President of the National Bank of Cuba. He testified that the Bank of Cuba had loaned on the joint note of Major Frémont and A. J. Finley $2,500 in July, 1905. The signature of Major Frémont, he said, was the security on which the bank made the loan. Several months after the loan was made, he said, it was repaid by a Havana firm out of the proceeds of the Frémont-Donnelly tobacco plantation.

The testimony of Mr. Vaughn ended the Government's case, and Mr. Loftus of counsel for Major Frémont asked defendant to take the stand. Mr. Loftus first asked Major Frémont to tell the facts relative to the loan of $300 he got in March, 1905, from the Thirty-fourth Street National Bank of this city. Major Frémont said that he borrowed the money without security.

"I was in the tobacco business at the time," said Major Frémont, "and also had an interest in some waterfront lots in the City of San Francisco. I told Mr. Braine, the Vice President of the bank, that I would receive some money when those lots were sold, in reference to which I referred him to M. M. Michael, counsel in San Francisco for the Frémont estate. I never stated to Mr. Braine or to any one else that I was the owner of the lots."

Major Frémont's relations with E. J. Donnelly, his partner in the Cuban plantation venture, were next gone into by Mr. Loftus. Major Frémont said that he and Donnelly entered into an oral agreement, each agreeing to put up $1,500. A. J. Finley, who signed the National Bank of Cuba note with him, was made the manager of the plantation, and he understood, Major Frémont added, that Finley's expenses were to be paid out of the business, and that he was in nowise to be held personally responsible for them. Finley's expenses, he said, were advanced by Donnelly at the latter's own suggestion.

Mr. Loftus next requested Major Frémont to tell of his dealings with the Plattsburg banks, the institutions that finally brought the non-payment of his notes to the attenion of the War Department in Washington, which information was the cause of the Major being court-martialed.

Major Frémont admitted making all of the loans referred to in the Government specifications, but declared that at no time had he stated, as is charged, that he was the owner of the properties in San Francisco.

"Did you state to Mr. Johnson, the cashier of the First National Bank of Plattsburg," Mr. Loftus asked, "that you owned a valuable ranch in Cuba that was yielding large returns?"

"No, Sir, I never made any such remark."

A letter was then read from Mr. Johnson to Major Frémont, in which Mr. Johnson stated that the bank was going to press its claim and that the War Department had been notified of these intentions. Major Frémont's letter in reply was read. He said that owing to the failure of his partner in the Cuban venture to meet certain obligations he was not able to meet his indebtedness to the bank at that time, but that if he had an opportunity he would liquidate in full later. In the letter he denied any desire to avoid payment.

Major Frémont's dealings with the Plattsburg National Bank were next referred to. He said that he told the officers of this bank that he would eventually be in a position to pay off all his debts.

"Did you believe your sister when she said she would allow you sufficient funds out of the sale of the San Francisco property to pay your debts?" Mr. Loftus asked.

"I did, and I believe her still, and when I get the money it will be used to pay off my debts, as I always intended it should be used," replied Major Frémont.

Major Frémont stated that he believed the property in question to be worth anywhere from $20,000 to $40,000.

This closed the direct examination. Capt. Glasgow, the Judge Advocate, in charge of the Government case, will begin the cross-examination at 2 o'clock this afternoon, until which hour the court adjourned.

CARMANIA'S SAILING DELAYED BY FOG

Sir Robert Cranston Goes Home, Approving Our Police and Subway Express Service,

BUT CRITICISING STREETS

Big Bookings of the Steamship Lines Indicate That Summer Rush to Europe Is Well Under Way.

That the rush to Europe is now well under way was indicated by the large number of saloon passengers who sailed for England on the Cunard liner Carmania yesterday afternoon. The Carmania was scheduled to sail at noon, but at that hour the fog that hung over the river was so thick that it was decided to hold the steamship in port until the atmosphere became clearer. The result was that it was 1 o'clock before the big Cunarder backed out into the river and headed for the Hook on her way to sea.

Among the many passengers on board were ex-Lord Provost of Edinburgh, Sir Robert Cranston and Lady Cranston. Sir Rohert is one of the prominent foreigners who came over, at the invitation of Mr. Carnegie, to attend the dedication ceremonies of the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburg. He ended his visit by lunching with District Attorney Jerome yesterday morning, after which the District Attorney showed him through the Criminal Court Building and the Tombs.

"What most impressed me," said Sir Robert, speaking of his visit to New York, "was the awful state of the streets in this city. Such streets would not be permitted even in the small provincial cities of Great Britain. I do not know who is to blame for it, but I noticed several streets where the paving stones appeared to have been thrown in loosely in any fashion. Speaking of your police officers, I will say that they are very courteous, and give their directions with great precision. Your Subways—especially the express service—are vastly superior to our own."

Another guest of Mr. Carnegie's who sailed was Sir William H. Preece, the electrical engineer. He declared himself delighted with his visit to the United States.

Others on board were A. E. Dyment, M. P.; Mr. and Mrs. Milne Barbour, T. D. Fairbanks, George W. Fairchild, Mr. and Mrs. Morton F. Plant, Col. F. L. Leland, Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Platt, and Mr. and Mrs. Martin Voorhees.

Among the passengers booked to sail for Liverpool on the White Star liner Oceanic to-day are:

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis L. Abbott, Sydney Ainsworth, Mr. and Mrs. George L. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Boardman, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Baldwin, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Breese, Harry Calhoun, P. W. Clement, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Constable, Mrs. H. D. Cruiksbank, Mr. and Mrs. James D. Davidson, Mrs. W. P. Douglas, George R. Fearing, Dr. H. Ford, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Grossman, Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Hampton, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hemingway, Gen. C. J. Langdon, Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Leggett, G. H. Putnam, Herbert Putnam, Mrs. Roland Redmond, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Sterling, H. Hanbury Tracey, Mr. and Mrs. McL. Van Ingen, Capt. Wyndham Walker, and Miss Marjorie Wood.

Some of the passengers who are booked to sail for Bermuda on the Bermudian are:

D. W. Coleman, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Clough, Philip Diehl, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Gilsey, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Grafton, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Hollis, Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Illingworth, Mrs. C. L. Kendall, Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Lowell, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Milliken, the Rev. Glenn T. Morse, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Oakley, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Wilson, and L. H. Wood.

Among the passengers who arrived from Antwerp on the Red Star liner Zeeland yesterday were Mrs. A. W. Barnum, Mr. and Mrs. Victor Bouch, Mrs. R. O. Brigham, Mr. and Mrs. Andre de Montpellier d'Annevole, H. P. Fessenden, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Howe, Mr. and Mrs. Franz Muller, W. R. Robeson, and Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Wallace.

ROXBURYS ARE SEPARATED.

No Alimony for Wife, Though Contractor Has $25,000 Income.

Supreme Court Justice Dowling signed a decree of separation yesterday in favor of Sarah M. Roxbury against Theodore H. Roxbury, a contractor. Although the plaintiff testified that her husband had an income of more than $25,000 a year, there is no provision for alimony in the decree.

Mr. and Mrs. Roxbury were married on Nov. 21, 1893, and lived together until 1905. The plaintiff declared that her husband treated her cruelly.

INCENDIARY FIRE IN FRENCH ARSENAL

Great Naval Base at Toulon Heavily Damaged and Over Thirty Men Injured.

PIECES OF FUSE FOUND

Fire Brigade Summoned to Other Side of the Town Just Before the Blaze Started.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

PARIS, April 23.—There is a strong impression that the fire at Toulon Arsenal, which caused damage approximating 3,000,000 francs, was due to malevolence. It was not alone the fact that pieces of fuse were found at the spot where the fire started, but a number of other circumstances point to the probability that the blaze was incendiary. For instance, just before the alarm was given the arsenal fire brigades were called to the other side of the town.

It is recalled that the minority of the Senatorial committee appointed to investigate the loss of the Iéna were convinced that the disaster to the battleship was not accidental, and drew up a report which was not made public entirely, but the gist of which is well known in inner circles.

There have been no fewer than six so-called accidents at the Toulon Arsenal during the last eighteen months, whereas the Forges et Chantiers de la Mediterranée, whose works are just opposite the arsenal, and which is a private company, has been quite free from accidents. The Government works are the hotbed of revolutionary unrest and anarchism, as recent experiences in the eight-hour-day labor agitation demonstrated conclusively.

TOULON, April 23.—For the sixth time within a few months this port has been stricken by disaster from fire, but, fortunately, this time the resultant damage is principally material.

Shortly after midnight last night a sentry on duty at the arsenal noticed the glare of flames in a storehouse used for rope yarn. He at once gave the alarm, and soldiers, men from the crews of warships in port, and employes of the arsenal were turned out to fight the flames. The fire spread with incredible rapidity. The buildings in the vicinity of the storehouse contained 200,000 pounds of material to clean machinery, 80,000 pounds of oakum, 5,000 sponges, enormous quantities of ballast baskets, hampers, sallcloth, turpentine, linseed oil, and other inflammable articles.

The flames were soon soaring over the arsenal wall and licking the sides of some thirty dwelling houses just outside, inhabited by 500 or 600 people. These residents fled half clad to the street.

Every available man was engaged in efforts to control the conflagration, and the task of fighting the flames was conducted at great personal risk all day long. It was late this afternoon before the fire was under control.

A survey of the scene shows that five large buildings have been completely destroyed, while the submarine depot, the torpedo workshop, and the torpedo school have been seriously damaged.

It is reported that more than thirty men were injured by falling walls, and some of them are not expected to recover.

The cause of the fire has not yet been ascertained. The finding of two pieces of fuse of a kind not used in the French Navy has aroused suspicion that it was not altogether accidental. A rigorous investigation is being conducted.

Minister of Labor Viviani arrived here from Nice this evening and visited the ruins in company with the Maritime Prefect.

CAVALRY CHARGES STRIKERS.

Prevents Rescue of Rioters Arrested by Paris Police.

PARIS, April 23.—A fierce encounter between striking waiters and bakers and a body of police took place this morning in the Rue du Louvre, outside an annex to the Labor Exchange. Many arrests were made and the strikers attempted to rescue the prisoners, whereupon a detachment of Cuirassiers charged and dispersed the rioters.

Manifestos denouncing militarism, couched in even more violent language than those posted in Paris last night, appealing to the troops to refuse to act against strikers, have been placarded throughout the provinces. The Government is about to take severe measures against the authors of these publications.

SIR CHENTUNG'S SUCCESSOR.

Liang Tun-Yen, Who Will Be Minister at Washington, Is a Yale Man.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Details of the change in the Chinese mission received in Washington make evident the fact that this is a very considerable promotion in the diplomatic field for Sir Chentung Liang Cheng, Minister to Washington. He is to be appointed junior of the Vice President of the Chinese Board of Foreign Affairs created after the suppression of the Boxer uprising.

Tang Shao Yi, whom Minister Cheng is to succeed, has, it is learned, been selected to be Governor of Mukden, Manchuria. A short time ago he was officially degraded because he had practiced nepotism, but has since been restored to full favor.

Liang Tun-Yen, who is to succeed Sir Chentung Liang Cheng as Minister to Washington, is at present Chinese Customs Taotai at Tien-Tsin. He speaks English perfectly, and is a graduate of Yale and a man of advanced ideas.

BANKS REDUCE RATES.

Bank of England May Follow Lead of Two Continental Institutions.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

LONDON, April 23.—Their official rates have been reduced one-half per cent. by both the Imperial Bank of Germany and the Bank of the Netherlands, and it is quite generally expected that the Bank of England will follow suit on Thursday. Moreover, a reduction in the rate of the Bank of France is regarded as a possibility of the near future.

It is believed by many London financiers that the great improvement in the money market has been largely wrought by the sharp reduction of prices on the New York Stock Exchange. It takes a good deal less money to finance American securities than formerly.

BRITISH DEFENSE PLANS.

Colonial Premiers Adopt Resolution for a General Staff.

LONDON, April 23.—War Secretary Haldane's Territorial Army bill passed its second reading in the House of Commons to-night. On concluding his speech on the measure, Mr. Haldane said:

"I am rejoiced to think that the Colonial Premiers, in their recent conferences have been unanimous in agreeing that this is the best pattern of an organization, and that just as we have proposed this organization for the territorial force for home defense, so they have proposed to keep our pattern in view in the organization of their own home forces. Thus there will be a chain of territorial forces throughout the empire which may give us some real security.

"I believe that by organizing to enable the people to defend themselves we shall get rid of that unrest and lack of tranquility which are the strongest impelling forces toward compulsory military service. The Government takes its stand upon this bill as a bulwark against compulsion in any shape or form."

To-day's sitting of the Imperial Conference was devoted entirely to discussing matters connected with the defense of the Empire. The resolution providing for the creation of a General Staff for the Empire, which was discussed and eventually tabled April 20, was again brought up and finally adopted with a few verbal changes. It includes provisions for the interchange of officers representing the Imperial Government and the colonies.

The First Lord of the Admiralty, Lord Tweedmouth, outlined a scheme for imperial naval defense and lengthily discussed its general trend. The remarks of the Colonial Premiers on the subject were in favor of a discontinuance of the colonial contributions, which hitherto have been sunk in the general naval expenditure, and the substitution of a system by which the colonies may man and keep up a certain number of ships, to be supplied by Great Britain, and undertake to maintain coaling stations and ammunition and food depots available to the imperial navy.

Observers note the extreme cordiality which has sprung up between Premier Laurier and Premier Botha. Gen. Botha has been so impressed with Sir Wilfrid Laurier's deep insight into affairs appertaining to a self-governing colony that he has given him a pressing invitation to visit the Transvaal, believing that the speciacle of the brilliant and accomplished statesman of foreign descent, yet an advocate of the highest traditions of the British Empire, will have a splendid effect on the people of the Transvaal. It is noted also that both Laurier and Botha invariably agree in the discussions of the conference.

Error of Judgment Cost 100 Lives.

LONDON, April 23.—The Court of Inquiry appointed to investigate the wreck of the British steamer Berlin off the Hook of Holland on Feb. 21, resulting in the loss of over 100 lives, found to-day that it was due to error of judgment on the part of the Captain in attempting to enter the new waterway under the weather conditions then prevailing.

Notes of Foreign News.

TANGIER, April 23.—The Sultan has appointed two Commissioners to confer with M. Destailleur, the French Commissioner for the regulation of the Algerian-Moroccan frontier, under the agreements of 1901 and 1902.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 23.—William Dudley Foulke of New York, ex-Chairman of the Special Commission of the National Civil Service Reform League and ex-United States Civil Service Commissioner, has arrived in St. Petersburg for the purpose of studying the methods of the Russian Parliament.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 23.—Major William W. Gibson, the Military Attache here of the United States, has gone to Sweden, where he will meet Capt. Herman J. Koehler, instructor of military gymnastics and physical culture at West Point, who is making a tour of Europe, studying military gymnastics. Major Gibson, who is also Military Attache to Sweden, will make arrangements to present Capt. Koehler to the Swedish officials and to enable him to visit the schools and gymnasiums.

ROME, April 23.—The report that Mgr. Sbarretti, the Papal Delegate in Canada, who is now in this city, will not return to Ottawa, owing to family reasons, turns out to be incorrect. It is now stated that the delegate will go back to Canada with the Canadian Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who is now in London, attending the Imperial Council. In Vatican circles it is considered most likely that Mgr. J. Farrelly, spiritual director of the American College here, will be appointed coadjutor of Bishop McCloskey of Louisville, Ky.

HAVANA, April 23.—Gov. Magoon to-day signed a decree granting amnesty to the members of the armed forces of Cuba who have been found guilty of committing offenses during the recent revolution.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 23.—The report cabled from Vienna that Bulgarian bandits sacked the monastery of St. Amerigiri, in Macedonia, after killing the Abbot and thirty monks, is without foundation. It is undoubtedly an exaggerated rendering of a recent unconfirmed rumor that three monks of this monastery had been murdered.

BRUSSELS, April 23.—King Leopold to-day held a lengthy conference with M. de Trooz, the Minister of the Interior, who has been attempting to form a new Cabinet, and in well-informed circles it is considered certain that he will accomplish his task. Troops were encamped throughout the night in Laeken Park in consequence of threats on the part of the Socialists to march on the palace, but none appeared.

MADRID, April 23.—Queen Victoria, who is expected to become a mother any day this week, maintains her strength in a remarkable manner. King Alfonso presided to-day at the swearing in of the recruits, and Queen Victoria, who was accompanied by the Dowager Queen, Maria Christina, was present in a carriage at the saluting point to witness the march past of the troops, which marked the close of the day's ceremony. After the march past of the troops Queen Victoria drove in the park with King Alfonso.

CZAR IS SATISFIED WITH DUMA'S WORK

Congratulates Golovin and Looks for Co-operation Between Ministry and Parliament.

TORTURE IN RIGA PRISON

Guilt of Officials Admitted and Their Punishment Promised—Jews Fear More Pogroms.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 23.—M. Golovin, President of the lower house of Parliament, was received in audience by Emperor Nicholas to-day. The reception accorded M. Golovin is described as magnificent, and it has completely dispelled the fears that disaster would reward the moderation shown by the Constitutional Democrats in their tactics.

His Majesty congratulated M. Golovin upon his successful guidance of the legislative work of the Duma, and conversed for some time upon the details of what has been accomplished in the last month. He handed to the President of the lower house a written memorandum on this subject.

Upon parting the Emperor expressly voiced his confidence that the Ministry would be able to co-operate with the Duma.

The interpellation of the Government in the lower house of Parliament April 15 on the subject of the mutiny in the prison at Riga April 13, when seven mutineers were killed and twelve wounded, was the subject of a debate in the lower house of Parliament to-day.

M. Pergament, Constitutional Democrat and a prominent lawyer of Kherson, read the reports of the Interpellation Committee, which contained details of about seventy cases of alleged torture in which the names of the victims were given. It was stated that they were beaten on sensitive parts of their bodies with Cossacks' whips and rubber rods, that their finger nails and hair were pulled out, &c. The tortures in a number of cases were prolonged for eight to ten days. One man, who was only 22 years old, looked like an old man after having been tortured.

The report added that it was difficult to determine exactly the number of victims, but it could safely be assumed that all who were sentenced by drumhead courts-martial or who overpowered the prison officers at Riga on April 13 passed through the torture chamber.

The Vice Minister of the Interior, M. Makaroff, and the Vice Minister of Justice, M. Lutvi, replied in behalf of the Government. M. Makaroff detailed the results of the official investigation into the charges brought against the prison officials of Riga in March last, which were shown to be well founded. The prisoners were clubbed by the police at the time of their arrest and in the course of their examination, in attempts to force confessions from them, and Premier Stolypin ordered that proceedings be commenced against the guilty persons. Continuing, M. Makaroff assured the House that the Government had no intention of overlooking crimes committed by officials, and that the prosecution of the guilty persons had already begun.

In view of the repeated telegrams from their constituents, reiterating fears of anti-Jewish excesses at the Russian Easter, which begins April 28, caused by the circulation of Black Hundred publications openly appealing to the Union of the True Russian People to slay the Jews, a delegation of members of the lower house of Parliament from the Government's pale called on Premier Stolypin to-day and asked him to give orders for the prevention of such publications and assure the panic-stricken population that order would be maintained.

M. Stolypin promised to telegraph to the Governors instructing them to take all the measures possible for the prevention of disorder and reassure the Jewish population that no excesses would be permitted.

Gen. Rheinbot, Prefect of Police of Moscow, whose life was twice attempted by Terrorists and who is now abroad on leave of absence, will not resume his post, according to current report.

A court-martial at Tver yesterday sentenced a student named Jilinsky, the assassin of Gen. Count Alexis P. Ignatieff, to eleven years' imprisonment in the mines, and condemned an accomplice, Tselsiovsky, to deportation for life.

The various labor parties and fighting organizations of Lodz have concluded a peace, and as a result the murders and assaults of the past few weeks probably will come to an end.

A band of armed robbers drove up to the Post Office in Sebastopol this afternoon, made the officials hoip up their hands under penalty of being shot, took $5,000 of the Post Office funds and escaped.

AMERICAN IN RUSSIAN PRISON.

Dombrowski Suspected of Carrying on Political Agitation.

WARSAW, Russian Poland, April 23.—A naturalized American citizen named Dombrowski, bearing a passport issued in Washington in 1904, was arrested recently by the authorities at Lublin and brought here three days ago.

He is confined in the overcrowded prison for suspects, and the local authorities believe he is even now conducting political agitation. They are investigating the matter. Dombrowski's occupation is not known.

$10,250,000 FOR FORTRESSES.

Germany Expects to Rebuild Them Before War Breaks Out.

BERLIN, April 23.—During the discussion in the Reichstag to-day of the army appropriation, Gen. von Einem, the Minister of War, made mention of the difficulties encountered by the army administration recently because of the purpose of the Government to rearm the field artillery, the foot artillery, and the infantry as quickly as possible.

The extraordinary expenses in the army appropriation for 1907 include $10,250,000 for the rebuilding of fortresses, against $5,250,000 for this same purpose in the appropriation of 1906. The Minister said he thought it would be possible to complete the rearming and the rebuilding of fortifications before an outbreak of war. No member of the Reichstag could wish, Gen. von Einem went on, for conditions similar to those in France two years ago, when hundreds of millions were thrown on the frontier in order to get ready for war at a time when political clouds were gathering on the horizon.

RESISTED OUR MARINES.

Honduran Colonel Apologized for This and for Insulting British Flag.

PUERTO CORTEZ, April 17. (Via New Orleans, April 23.)—An amusing instance of the armed resistance to American marines by Honduran revolutionists came to light yesterday in the official correspondence of the American gunboat Marietta. Col. Luis Isaulla, a revolutionist in command of the port of Tela, Honduras, drew a revolver upon Ensign McNair of the Marietta when the latter was sent ashore at Tela to say that American marines would protect foreign property. Col. Isaulla threatened to kill the ensign if he did not desist in his purpose of landing marines.

Commander Fullam of the Marietta sent a body of marines ashore to demand an apology from Isaulla. These marines found the Colonel with eight men drawn up in skirmish line and were told that Col. Isaulla demanded an apology of the Americans. When, however, the Americans advanced and said they intended to have an apology Isaulla backed down and wrote one.

Among the acts for which an apology was asked was the cutting down of a British flag at Salado. Isaulla's soldiers threatened the life of William Collins, a British subject, who had raised his flag for protection. Commander Fullam informed the Colonel that the American marines would not allow insults to the British flag.

PUNCH BOWL FOR SIR PERCY.

Dinner for the Retiring British Consul General.

To Sir Percy Sanderson, the retiring British Consul General to New York, Ambassador Bryce and the St. George's Society paid tribute last night at the annual dinner of the St. George's Society at the Waldorf. It was St. George's Day, and red roses were worn by all the members, not only in honor of England, but of Mr. Bryce, whose first Cabinet appointment was as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, whose emblem, since the wars of the roses, has been the red rose.

A large punch bowl, the gift of the society, was presented to Sir Percy. It was engraved with a wolf's head, his family crest, round which was placed a collar, the heraldic symbol of a peer, in recognition of the fact that his brother, for many years the Permanent Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in England, has lately been elevated to the peerage. In reference to both Lord Sanderson and Sir Percy, Mr. Bryce had something to say about the civil service system of Great Britain.

"I doubt if ever England has been so worthily represented in New York as by Sir Percy," he said. "We could not wish to have moving through the streets of this city a better type of the best of Englishmen. His uprightness, his geniality, his determination to maintain the just interests of his own country with due consideration for the rights of everybody else, are an excellent example of the qualities of the civil service of England.

Mr. Bryce also spoke of the four patron saints of England, Scotland Ireland, and Wales—St. George, St. Andrew, St. Patrick, and St. David.

The Rev. Dr. Parker Morgan proposed the health of Sir Percy and expressed his wonder at the way in which the retiring Consul General was standing six weeks of continual dining. He told the guests that it was because the same caution which had characterized Sir Percy's public utterances in New York and had enabled him to speak at the greatest crises for fifteen minutes without saying anything, has taught him never to mix his liquors.

Then the punchbowl was presented to Sir Percy by J. Grote Higgens, President of the society, but not before it had caused the officers of the society some anxious moments. It had been exhibited in the reception hall guarded by a detective, but toward the end of the dinner it could not be found. Oscar declared it had never been in the charge of the hotel, and one room securely locked after another was opened to no purpose. At last it was discovered hidden away under a plebeian covering in the corner of the ladies' gallery.

In acknowledging the presentation, Sir Percy said:

"The prophet of old said, 'Out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh'; it is not so with me. I have a difficulty in expressing what I feel. I thank you for the generous assistance you have given me. When I came here from Roumania, a country foreign in speech and ideas, St. George's Society appealed to me as few other societies could. To the Consular office it is a great help to have a society ever willing to assist in the investigation of the numerous cases of distress, some of them worthy, which came before me.

"Now, I have to thank you also for this very handsome gift. It will not be needed to remind me of all that you have done for me. I hope from time to time to revisit you, but, however that may be, I wish you all health, long life, and all the pleasures that can come from these."

The Rev. Dr. Cadman proposed "The Day We Celebrate," and District Attorney Jerome was down to give "The Land We Live In." He was unable to attend and F. W. Whitridge, former Special United States Ambassador to Spain, took his place.

Richmond's Oldest Woman Dead.

Mrs. Catherine Decker, the oldest woman in Richmond Borough, died yesterday. She was 99 years and 5 months old. Up to a couple of weeks ago she was strong and vigorous and able to read without glasses. She was born in a cottage almost on the spot where stands the house in which she died, a place on Richmond Terrace between Mariners' Harbor and Howland Hook. Of eight of her children, three are living.

STRIKING FIREMEN PUT OUT.

B. R. T. Easily Fills Their Jobs—Expects No More Trouble.

The firemen employed on the night shift at the Third Avenue power house of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, who did not appear for work on Monday night, and who tried to have the 250 firemen and helpers at the other power house of the company go out on a general strike, were discharged yesterday morning. The company had men ready to take their places. None of the men of the other shifts or at the other power houses showed any disposition to leave their jobs.

The trouble was caused by the refusal of the company to agree to a demand for an increase in pay from $2.25 to $2.50 a day for the fireman. General Manager Calderwood said yesterday that only a few firemen expressed dissatisfaction with their pay and that there would be no trouble in the future. He said the firemen are not organized or in a position to cripple the company by a strike.

WOMAN, CALM, FACES TRIAL FOR MURDER

Mme. de Massy Helps Select a Jury, Vanity Supplanting Any Sense of Fear.

CONCERNED OVER HER GARB

Defense of the Little French Widow Charged with Killing Gustav Simon Is That Another Did It.

More calm and self-contained even than her prison guard, a little Frenchwoman was led yesterday morning across the Bridge of Sighs and through the winding corridors of the Criminal Court Building, from the cell in the Tombs once occupied by Nan Patterson, to the chair in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, in which Harry Thaw so recently sat. She was Mme. Anisia Louise du Vernon de Massy, and as she took her seat at the counsel table, amid an excited buzz of comment from the special talesmen and the score or more of curious spectators, her trial began for the willful murder, on Nov. 18 of last year, of Gustav Simon, a wealthy shirtwaist manufacturer of Broadway.

The prisoner has been referred to as a Baroness, the widow of Baron de Massy, whom she was said to have married in France nineteen years ago. After her arrest, however, at the time of an inquiry into her identity, she disclaimed the title.

Before Supreme Court Justice Blanchard announced that the court had adjourned for the day, the jury of twelve, who are to decide on the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, had taken their places in the jury box. These men are:

Foreman, William H. Chaffee, a hosiery dealer of 185 West 133th Street; Philip Curtis, a broker at 25 Broad Street, and living at 67 East Eighty-second Street; Eugene J. McCan, florist at 918 Broadway; Walter Goodyear, secretary of a life insurance company, of 333 West Fifty-sixth Street; Frank J. Mattison, a traveling salesman of 314 West Fifty-sixth Street; Frederick Wetherbee, a salesman of 255 West 113th Street; Shaw Martin, a stationer of 350 East Eighty-first Street; George W. Guernsey, a bookkeeper of 257 West 128th Street; Allan William, a life insurance agent of East 240th Street and Mount Katonah Avenue, the Bronx; William F. Layton, a restaurant keeper of 1,659 Amsterdam Avenue; J. Edward Bartron, a restaurant keeper of 172 West Seventy-ninth Street, and Clarence P. Leggett, a clerk of 251 West 100th Street.

Difficulty in Obtaining Jury.

To waiting talesmen as well as to the court and spectators, the selection of the jury proved a patience-trying ordeal. The defendant, however, evinced a lively interest in the proceedings and constantly leaned forward in her chair to advise and consult with her chief counsel, Charles Le Barbier.

An evident reluctance on the part of many talesmen to sit in a murder case in which a woman was the defendant, did much to delay the choice of jurymen, and at 2 o'clock only two men had taken their places in the box. From then until 5 o'clock, the work of examination and selection or rejection proceeded more rapidly.

Assistant District Attorney Ely, who is in charge of the prosecution, frequently contented himself with merely obtaining from the talesman the assurance that he could judge the case solely on the evidence and upon its merits. In all, he used but eleven of the peremptory challenges allowed him. Mr. Le Barbier would at times accept a talesman without question, and in the next moment would challenge without apparant reason, and the talesman would be excused. At the conclusion of the day he had used twenty of the challenges allowed him.

Of all in the court room the defendant showed least the effects of the trying day.

Her chief concern seemed to be that her elaborate costume should be described properly by the newspapers. While in the custody of Deputy Sheriff Cannon, and being questioned by a reporter with regard to other matters, she insisted on making clear the details of her costume.

Vanity Above Emotion of Fear.

She said she had noticed, in the account of the Thaw trial, many inaccuracies in descriptions of the costumes of the women relatives of the prisoner, and she didn't want any such mistakes made in her case. Fixing her eye on a reporter she said, with insistence on each detail, beginning at her head:

"Black toque, with gold band and white plume."

"The plume is a feather?" asked the reporter.

"Of course it's a feather," she replied. Then she began again:

"Black toque, with gold band and white plume." Going on with the description, she announced like a fashion sheet:

"The suit is jet black, the shirtwaist of white, made to order from my own design. The skirt of the suit is sprinkled with gold tassels.

"Remember, the suit is jet black," Mme. De Massy concluded, and she went over all the details again, to be sure that no mistake should be made in the description of her appearance.

That she was on trial for her life seemed not to affect the woman. She sat at the close of the day's session as unmoved and inscrutable as she appeared when, in the hall of the Holtz Building, an elevator man seized and held her as the murderess of Gustav Simon, or when the dying man rose in his bed, and, placing his hand on her shoulder, accused her of shooting him, or, when later she learned in the Tombs that Simon was dead, and realized that she must stand trial for his murder.

A Remarkable Woman Prisoner.

She has betrayed neither fear nor nervousness throughout her long months of confinement in the Tombs prison, nor did she falter yesterday when she arose beside her counsel to plead not guilty. Never apparently has she realized the gravity of the charges in the indictment under which she is to be prosecuted, and which recount that on Nov. 18 last she entered the private office of Gustav Simon, President of the Queen Shirtwaist Company, on the seventh floor of 604 Broadway, and, drawing a revolver, fired three shots at the old man. Two of the bullets flew wild, but the third entered Simon's lung.

Since her arrest her demeanor has earned for her the title of the most remarkable woman prisoner who has ever occupied a cell in the Tombs. She has rejected every advance from fellow-prisoners and has steadfastly ignored their "good mornings" and the salutations of Matron O'Brien. Neither to the latter nor to Warden Flynn has she spoken except when the necessities of her prison life required it.

She has occupied herself in translating into English a French work, to which she has given the title, "In Hora Mortis Nostrae." She has denied herself to visitors, but for the first time received one yesterday—a man who gave the name of Maurice Hollman and said that he was an attaché of the French Consulate. More than this he refused to tell, nor would he tell of the reason or result of his visit.

Mme. de Massy has repeatedly denied the shotting for which she is now on trial. As a designer of lingerie waists, she had been in Simon's employ, but had left him. She does not deny that she called upon him on the day of the shooting. That she then quarreled with the waist manufacturer over the payment of $30 in wages is the contention of Mr. Ely, and this disagreement over the money is the only motive which the State can offer for the murder.

Counsel Outlines Her Defense.

It is known that Mr. Simon put her off when she asked for her wages, telling her to return in two hours. Instead, she left the office, but came back almost immediately to shoot her former employer, Mr. Ely alleges, and solely because of the delay in receiving the money.

The defense will enter a general denial to this. Mr. Le Barbier has already announced:

"We will show that another and an unknown person shot Mr. Simon; that this person was lying in wait for his victim when Mrs. de Massy called upon him to demand her money, and that he accomplished his purpose as the woman was leaving Mr. Simon's office to return, at his direction, in two hours."

In support of this defense Mr. Le Barbier has one important witness. He is A. H. Travis, a traveling salesman formerly in the employ of Mr. Simon, and he was the only eyewitness of the shooting. He has refused to swear that Mrs. De Massy fired the fatal shot.

"I believe she fired at Simon," he has said, "but I am not certain. I do not know whether she held the revolver."

Associated with Mr. Le Barbier in the defense of the French woman is Lawyer Charles Goode, who offered his services to Mrs. De Massy on the da yafter the shooting. According to Mr. Goode, Mr. Simon shot and almost killed his father, Michael Goode, in 1889, when the latter was City Marshal. Simon was tried, but the jury disagreed, and the case was never recalled.

WOMAN ACCUSED OF MURDER.

Mrs. Sladek Charged with Poisoning Parents—To Have Sanity Tested.

CHICAGO, April 23.—A warrant charging Mrs. Sladek with the murder of her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mette, was taken out to-day. Mrs. Mette died several years ago, and Frank Mette died on April 6. A chemical analysis has shown that Mrs. Mette was poisoned by arsenic, and it is believed that her husband's death was caused in the same manner. Three brothers of Mrs. Sladek are now critically ill.

It was decided later by State Attorney Healy that Mrs. Sladek shall be examined as to her sanity before any steps are taken in the prosecution. The examination will be held to-morrow.

$10,000 BAIL FOR LEE.

Jerome Wants to be Sure to Hold Man Who Threatened Gov. Stokes.

Acting upon a letter from Dr. Gregory, in charge of the psychopathic ward at Bellevue Hospital, the District Attorney's office asked yesterday that the bail of William J. Lee of New Jersey, who was indicted several days ago for sending threatening letters to Gov. Stokes, and who was committed to Bellevue for examination, be increased from $1,000 to $10,000. The motion was granted by Judge O'Sullivan in General Sessions.

Lee, according to Dr. Gregory, is hopelessly insane, and is unfit to be at liberty, and it was thought advisable by the District Attorney to raise his bail to an amount which he could not hope to obtain. It is expected that within a few days Judge O'Sullivan will appoint a lunacy commission, which will probably send Lee to some institution for the insane.

MANY EXPLORERS DINE.

Arctic Club Feast Held, Though Guest of Honor Is Absent.

Icicles, snowballs, and North Pole pemmican figured conspicuously last night in the menu of the Arctic Club at its dinner at the Marlborough Hotel, in honor of Col. David L. Brainard, U. S. A., one of the seven survivors of the Greely expedition. True, the icicles were only glass and the snowballs were made of plush, but the pemmican was the real article, the kind the arctic explorers eat when they are north of 75 degrees.

In spite of the shivery sounding names of many of the good things on the bill of fare, there was nothing cold about the dinner except the ice cream.

Not even the absence of the guest of honor prevented the success of the dinner. Col. Brainard was called at the last moment to the bedside of his brother, who is ill in Omaha, Neb. But before going he asked that the dinner take place.

A loving cup and a flag were presented to him by proxy. Henry Biederbeck, another of the Greely expedition survivors, accepted the gifts on behalf of the absent guest. Col. Brainard, who for several years was the head of the Commissary Department of the East, has been transferred to Department of the West, and will in the future be stationed in San Francisco.

Many arctic explorers were among the diners last night. Capt. R. S. Osborne, who was Admiral Farragut's Flag Lieutenant, was toastmaster. Others who spoke were Herschal D. Parker, who was with Dr. F. A. Cook at Mount McKinley; Capt. Samuel Bartlett, commander of the Roosevelt, in which Peary will soon make another try at the pole; Prof. H. C. Brewer of Yale, President of the Arctic Club; Dr. F. A. Cook, and Henry Biederbeck.

Other explorers who dined were Dr. R. O. Stebbins, one of the Miranda survivors; Henry Collins Walsh, also a Miranda survivor; Frederick E. Stokes, an artist, who accompanied Nordenskiold to the antarctic; Anthony Fiala, commander of the Ziegler Polar Expedition; Edwin E. Pace, Tarleton Bean, ex-Chief of the United States Fish Commission; Frederick Operti, Dr. and Mrs. L. Jamison, Sergt. Francis Long, and others. There were many ladies present.

SIXTY-NINTH'S VETERANS DINE

Lieut. Gov. Chanler Recalls the Regiment's War Record.

The Veteran Corps of the Sixty-ninth Regiment celebrated the anniversary of its departure for the civil war with a dinner last night at Shanley's, Broadway and Forty-second Street. Lieut. Gov. Chanler told again the story of how the old Sixty-ninth had been ordered out to honor the Prince of Wales; and how the officers had refused to turn the regiment out for parade; how a court-martial was ordered, and how before the court-martial could convene the civil war broke out, and the regiment went down Broadway on its way to the front.

"Then the scene changes," said the Lieutenant-Governor. "We have the actual visage of war. The Sixty-ninth did not flinch, but held its place throughout the war. The Colonel, who refused to obey the order and join in the parade, did what seemed to be discourteous, but to the officers of the Sixty-ninth the occasion meant the recognition by them of an alien race. When the country that they had made their own was threatened they were the first to come to its aid. What has been called the rebel Irishman is what we call the spirit of independence. I hope and believe that the toast, 'Ireland as a Free and Independent Nation,' will no longer be a hope, but a reality."

The Rev. Dr. David G. Wylie, pastor of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, said that peace was the period of a nation's prosperity. War was the time when a nation rapidly spent its accumulated wealth.

"But because we love peace," said he, "does not mean that war is always wrong. There are times when nations must fight. They must fight for right and righteousness, for national preservation."

The other speakers were: President of the Board of Aldermen Patrick F. McGowan, State Senator John P. Cohalan, Henry J. Breen, Chaplain Chidwick of the Maine, and Gen. Edward Duffy.

JOKE BOMB SENT TO GEN. BINGHAM

Caused Some Excitement, but Turned Out to be a Dead One.

DAILY TRANSFERS MADE

Old Jefferson Market Court Bridge Policeman Is Sent to the Detective Bureau.

Philadelphia has been playing a "joke," or something on Police Commissioner Bingham, or rather on his subordinates, he being away from his office most of yesterday. The regenerated Detective Bureau is now expected to show its mettle by finding out just who in Philadelphia did it.

The postman brought to Mulberry Street under a Philadelphia postmark yesterday a rectangular package, which he laid on the desk in the outer office of the Commissioner's suite. The package was about eight inches long, three inches wide, and two inches thick. It was wrapped in blue paper.

Acting Sergt. Mallan took it to Secretary Slattery. The address was made up of a patchwork of clipped words from newspapers, reading:

"Police Office,
"Commissioner Bingham,
"New York."

Printed in red on the package was "For Roosevelt." Secretary Slattery eyed the package dubiously. Eight cents worth of stamps had been put on the box, but what cares Philadelphia for money or trouble when humor is at stake?

Secretary Slattery decided that he didn't want to open it. He sent for Acting Sergt. Mallan, and told him to soak the package in water. Word had now gone out about the infernal machine that had been received. The Headquarters reporters were bulletining their offices. Police Lieutenants were flocking into the corridors, waiting for things to happen. They are not surprised at anything now.

Mallan is young and married. He didn't know when the thing might go off. It is said that he went behind a screen that stands in the outer office and bade a picture of his wife good-bye. Tenderly the package was picked up, and more tenderly it was carried down to the basement. Some Lieutenants got out of the building.

Leach Was Brave.

In the basement Mallan encountered William Leach, Commissioner Bingham's chauffeur. He was called upon for assistance as being one for whom explosions have no terrors. Leach was for tearing the thing open right away and seeing what was the matter with the wheels. He ran to get his oil can and monkey wrench.

The infernal machine was put to soak. All the rules as to infernal machines say that they should be soaked some two or three hours at the least, that the cap may be destroyed. But Leach couldn't wait that long to look at the wheels. The bubbles rising told that the water had gone inside the package.

After thirty minutes the outside wrapper was gingerly taken off. A bill of lading of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad was wrapped around the box. The little red tin box inside was pasted around with putty as if the maker had intended to seal it hermetically.

"This is duty," said Mallan, as he fought back Leach, who was flourishing his monkey wrench and oil can. The tin box seemed to be a cocoa box. The reporters were waved back. The Lieutenants were waved back. Breathing a prayer and restraining Leach, Mallan, with the chauffeur's assistance, pried open the top.

Mallan fell back. Even Leach was stunned, for the smell was not of gasoline. A small animal lay neatly packed in the box. It had long since died.

In the box was a clipping coutaining a paragraph of cryptic matter that ran thus:

"Heavy dinners, late suppers, whisky, wine, or beer drinking, nervous excitement, sudden exposure to cold or heat, and a dozen other everyday likelihoods tire the muscles."

Commissioner Bingham returned to Headquarters late yesterday afternoon No one got to see him except Secretary Slattery, who swore that the Commissioner didn't even know about the package from Philadelphia. If that is true, the General still has a laugh coming to him.

Then Some More Transfers.

Not a great deal was done in reorganizing the Police Department yesterday, but of course a few Lieutenants were transferred from the Detective Bureau. Eight patrolmen were sent to the bureau, including John J. Foley. For years he has been stationed on the bridge at Jefferson Market Court. He knows many crooks. It is thought he will be helpful to the Detective Bureau. President Whitman of the Board of Magistrates said last night that he was very sorry to hear that Jefferson Market was to lose Foley.

Other patrolmen transferred to the bureau were: James J. McKean from the Fifth Inspection District, James J. Reilly from the City Hall Station, Daniel Debote from the Elizabeth Street Station, Rafael Gallo from the Church Street Station, James Robinson from the Bath Beach Station, James Mugge from the Parkville Station, and Joseph Kesselmark from the East Thirty-fifth Street Station.

Lieuts. John and Charles Farley, who have long been stationed at the District Attorney's office, were transferred to Newtown and College Point, respectively—far-away precincts. It was suggested that those transfers were among the things Mr. Jerome had been consulting with the Commissioner about during his two visits in one week.

Lieuts. Michael Ready, John Cain, and John Howard, who had been transferred from the Detective Bureau on Monday to the Second Inspection District, were shipped still further away yesterday. Cain was sent to Jamaica, Howard to the Lee Avenue Station, Brooklyn, and Ready to Rockaway Beach. Lieut. George Wakefield was sent from the Detective Bureau to the City Hall Station, Lieut. William F. Boetter to the City Hall Station, and Lieut. Frederick J. Mott to the Harbor Squad at the foot of East 126th Street. Cain and Ready are said to be old McClusky favorites.

DANIELS'S NEW RECORD.

New York A. C. Swimmer Reduces World's Best Time for 80 Yards.

PITTSBURG, April 23.—Charles M. Daniels of the New York Athletic Club to-night, in the tank of the East Liberty Baths, clipped three-fifths of a second from the world's 80 yards swimming record, covering the distance in 0:43 2-5. The record was made in competition, Guy M. Dailey of Pittsburg and two New York A. C. swimmers participating. The New York team defeated the local organization in water polo by a score of 7 to 2.

Attachment Against J. R. Wilmot.

Deputy Sheriff Porgss has received an attachment for $3,176 against John R. Wilmot of 1,123 Broadway, in favor of Harry R. Lounsbery, Jr., for the amount of a check on which payment was refused. Mr. Wilmot was President and Mr. Lounsbery Assistant Manager of the National Producer Gas Power Co. Mr. Lounsbery said that the check was given to him by Mr. Wilmot for $100 deposited under a contract of employment, $75 for salary due, $500 for cash advanced on Jan. 25, and $2,500 for cash advanced on April 9. The attachment was granted on the ground that Mr. Wilmot is a resident of England.

HARRIMAN AGAIN IN COURT.

Not Forced to Tell to Whom He Read "Where Do I Stand?" Letter.

E. H. Harriman again came out victorious yesterday in a battle of words with ex-Magistrate Alfred E. Ommen, who sought to learn the identity of the person to whom Mr. Harriman has admitted that he once read his famous "Where do I stand?" letter prior to its recent publication in a morning newspaper. The occasion of the verbal duel was the resumption before Magistrate Wahle in the examination room of the Tombs Court of the hearing of Mr. Harriman's former stenographer, Frank W. Hill, charged with having sold the letter to a newspaper.

Mr. Harriman was the first witness called, and, contrary to expectation, was summoned to the stand as a witness for the defense by Mr. Ommen, who represents Hill. The former Magistrate immediately asked:

"Did you read this letter to any one outside of your own office?"

Assistant District Attorney Krotel objected to this line of inquiry, and Magistrate Wahle ruled that the State law which makes the publication of a private communication without the consent of its owner a misdemeanor, applied in this case, no matter what the Federal law, which Mr. Ommen wanted to invoke, provided.

"Mr. Harriman might have shown that letter to any one he chose," said the Magistrate. "The law in this case is plain, and I do not intend to see the case 'hippodromed.'"

Mr. Ommen made a last effort to learn to whom Mr. Harriman had read the letter by demanding:

"Did you show the letter or a copy of it to Congressman Sherman?"

Mr. Krotel's objection was sustained, and Mr. Ommen turned to a consideration of Mr. Harriman's efforts to stop the publication of his letter.

Mr. Harriman said he had kept a man in the office of the newspaper which published the letter until after the paper had gone to press in an effort to prevent the publication. He had also called up on the telephone another paper and had been told that the Sidney Webster letter was not to be used.

"I was surprised in the morning," Mr. Harriman added, "to see that this paper had also published the letter."

Mr. Ommen then announced that he rested his case. Magistrate Wahle gave him until April 29 to file a brief on the point as to whether the State or Federal law applied in this case, and promised to announce his decision in the Jefferson Market Court on May 1.

TAGS ON WRONG STEEDS.

Auctioneer Accused of Substituting Inferior Horses for Those He Sold.

A charge against Henry Hyams, Jr., in the Yorkville Court yesterday, brought out some details concerning an alleged swindle that seems to be slightly new. Hyams lives at 174 Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn. He said he was an auctioneer.

Hugh J. Ward, an expressman of 657 Sixth Avenue, said that on March 27 he had purchased four horses at an auction in the stables of the Central Brewing Company, First Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street, bidding $312. He put down a deposit, returning in the afternoon with the balance. When he came back he found that the tags had been removed from the horses he had bid on and put on inferior animals. Hyams, he said, was the auctioneer.

Capt. Lantry of the East Fifty-first Street Station detailed Detective Summers on the case. The arrest was made on Saturday. Acting Mayor McGowan, who referred the matter to the Police Commissioner, announced then that Hyams's license as an auctioneer had been revoked. He was held on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses.

UPHOLDS STOETZEL PATENTS.

Commissioner Finds That a Rival Pneumatic Inventor Was Too Slow.

E. B. Moore, Assistant Commissioner of Patents, has handed down a decision in favor of the Universal Pneumatic Transmission Company in its controversy with the Lamson Company. Both concerns manufacture pneumatic tubes for the transmission of mail and other matter.

The Universal Company is the assignee of the patents obtained by Joseph J. Stoetzel, and the Lamson Company is the purchaser of the patents granted to Edmond A. Fordyce. The two men invented devices of a like nature providing for valves to regulate the currents of air in pneumatic tubes. Stoetzel contended that he had perfected his invention June 15, 1902, and reduced it to practice in December, 1902. His application for a patent was filed April 25, 1904.

Fordyce alleged that he first conceived the device March 21, 1895, and made it practicable in March, 1901, but his application was not filed until August, 1904.

The examiners held that the device of Fordyce in 1901 was merely experimental in character, and did not constitute a reduction to practice of the invention. They also held that Fordyce was not sufficiently diligent in completing his work.

The Commissioner of Patents has upheld this view.

RE-ELECT PEABODY TO HEAD MUTUAL

New Trustees Also Retain G. F. Baker as Finance Committee Chairman.

McCURDY MEN ARE BACK

H. McK. Twombly, Henry Phipps, and Judge George Gray, All Reformers, Refuse to Serve.

The newly elected Board of Trustees of the Mutual Life Insurance Company held its initial meeting yesterday afternoon and re-elected Charles A. Peabody President and Emory McClintock Vice President. The other officers of the society were reappointed. The board then proceeded to organize into committees, putting at the head of the Finance Committee once more George F. Baker, President of the First National Bank, who was the ranking member of the Finance Committee in the McCurdy régime.

The other members of the Finance Committee as now constituted are Augustus D. Juilliard and Dumont Clarke, both Trustees from the McCurdy days; Thomas M. Muiry, President of the Emigrant Savings Bank, who was elected to the Mutual's board last Summer, and Benjamin F. Tracy, one of the four members of the International Policy Holders' Committee elected to the board without their consent. On the Real Estate Committee, the committee second in importance to the Finance Committee, are Charles S. Brown, of the real estate firm of Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown & Co., with William P. Dixon, Charles D. Dickey, and Charles R. Henderson—the three last-mentioned members of the Mutual's board in McCurdy days—and Louis Stern, whose membership dates from last Summer.

Julien T. Davies of the old Insurance Committee is the ranking member of the new Insurance Committee, and with him are William H. Truesdale, Chairman of the Truesdale Investigating Committee, with W. H. Lambert and Henry W. Taft of the administration Trustees and Harlow N. Higinbotham, an International Committeeman. Hugo Baring, H. Rieman Duval, Leroy Springs, and Cornelius Vanderbilt are the Mortuary Committee, and John W. Auchincloss, George P. Miller, Theodore Morford, and Col. Alfred M. Shook, another International Committeeman, are the Auditing Committee.

H. McK. Twombly, Henry Phipps, and Judge George Gray, all of whom were elected to the Mutual's board, notified that body yesterday that they would not serve. While no statement was forthcoming from the three International Committeemen who were elected under the same circumstances as was Judge Gray, it was said yesterday that a statement would be issued by them shortly declining also to serve, in accordance with previous announcements by the International Committee. No one of them was at the meeting yesterday.

After appointing the committees yesterday, the Mutual's board divided itself into classes by lot, as required by law.

CAPTAIN AND CREW LOST.

Fourteen Missing with Lake Michigan Lumber Steamer.

MANISTEE, Mich., April 23.—The wooden lumber barge Arcadia, which left this port on April 12 for Two Rivers with a cargo of hardwood, undoubtedly has been lost in Lake Michigan with her Captain and owner, Harry May, and about thirteen others. Marine men here have given her up as lost. Wreckage has been found along the beach from Pentwater north to Little Point Sauble, and part of it has been identified as the cargo of the boat. Parts of her cabins and bulwarks have also been found on the beach near Pentwater.

The Arcadia was a wooden steamer, 119 feet in length, 26 feet beam, and 9 feet draught, registering 230 tons, and was built in Milwaukee in 1888.

THE Tel-Electric Piano Player.
The most wonderful of all.
In the early sixteenth century an Italian musician invented the Harpsichord, the instrument which was the precursor of the piano of today. Its strings were not struck by hammers, but plucked by quills moved by finger keys.
But today no one would play the Harpsichord—we play pianos.
So with piano players. The awkward piano player obstructing the keyboard and with its abominable pumping was heralded as a marvelous invention a few years ago.
But now we have the Tel-Electric Piano Player, an instrument which remains invisible after being attached to your piano, and which plays the music of all nations with touch and expression of the expert without the slightest assistance from you, incidentally eliminating the tiresome pumping of the old style players.
So when you think of piano players think of the Tel-Electric, the greatest of them all.
If you own a piano you should attach a Tel-Electric Player to it. Don't sacrifice your fine instrument in exchanging it for a Player Piano.
It is at least worthy of your inspection whether you are actually interested or not, for it is a revelation to all who see
You are cordially requested to attend our daily recitals.

REPUBLICANS AGREE ON APPORTIONMENT

Only New York City and Hudson River Districts to be Changed.

RICHMOND AND ROCKLAND

Queens to be Separate—Brown's Plan Finds No Encouragement—Hughes to be Consulted.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 23.—Republican leaders in the Senate have practically agreed on a plan for the reapportionment of Senatorial districts, rendered necessary by the recent decision of the Court of Appeals.

Only slight concessions are made to those who protested against the plan practically to re-enact the old apportionment, changing only the districts directly condemned by the court.

Senator Raines, majority leader in the upper house, has held conferences recently with many up-State leaders, and the plan outlined as a result would leave the up-State districts in exactly the shape they are at present and only change some of the districts along the Hudson and adjacent to New York City.

The proposed changes were given to-night by a person closely in touch with the situation.

Richmond and Rockland Counties would be put into one Senate district to take the place of the district comprising Richmond and Queens.

The unit of population on which the Senatorial district is based is 132,215. The two counties together have a population of 107,681. Queens, which is Democratic by a large majority, would be made into a separate district.

This county has a population of 179,746. It would be entitled to two Senators if some of the up-State districts, for instance that of Senator Raines, with an estimated population of about 90,000 should be taken as a basis.

Another district would be made up of Orange and Putnam, situated on either side of the Hudson River, and would be safely Republican. Out of Dutchess and Columbia, with an aggregate population of 119,132, it is intended to make another district. This would leave "Lou" Payn in control as at present. The district under the last apportionment was composed of Columbia, Dutchess, and Putnam.

It is understood that Senator Raines will submit this idea to Gov. Hughes, and that if the slightest encouragement is given the plan will be incorporated in a bill which he will try to rush through the Legislature. That the Senators who constitute the backbone of the machine contingent in the upper house would greet it with delight is considered certain. It would leave men like Allds, Cordts, and Smith in safe districts, whereas their chances of re-election would be extremely doubtful under an equitable reapportionment.

Ex-Senator Elon R. Brown has been to see Senator Raines, and has submitted to him a plan which would involve a reapportionment that would affect every part of the State. It was learned to-night that he got not satisfaction. His scheme was especially distasteful to the leaders because it involved a rearrangement of the Saratoga district by the restoration of Washington County, and would make certain Brackett's control and re-election. The Brown plan would also change the districts of Senators Cassidy, Allds, and Raines. The 1906 reapportionment was mapped out by ex-Senator Mertin E. Lewis of Rochester. He has spent much of his time in Albany recently, and has been in constant communication with the Republican leaders. He declined to make any comment on the reapportionment which now is said to have been finally determined upon by the leaders.

OLIVER AND THE CROOKS.

Assemblymen Make Pointed Remarks on Democratic Leader's Attitude.

Special to The New York Times.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 23.—"Paradise Jimmie" Oliver, minority leader in the Assembly, was made the target for some sharp remarks at to-day's session. Two Republicans pointedly twitted him on his enthusiasm in defending the interests of the criminal classes in the case of a measure before the body.

The Winters bill, defining vagrancy, was up for passage. The measure, which is the work of the New York City Magistrates, permits police officials to arrest "on suspicion loiterers who are unable to give a satisfactory account of themselves," and permits the arrest of convicted felons without much ceremony.

Oliver explained that anybody who had been "mugged" for the Rogues' Gallery would be liable to arrest and asserted that such a bill would give the police unwarranted power. He moved to recommit the measure, but his motion was beaten by a vote of 60 to 30.

After Oliver had again pointed that great injustice might be done to persons who had once "served time," Assemblyman Rogers of Broome got the floor.

"I yield that the gentleman from New York has a greater knowledge and closer intimacy with crooks than I have," remarked Rogers, as he began his argument.

Assemblyman Winters of Tioga, introducer of the bill, also attacked Oliver.

"I know," said he, "that there is a combination between some of the pickpockets and certain lawyers. But that should not affect the passage of this measure. I wonder that the charity and sympathy of Mr. Oliver does not some time extend to classes that are occasionally honest."

Oliver denounced this utterance as "the action of a coward."

The bill, despite Oliver's resistance, passed 81 to 37.

Assembly Passes Supply Bill.

ALBANY, April 23.—The annual supply bill was passed unanimously in the Assembly to-day. Chairman Moreland of the Ways and Means Committee stated that the bill shows a reduction from $3,740,000 to $1,700,000, as compared with the total of last year.

ACTION ON CITY BILLS.

Ferries Measure Passed—One Affecting Borough Presidents Laid Over.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 23.—Several bills of particular interest to New York City came up before the Legislature to-day.

The Senate passed the Prentice bill which would facilitate the taking over by the city of ferry lines. It is understood that this measure will benefit in particular the Union Ferry Company. Senator McManus denounced R. Fulton Cutting, who was declared to be heavily interested in the ferries.

The Senate, after a heated debate, laid aside for future consideration the Conklin bill, which would take away from the Borough Presidents of New York City their votes in the Board of Aldermen. Mr. Page consented to delay until Senator Grady, who had been called away on account of his father's death, could be present. There is little doubt that the bill will pass.

By a vote of 77 to 49 the Assembly passed the Conklin bill providing for the extension of 135th Street, west of St. Nicholas Avenue, to where it now runs east of Amsterdam Avenue. The bill was bitterly fought by the Democrats, who denounced it as a Metropolitan Railway scheme.

The Assembly passed the Hooper bill increasing the stringency of the law regulating newsboys in cities of the first and second classes. It increases from 10 to 12 the minimum age of newsboys and increases the responsibility of school officers in the matter.

JACKSON ON TRUST LOANS.

Attorney General Opposes the Opinion of His Predecessor.

ALBANY, April 23.—Attorney General Jackson opposed the opinion of his predecessor, Mr. Mayer, on the subject of trust company loans in a letter addressed to-day to State Superintendent of Banks Charles H. Keep, who asked him recently whether "a loan to a firm or copartnership, of which a Director or officer of a trust company was a member," would come within the application of Subdivision 11 of Section 156 of the State banking law, which provides that "no loan exceeding one-tenth of its capital stock shall be made by any such corporation (directly or indirectly) to any Director or officer thereof, and such loan to such Director or officer shall not be made without the consent of a majority of the Directors."

Mr. Jackson says:

If the words "directly or indirectly" mean anything at all, they are certainly plain and broad enough to extend the statutory restriction to a loan by a trust company to a firm or copartnership in which a Director or officer of a trust company is a member.

I am aware that my opinion is at variance with that of former Attorney General Mayer given your department on Dec. 3, 1906, wherein a distinction is sought to be made between partnerships formed in good faith and partnerships formed in bad faith.

The statute makes no such distinction, and the application of such a rule would be impracticable.

NO FALSE PROSPECTUSES.

Assembly Passes a Bill to Punish Deceivers of the Public.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 23.—The Assembly to-day passed the "False Prospectus" bill drawn by Prof. Leslie J. Tompkins of New York University. It was introduced by Mr. Cuvillier and indorsed by District Attorney Jerome.

Under the bill it would be unlawful to make or publish false or exaggerated statements concerning the affairs, pecuniary condition, or property of any corporation, joint stock association, copartnership, or individual, which were intended to give or should have a tendency to give a less or greater apparent value to the shares, bonds, or property of any said concern.

The penalty provided is ten years' imprisonment and a maximum fine of $10,000 or both fine and imprisonment.

HUGHES MAY AID A BOY.

Learns of an Arrest by a Railroad Detective and Investigates.

ROCHESTER, April 23.—Gov. Hughes has interested himself in the case of Albert Rogers, 16 years old, an electrician of New York, who was arrested on a train between Buffalo and Rochester about a fortnight ago by a railroad detective. He was accused of "beating" his way, and was sentenced to the penitentiary on a charge of vagrancy.

A group of traveling salesmen on the train took up a collection for the boy and offered to pay his fare, but it is said the detective refused the money. The salesmen were indignant, and reported the case to the Governor.

Police Justice Chadsey to-day received a letter from Robert H. Fuller, secretary to the Governor, asking for a statement showing the circumstances of the case, and it was sent.

PATRONAGE BILL VETOED.

Absurd, Says Gov. Hughes, of a Kings County Measure.

ALBANY, April 23.—Gov. Hughes today emphasized his idea that minor local positions and salaries should be wholly within the control of local authorities. He vetoed a bill of Assemblyman Feth of Kings, which would have created the places of confidential stenographer and secretary to the Under-Sheriff at salaries of $1,200 and $1,500, and increased the salaries of three cooks and one laundress.

"It is absurd," says the Governor, "that the Legislature should be called upon to deal with matters of this sort. The propriety of creating such positions and making such increases should be determined by the local authorities under an appropriate amendment of the charter."

Malden Lane Uptown.

The latest addition to uptown skyscrapers is the Howard Building, at Forty-seventh Street and Fifth Avenue. The architects are Messrs. Mayneke & Franke. Howard & Co., jewelers, for many years at Twenty-ninth Street and Fifth Avenue, occupy the whole of the ground floor, the upper part being especially designed to meet the requirements of manufacturing jewelers, large numbers of whom are rapidly making their way up town. Messrs. Howard & Co. opened their new store on Monday with a collection of diamonds, pearls, and old English silver.

MEETING PROBLEMS AT JAMESTOWN

Transportation Facilities and Accommodations for the Expected Crowds.

EXPOSITION ATTRACTIONS

Transplanted Orchard in Full Bloom—Gay Opening Planned for Friday Night.

NORFOLK, April 23.—This city is actively engaged in meeting the problem of transportation to the Jamestown Exposition grounds, and in providing for the accommodation at night of the thousands of visitors expected here for the opening on Friday next. It is said that a majority of the citizens of Norfolk, Portsmouth, and Newport News have arranged to open their homes to visitors. Several new hotels are about ready to open. In addition to street car lines, arrangements have been made to use the tracks of the new Tidewater Railroad and run trains directly to the main gate.

Of the many attractive features at the exposition, one which is counted upon to surpass the efforts of other cities is the electrical display. Even the incomplete buildings have been wired, and vari-colored incandescent bulbs and arc lights put in position, so that on Friday night there will be no defects to mar the scene.

Already the "War Path" figures in slang expression, and, like "The Midway" at Chicago and "The Pike" at St. Louis, this feature promises to be one of the drawing cards.

An example has been set by the management of the tercentennial which doubtless will be emulated by other cities that have expositions in prospect. When it was decided to commemorate the settlement in Virginia of the English the promoters of the plan bought the ground in the vicinity of Pine Beach and formed an Exposition Company. Improvements of a permanent character were started even before the holding of the exposition was assured. Among other preparations an old apple orchard was transplanted to the grounds, and a border of mature trees was put around what was later set aside as the military parade. This was two years ago, and last year the trees blossomed and bore a little fruit. The trees are now covered with pink and white blossoms.

All of the State buildings face Hampton Roads. Around the water line is being constructed a wide boardwalk, and inside that is being built Willoughby Boulevard, which will be connected with a permanent drive to Norfolk. The boardwalk stretches along the entire water front of the exposition reservation, a distance of more than two miles. It leads to the Government pier, which is now building, and to the commercial pier, which will be ready for use on the opening day. It has been arranged to have President Roosevelt and his party disembark there from the Mayflower.

TYSON SETTLES DAMAGES.

Suits Against Ticket Agent by Men Hurt by His Auto Dismissed.

WHITE PLAINS, April 23.—When the suits for damages brought against John H. Tyson, the New York theatrical ticket agent, for $10,000 each by Col. Samuel S. Tappan, a wealthy resident of Tarrytown, and John White, also of Tarrytown, were called to-day before Justice Tompkins in the Supreme Court Harry T. Dykeman, counsel for the plaintiffs, informed the court that the cases had been settled out of court. The cases were dismissed.

The accident in which the two men were injured happened some months ago and it is said Col. Tappan was injured for life. Col. Tappan and Mr. White were thrown from a carriage when the horse became frightened at Tyson's auto and ran away, throwing both men out. Mr. Dykeman would not say what the terms of settlement were.

TEACHERS' BILL REPORTED.

It is Believed That the Assembly Will Pass It—Mayor's Veto Feared.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 23.—By an almost unanimous vote the Cities Committee of the Assembly reported the New York Teachers' Salary Increase bill to-day. The members were sworn to secrecy as to the division of the vote. The bill is expected to come before the Assembly on the calendar on Thursday. As the Rules Committee takes charge of all legislation on that day, it will be for it to say whether the bill shall appear on Friday's calendar, providing it is advanced to third reading on Thursday.

It was the general belief of the members of the Cities Committee that the Rules Committee will not hold up the bill. If not, there is little question that it will pass the Assembly by Friday, or Monday night at the latest.

The Cities Committee members figured that the bill would reach Mayor McClellan about April 30 or May 1. They believe that if he should hold it fifteen days, the maximum time allowed, and then should veto it, the bill would be dead, as there would be little chance to pass it over his veto in the rush of the last dozen hours of the session. Most of them professed to believe that the Mayor would veto the measure.

The bill would add about $6,000,000 to the educational budget, according to the statement of Assistant Corporation Counsel Arthur C. Butts, the representative here of the City Administration. If the Mayor should approve it, however, it would have to come to Gov. Hughes for final consideration.

BRAKEMAN GETS $45,000.

New Haven Settles with Employe Who Lost an Arm and Leg.

The attorneys for the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company have agreed to pay Harry Munro, a former brakeman, $45,000 for injuries received by him Jan. 11, this year, while he was working for the company. That the large amount should be paid so soon after the accident has excited comment among members of the bar generally.

Joseph A. Shay, attorney for Munro, brought suit in the Supreme Court for $100,000. The complaint said that Munro, while at work on the top of a freight train leaving the Mott Haven yards, caught his foot in a bole in the roof of one of the cars. He was thrown between the cars, his right arm and leg cut off, and the fingers of his left hand amputated.

The company had the trial changed to the United States Circuit Court in Brooklyn because it is a foreign corporation. When the case was called for trial yesterday there was a consultation with H. W. Taft, attorney for the railroad, and then Mr. Shay announced the settlement.

PERPETUAL CANDIDACIES.

The letters we have been publishing from Republican editors showing the overwhelming popularity of Mr. ROOSEVELT, and from members of the National Democratic Committee, exhibiting the unchanged loyalty of that party to Mr. BRYAN, reveal a curious psychological, we might almost say pathological, condition of the minds of a very large part of the American people and of their leaders.

Republican editors the country over wrote that Mr. ROOSEVELT'S strength was undiminished; many of them said he was stronger than ever. The demand for his renomination next year appears to be well-nigh universal. Yet there is the so far unbroken tradition against a third term. Has it so far fallen into disrepute that it has no influence upon the popular mind? Apparently it does not count so much as by a feather's weight against Mr. ROOSEVELT. Twenty-seven years ago it counted heavily against Gen. GRANT. Mr. ROOSEVELT'S popularity triumphs over it.

Furthermore, the President has declared with impressive solemnity and emphasis that he will not accept another nomination. That declaration he has many times repeated. Either the enthusiastic masses of his party are so impolite as to doubt his sincerity or else they don't care what he says or desires. They want him and are bound to have him. They pay no attention to the discussion of other names.

Chairman DAHLMAN of the Nebraska Democratic Committee writes: "I feel that if we did not have Mr. BRYAN to put at the head of the ticket we would favor a Southern man for first place, but so long as he is on earth we will be for him against anybody else." Mr. BRYAN has been twice beaten, and we do not see how it is possible for him to be elected President. He is a gifted and highly efficient divider of his party. A very great part of the Democracy will never vote for him. Certainly he could win no Republican votes from Mr. ROOSEVELT; very few, if any, from Mr. TAFT running as the Administration candidate. These considerations count for nothing, however, with the convinced BRYAN men; they are "for him as long as he is on earth."

Each party appears to have a perpetual candidate. It can hardly be doubted that if the President should get another term, the tide of "Roosevelt talk" would rise about as high four years hence as it has risen now. The minds of the people appear to be shut, also their eyes and ears. They are thinking about nobody but Mr. ROOSEVELT and Mr. BRYAN. They will listen to the mention of no other names, they see no other possible candidate. A man from Mars would conclude there were but two great living Americans.

INSURANCE INVESTMENTS.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company is circulating a statement of its investments which makes one surprising contrast. It specifies each description of stocks and bonds owned by it, with a summary of their aggregate book and market values. Bonds of book value $215,615,103 are worth in the market $214,052,539. Stocks of market value $68,259,107 have a book value of $48,012,532. On the bonds there is a loss of $1,562,564. On the stocks there is a profit of $20,246,574. Yet the companies of the State are under legal obligation to part with their stocks, and bonds are the investment favored by law. Of course there is no finality about these figures. They are true as of the moment when the appraisal was made, and both bonds and stocks have certainly changed their relation in the debit and credit account by now, bearing in mind the course of the money market. Nevertheless it is always true that the merit of an investment lies in the judgment with which it is made, rather than in the name of the security. A good stock is better than a poor bond. The law can punish exceptionally bad investments, but is powerless to compel the selection of good ones. It is a universal characteristic of law that it punishes misconduct, and fails in the attempt to compel virtue.

In no department of insurance legislation is that fact more marked than in the attempted regulation of investments. For example, Connecticut forbade the Charter Oak to buy railway bonds, and it did not, but it took its President's note, and soon came into possession of the bond collateral accompanying it; New York, by restricting the field of its companies' investments, fostered a competition for the favored classes which made them unprofitable, and prejudiced New York companies in their rivalry with companies of other States earning larger interest returns. It was to maintain themselves that the New York companies turned to the classes of investments now prohibited by law, that is, large collateral loans, trust company deposits, and corporation securities. The evil which the law is seeking to remedy was caused by law.

THE BRIDGE TERMINALS.

Perfect clearness does not mark the reports of what happened in the test of what is called the Poulsen plan of relieving the crush at the bridge terminal, but there is general agreement among the observers that it was not successful on Sunday, whatever is true of its possibilities. So far as the lack of success was due to misunderstanding of signals, or to electrical troubles, it was not to be attributed to the arrangement of tracks, and that is all that was under test. The point to be settled in substance is whether it is necessary to switch trains after they enter the terminal. If so, several stops are necessary at several platforms, with consequent delays and shortening of time allowable for loading and unloading. This is the cause of the bridge crush. The Poulsen plan provides for switching trains before they enter the terminal, and only a single stop within it, loading and unloading being a single operation and both sides of the train being used. The consequence is that passengers would always have the choice of several trains, and that each train would have ample time for discharging and taking on passengers. The Poulsenites contend that their plan is the normal plan, and that there is no reason why it should not work on the bridge as well as elsewhere.

The argument against the plan is that the distance between trains on the bridge is so short that a loaded outgoing train cannot safely be switched across the path of an incoming train, and that this can be avoided only by doing the switching before passengers are taken on. The argument necessarily limits itself to the bridge conditions, for the practice of switching before entering stations is not deadly elsewhere, although common where the speeds are much higher than in the bridge terminals. It would seem that bridge trains might be kept apart as well as others, and it is certain that if they came together it could hardly be at a speed which would more than break glass.

It is to be remarked that most of the reports suggest that there was no desire to have the plan succeed. It conflicts with other plans. If the Poulsen plan is feasible there is no need of a terminal costing many millions. The present terminal site would then be ample, and it would be adaptable to the plan of through cars. But there's the rub. Through cars are not desired. Through cars in time mean single fares, such as will be collected in the Interborough's tunnel road when it is opened. The Brooklyn Elevated Railway is operating the Brooklyn Bridge and naturally desires a terminal which shall facilitate the operation of its road.

The question therefore is not the merits or demerits of the Poulsen plan, but whether the bridge is to be subordinated to the convenience of the railway, which is not at all to be condemned for wanting what it can get. In our view the railway's plan is objectionable because it does not make the best use of the bridge, and bridges are not so numerous or so cheap that they can be wasted. The success of the railway's plans is antagonistic to the plan of through trains, and it is equally ill-devised for the next best use to which the bridge can be put—that is, to connect separate systems with privileges of transfer at many points in the course of constant circulation over a loop.

JUDGE CRAIN.

We hope Judge CRAIN will be able to explain satisfactorily, upon legal and judicial grounds, the singular circumstances attending the sentence in his court of DANIEL SULLIVAN, on trial for assault and attempted robbery.

SULLIVAN has a remarkable record for serious crimes and easy sentences. Six years ago he assaulted viciously a man named WHITMAN, fracturing his skull; sentence was suspended. A year later he beat a man named CRISPI in a saloon; his fine was $10. Last year he was tried for felonious assault upon one SHORT, whose skull SULLIVAN fractured; he was discharged by Magistrate FINN.

In the case tried before Judge CRAIN in General Sessions SULLIVAN was convicted of assaulting and attempting to rob an intoxicated man. When he was arraigned for sentence it was observed that JAMES J. HAGAN, formerly Warden of the Tombs and Tammany district leader of Judge CRAIN'S district, was in court. Judge CRAIN was inclined to suspend sentence, a disposition of the case which so astonished Assistant District Attorney APPLETON that he sent for Mr. JEROME, a step which Mr. HAGAN opposed. Then the Judge imposed a sentence of two months. Inasmuch as the extreme penalty for the offense would be fifteen years in prison it is to be supposed that his Honor discovered some mitigating circumstances; so far as we know they have not been disclosed to the public. At any rate, District Attorney JEROME has filed notice with SULLIVAN'S attorneys that he will appear before Judge CRAIN and ask that the sentence be revoked for inadequacy.

Nobody can have so deep an interest as Judge CRAIN in explaining the circumstances of this trial and sentence, which have attracted wide public attention. On account of the prevalence of crime in the city and in view of the tendency toward sentences much too light to be considered deterrent there has been of late a good deal of discussion about the criminal and City Magistrates' courts. A bill was introduced in the Assembly yesterday providing for a commission to inquire into the administration of justice in courts of inferior criminal jurisdiction in New York and Buffalo. It is believed at Albany that this measure is aimed at the Magistrates' Courts in the City of New York, "where political leaders are often sitting as Magistrates." The City Committee of the Citizens' Union has adopted a resolution urging the Mayor, in appointing three City Magistrates to fill vacancies occurring on May 1, to choose "men of recognized high standing at the bar for legal ability and fearless honesty."

The independence of the judiciary is evidently a subject to which people are giving an unusual degree of attention. They have grown impatient of the bad conditions in certain administrative departments and there is a good deal of talk of a general housecleaning. If the work of purification begins briskly it might possibly lead to an inquiry into the manner in which the judicial function is performed in some of the courts. Judge CRAIN will, of course, perceive that the public is entitled to some explanation of the Sullivan case. The District Attorney's application for a revocation of the two months' sentence will afford him an opportunity to make it.

THE DUMA AND THE AUTOCRACY.

Mr. BONSAL'S dispatch in yesterday's TIMES gives cumulative evidence of a conspiracy on the part of the Russian Reactionaries to dissolve the second Duma as the first was dissolved, and to throw Russia back to the horrible condition of "absolutism tempered by assassination," which has been so manifestly outgrown. The Reactionaries have shown, not only in the summary injustice of the "field courts-martial" upon civilians, but also in downright and mere murders like those of M. IOLLOS, that they will stop at nothing. One was quite prepared for Mr. BONSAL'S disclosure that the editor of the Moscow Reactionary organ demanded, as his contribution to the political problem of the hour, "the dispersal of the Duma and the institution of a dictatorship." Neither, unfortunately, can one wonder at his further statement that the applause this proposition elicited was led "by the Metropolitan of Moscow and four other Bishops sitting on the platform." Historical precedents in considerable numbers will occur to the student of history to show that an established Church, glorying in its "orthodoxy," may, as CLARENDON observed of the Anglican clergy of his time, "take the worst measure of human affairs of all mankind that can write and read."

It is sincerely to be hoped that the Czar has wiser advisers than the Muscovite editor or the Muscovite Archbishop. It is to be believed so. Such clerics and such civilians think that the suppression of Russian evils will be effected if they sit tight on the safety valve. But M. STOLYPIN knows better than that. M. STOLYPIN has certainly no notion of sitting on the safety valve with such civilians and clergy, and undergoing the results of the ensuing explosion. But it seems that his own manner of halting betwixt two opinions is not much more conducive to his own personal safety, in the event of the explosion, than to his reputation for statesmanship. All the disinterested observers on the ground keep telling him that his only chance for making the Duma successful is to throw his weight into the scales of the "Centre," which is to say, of the Constitutional Democrats. This is the party which has for its object, it may fairly be said, to hold the Czar strictly but fairly to the promises of his manifesto of October, 1905. They are, for the most part, men who have some education, some of them a great deal, and some "stake in the country," some reasons of their own why Russia should not be given over either to despotism or to Anarchism. On the one hand is the "League of the Russian People," the Reactionary agitators whose performances Mr. BONSAL observed. On the other there is the party of "Toil," which has already introduced into the Duma a programme of expropriation of landlords that denotes a policy merely of confiscation and Socialism. To this latter party M. STOLYPIN has shown no indication of yielding. But it cannot be denied that he has been oscillating between the Centre and the Right, between the party of peaceable and reasonable progress and the party of violent and unreasonable reaction, the success of which would throw Russia back to the condition in which a Russian with a grievance would have no redress but to kill somebody. We repeat that disinterested observers on the spot all agree that the Premier ought, in the interest of the Russian people, in the interest of what can possibly still be saved of the Czardom, and in his own interest, to take the former course, and to use whatever influence he may have with the Czar to secure its adoption, lest a worse thing befall. Possibly M. STOLYPIN has still time to choose, and to avert the failure of the second Duma, which would be the failure of the last hope of the peaceful modernization of the old Russia. But evidently he has not much time. He must choose his part, and that soon.

STEAD ON NEWNESS.

The wisdom of Mr. W. T. STEAD requires to be revised, edited, and brought down to date. He persists in repeating the antiquated statement, "We of Europe regard you as a new Nation who will not shrink from the leadership of the world." The Government of the United States is among the oldest in the civilized world.

Since its formation France has been a republic, an empire, a kingdom, a constitutional monarchy, a republic, an empire, a commune, and has again become a republic. The Hapsburgs no longer rule the Holy Roman Empire because it has ceased to exist, and are content to be Emperors of Austria, of which they have long been Archdukes, Kings of Hungary, of Bohemia, &c. The German Empire is but a thing of yesterday, the Kingdom of Italy is hardly out of its swaddling clothes, the Kingdom of Sweden has passed from the Vasas to the Bernadottes, the Kingdom of Norway has just reached the kindergarten age. Roumelia, Bulgaria, and Servia have been born as States; the last vestige of royalty has passed away from Mexico and South America. The power of Japan has passed from the Shogun to the Mikado, a revolution largely due to the forcible introduction of American ideas, and Japan has taken her place among the great Powers.

As for the tight little isle which Mr. STEAD does his best to perturb, it has become the United Kingdom, its monarchs have ceased to style themselves Kings of France, have ceased to be either Electors or Kings of Hanover, are no longer Guelfs but Wettins, and have become, by the grace of DISRAELI, Kaisers i Hind. We are not so awfully new, here in America, and as to leadership, should not Mr. STEAD have used a past tense?

The dinner in honor of American sculptors at the National Arts Club on Monday evening, at which Mr. J. Q. A. WARD, as the dean of his guild, was the special guest, seems to have been a most interesting occasion. Not only the sculptors but the most conspicuous societies of the allied arts were represented, and united to do him honor. The co-operation of the arts in question is comparatively new in this country. Doubtless the most conspicuous and successful instance of it in this city, in a temporary pageant which deserved to be permanent, was the "Dewey Arch," the crowning ornament of which was Mr. WARD'S own brilliant modernization of the Winged Victory of Samothrace. The temporary pageant had its use in making New Yorkers consider what might be done by such a union of the arts in more serious and more studied erections. And the Central Park and the smaller parks bear witness, in Mr. WARD'S works, to what sculpture can do in commemoration of men and events worthy of commemoration. Even the central citadel of what our newly imported British Baptist clergyman calls "American materialism," the very corner of Wall and Broad Streets, attests, in the heroic figure of WASHINGTON on one corner, and in the pediment of the Stock Exchange on another, that there are American ideals which, in spite of the Rev. Mr. AKED, have been realized in the past and which all "good Americans" hope to see realized on a larger scale in the future.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Too Cautious by More Than Half.

Despite fair warning that it contemplated doing a thing at once absurd and needless, the British Admiralty has carried out the intention announced a week or so ago and issued formal orders forbidding the naval bands to play selections from "The Mikado" while Prince FUSHIMI, the Japanese Emperor's cousin, is in English waters with his little fleet.

One can easily understand reasons why a tactful bandmaster, in making out the musical programme for the ceremonies incidental to the interchange of official courtesies between naval hosts and naval guests, would not draw for material from a light comic opera which by caricaturing them made fun of, or, rather, out of, the national customs and costumes of those same guests. But why should it be necessary to issue an order to that effect? To do so shows a most amusing, though possibly justified, distrust of the British bandmaster's tact and good taste, and, even if the distrust was justified, it seems as if it would have been sufficient to issue a quiet warning to the effect that while "The Mikado" was all very well in its way, its sprightly tunes were not those to which Japanese heroes marched or sailed to victory—or defeat, as the case might be—and that they would be decidedly out of place at a solemn function intended to cement an international friendship.

But the Admiralty wasn't content with doing something like that and keeping the matter to itself; instead, it has spread the news all over the world that in its kindness it will not offend its visitors with reminders of those three utterly impossible little maids from school, of the Lord High Executioner, or of Katisha's elbow, which admirers came from afar to see. This has imposed upon the Japanese visitors the heavy task of explaining that they understand "The Mikado" perfectly and are no more offended by its humor than are the British themselves by that in "Iolanthe."

Only a few days ago we printed the remarks of several eminent Japanese on this very subject, and not one of them failed to show a mild irritation at the suggestion that he found "The Mikado" offensive to his pride as a son of Great Nippon. But we are quite sure that if British warships were visiting Yokohama on an errand of state, the Japanese vessels would not welcome them with strenuously rendered airs from "Pinafore." They would refrain without orders to do so, however, for orders would have been unnecessary.

A Senator Much Excited.

Whatever may be the merits or demerits of Senator COBB'S Marriage License bill, as such, one cannot easily avoid a feeling of wonder at the spectacle presented by Senator GRADY when attacking it with passionate vehemence as an innovation that would take the marriage rite out of what he called "the religious sphere" and place it in the hands of the civil authorities. That, he declared, was the most radical and most dangerous departure from the existing marriage laws that could be conceived.

With all due respect for the silver-tongued statesman and for those for whom he spoke or thought he was speaking, these assertions reach almost or quite to the outer limit of the absurd and of the inaccurate. The establishment of a marriage license system in this State would produce none of the dreadful consequences he prophesied, but would leave the solemnization of weddings exactly where it is now. That is, those who wanted to be married by a clergyman, in church or out of it, could still do so, while those who considered a civil ratification of their hymeneal contract enough could continue to patronize any one of the several civil officials empowered to tie the—sometimes—happy knot.

The enforced procurement of a license before going through the one or the other form of ceremony would have here precisely the effects it has in many States and countries. It would be against the policy of making marriage as cheap and easy as possible, which policy has hitherto been ours and certainly has its advantages, but it would also tend to prevent a few overhasty marriages or between ill-assorted couples, and that, too, would have its beneficial features. It is not the purpose of Senator COBB'S bill, as we understand it, to make a civil marriage essential to legality, as has long been the custom in many European countries that get along very well under it, so Senator GRADY need not have been so desperately excited over the change. That foreign plan, however, has its good points, and doubtless we will come to it in time, for we cannot go on forever coolly indifferent to the formal recording of a change in status of such enormous importance both to the individuals making it and to the State.

Accidents and Fatigue.

American Medicine calls attention to the fact that the relation between fatigue and accidents is now receiving more attention in Europe, and less here, than for many years past. About the reality of the relation there is no doubt, for it has been noted at one time or another in practically all forms of human activity. Bank clerks make a majority of their mistakes late in the afternoon, and that is said to have had something to do with the comparatively early closing of such institutions, for the mistakes of bank clerks are apt to be expensive to their employers. What happens when railway men work too many hours continuously is only too well known.

Herein lies the best, or, at least, the most effective, argument for the eight-hour day for all forms of labor, and yet eight hours is much too long for some kinds of work, while in others more can easily be performed. American Medicine takes a very practical and unsentimental view of the subject. "The prevention of fatigue accidents," it says, "can be brought about in but one way—by making them too expensive. As soon as a corporation discovers such a cause, it instinctively reduces the hours of labor as a matter of economy. The sufferings of the laborers or the loss of life does not appeal to us as much as loss of money—an unhappy fact we have repeatedly, yet sorrowfully, mentioned. Suits should be decided in favor of the injured, and the damages placed so high that it will be cheaper to prevent—due precautions being taken to detect fraudulent claims. Nevertheless, it is a pleasure to note an increasing tendency throughout the world to reduce labor to a point where it can be done efficiently. Conditions do improve even if the millennium is not yet in sight."

Efficiency and "humanity" go together, fortunately, but the intelligence for seeing it is too often lacking.

An Appeal for Small Parks.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In about two months the mansions on Riverside Drive and Fifth Avenue will be deserted and their occupants on their way to Newport, Europe, or to the mountains.

Then, at that period of the year, in striking contrast to this state of affairs, the streets and avenues in that congested section of our metropolis lying northwest of Division Street and east of the Bowery and Third Avenue as far up as Seventh Street will be crowded almost to suffocation.

Here, even at night, during the hot and sweltering months of July and August, residents are forced on the thoroughfares in front of their wretched homes for lack of heaven's pure air within doors.

In this district, the most densely populated spot in the civilized world, the dark and narrow streets in the daytime are filled with vehicles of every sort and description, rendering ingress and egress dangerous even to adult pedestrians. There the atmosphere, unvitalized by sunshine and sea breezes, and noxious with poisonous fumes from gas houses, varnish, and tobacco factories, is stifling and unhealthy to the last degree.

Conscious that existing conditions in such portions of New York are a menace to the health of the entire city, our Sanitary Board has more than once notified the municipal authorities that infectious and contagious fevers of the worst type are likely to occur at any time.

What is imperatively needed in such overpopulated wards of the metropolis is a chain of small parks and recreation centres. By these means, and by these means alone, can sunshine—pure air, and light, essentials to comfort, health, and life—be supplied to thousands of our fellow-citizens.

It is, therefore, to be earnestly hoped that the Board of Estimate and Apportionment will inaugurate at once a local improvement so important and so vitally necessary by selecting those sites for additional breathing spaces recommended by the Metropolitan Park Association, especially the block bounded by Allen, Houston, Stanton, and Orchard Streets.

The Inventor of the Telegraphone.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The distinguished author of "Entwicklungsgeschichte der Kantischen Erkenntnistheorie" would be surprised to learn from your issue of to-day that he is the inventor of the telegraphone.

Valdemar Poulsen, the real inventor of that wonderful machine, is doubly ill-used, for in the same section of your paper his "undamped" wave system of wireless telegraphy is referred to by Admiral Manney as the Poulsen system. W. W. BRADFIELD.

German and Other Warships.

Archibald S. Hurd, in the London Cassier's Magazine.

The revelation of the general trend of naval policy in the United States, Great Britian, and Japan toward unparalelled concentration of fighting power in colossal ships has been unwelcome in Germany, because the policy of construction followed in the case of recent American, British and Japanese ships bids fair to render the German Navy obsolescent long before even the scheme of augmentation passed in 1900 is actually complete.

MR. CARNEGIE'S PEACE POLICE

He Writes to The Times in Defense of His Proposal.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your editorial, "Peace Congress Sequels," you write: "Take, for instance, Mr. Carnegie's suggestion for an international police—to enforce what law?"

To enforce no law whatever, Mr. Editor. I only proposed such union of powers for a specific purpose as recently took place between six in China, and was successful, under a German General.

The specific and only purpose of the suggested police force being to prevent any civilized nation from breaking the international peace of the world in which other civilized nations are in our day more or less intcrested. International commerce already reaches $26,000,000,000 annually, and every year the civilized nations become more interdependent.

It is no new idea, but simply an extension of the practice of nations. Russia, France, and Germany recently acted jointly against the claims of Japan, Britain, Germany, and others against Venezuela.

My belief is that the invitation of the Emperor of Germany, if given to the powers at the next Hague Conference, to act jointly to keep the world's peace would be responded to by such an irresistible array as would render the exercise of force unnecessary. It could be tried for a fixed period, or the nations might reserve the right to withdraw upon giving timely notice.

The powers which combined in China were Germany, (a German General being in command,) Britain, Japan, France, Russia, and ourselves. Surely no power or possible combination of powers would or could disregard the request of this body to keep the peace.

This seems the easiest and most direct road to the abolition of war, which decides not who is right, but only who is strong, exalting might above right. It is a path which the nations have already trod for some distance successfully and are familiar with. The will may be lacking, but the way is clear.

Now that you understand the suggestion and see that it does not require a greater union of powers than that which has already taken joint action for a common purpose, I hope you will kindly think it over and favor readers with your views.

A Misogynist.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I cannot help remarking how contradictory women are as a rule.

They will have a boy arrested for shooting birds, and then turn around and have birds killed so that they may decorate their hats with them. They will arrest a man for driving a horse which appears somewhat lame, or that is carrying a heavy load. After doing this they will buy a horse and dock his tail so he becomes helpless against his many small enemies, such as the horsefly. Further, young women often become indignant if they happen to get into a crowded car and have to stand because no one will offer them a seat. (Most women think it's a man's duty and not an act of courtesy to offer his seat to them.) But when they are fortunate enough to obtain one, they never think of offering it to aged persons if they see them standing.

However, what can we expect? All women, or, at least, 90 per cent. of them, are selfish and prone to think only of themselves.

The Case of the Marvin Boy.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have been reading with much interest the accounts of the disappearance of Horace Marvin, Jr. I have three little boys, and I feel the deepest sympathy for the father of little Horace. What I wish to say is that it is a well-known fact that in a few weeks a person can be so changed, physically and mentally, by a certain treatment as to be almost unrecognizable.

In your paper to-day you speak of a little boy found in Gloversville, N. Y., and having a strong resemblance to Horace Marvin, the points of difference being the teeth, the quality of scar, and shape of the face. Now all these could easily have been altered. For instance, the original scar could have been burned, the teeth disfigured, and the face elongated. Even the mind and disposition could be changed. I trust that every effort will be made to keep this child in view, and that Mr. Marvin himself will go to see him. Possibly the child might recognize his brother "Johnnie" when he would know no one else.

Fair Play for Sicilians!

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with quite a little interest the stand taken by our little Tammany Coroner, "Mr. Acritelli," in your issue of the 18th inst.

It is true that there are few Sicilians that deserve punishment, but the courts of the City of New York are to be blamed for this, as they are not at all severe. But does it show that all Sicilians are bloodthirsty, treacherous, blackmailers, &c., as he said?

Does the gentleman want to compare the majority of good, laborious Sicilians with the so notorious Calabrese brigands, and the so many fake bankers who have gone into bankruptcy in order to rob so many poor Italians of their hard-earned pennies? No! I am proud to be a Sicilian, a law-abiding citizen, and glad to note in your editorial that you have answered this cowardly attack. Fair play even for Sicilians.

Boys Who Mar the Parks.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If more care could be taken of the parks by the police it would save much of the future expense of their renewal of the grass and trees and shrubbery.

In my daily walk on Riverside Drive I see constant damage being done by the boys and small children. Shrubs are pulled to pieces for whips, the grass is dug up and trampled on. I rarely ever see a policeman, and the gamins will have their own way in spite of all the talk from passers-by.

I am sorry to see the beauty of the park rapidly passing away from this abuse and the scattering of papers and picnic refuse.

Man's Age in Britain.

The Editor of the Museum Gazette of London has made an attempt to estimate the length of time man has inhabited Great Britian. He allows 250,000 years. The period seems long, but the tendency of late has been to extend it, so that the historic period of some 2,000 years in Britain is a small fraction of man's existence here, as the whole human epoch is a small fraction of the world's history.

What, it is asked, was man doing during those 2,000 centuries before history began? The writer answers: "Man's brain was slowly increasing in size, and its case, the skull, was getting larger and of better form. The forehead was rising and filling forwards, and the intellect was developing. Speech was improving and manners undergoing amelioration. Animals were being tamed, and the supply of food was becoming more abundant and more varied. In a word, the human being was gradually becoming fitted to take advantage of future discoveries." The order of development is more easily determined than the lapse of time. Avebury and Stonehenge go back to at least 2,000 B. C.

THE UNBRIDLED EGO.

What Happened to One Convert Who Decided to Let His Loose.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have heard many foreigners say that this is not a free country, and at times I am inclined to agree with them. Yesterday being Sunday and a fine day, I walked along the Riverside Drive in the afternoon. To better enjoy the scene and the hour I sat a while on the low granite wall at a point near 104th Street, now gazing over the wide, beautiful river or at the grassy, tree-clad declivity below, where children were playing and rolling on the grass, anon taking comfort in the cheery faces of the young people passing up and down on the pavement beside the Drive. A short, stout, gray-haired man, who might be a clerk or a skilled workman, came over and sat on the wall beside me. "Sir," he said, "this is a beautiful sight, and we should enjoy it." I assented, and he went on to tell me that all his life he had been a fool, and had submerged his ego in deference to domestic and other conventionalities. Now he had read his gospel of freedom and was going to let his individuality loose and allow it to take care of itself. He took from his pocket a copy of the SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS of THE NEW YORK TIMES and said: "Here it is; it is all in James Huneker's review of Max Stirner's book. Stirner did not live up to his book, but Herr Huneker has a mind like mine, and knows how to separate the doctrine from the prophet. I am taking Herr Huneker's advice." He left the paper in my hands and went away, smiling pleasantly. A few yards off I saw him drop over the wall to the grassy slope below. With a merry cry he threw his hat aside and proceeded to roll on the grass. What followed? A crowd gathered, the police were called, a patrol wagon summoned, and in ten minutes I saw Mr. Huneker's disciple driven away to the lockup on the charge of insanity! Now I ask, if the doctrine of freedom of the ego is dealt with thus on its most elementary demonstration, is this a free country? On the other hand, it may please Mr. Huneker to learn that his inspiring words have stirred at least one human being to revolt. PERIPATETIC.

FADS IN ART WORK.

Some Criticisms on "Commercial Painters"—The Academy Exhibit.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Judging from the exhibit of one of the artists mentioned by Mr. Caswell in his letter to THE TIMES of April 12 the future of art in America will never be raised to a higher plane by following the idiosyncrasies of advocates of "new school" fads.

The present exhibition of the National Academy, comprising many pictures of exceptional merit, is certainly not benefited by hanging subjects, (some of which were so cleverly caricatured by "Hy" Mayer in THE SUNDAY TIMES,) the work of what might be called "commercial painters"; who labor first to create a fad that fits their own mediocrity, and then, through a large social acquaintance, clever press notices, or the support of well-known dealers, ask that the public accept their meaningless daubs as representative of American brains as applied to art.

From the brushes of a few of the younger exhibitors, as well as among those "men grown old and gray and bald in the noble art," are shown pictures that evidence at least that touch of genius of which Emerson says: "The knowledge of picture dealers has its value; but listen not to their criticism when your heart is touched by genius. It was not painted for them. It was painted for you; for such as had eyes capable of being touched by simplicity and lofty emotions."

Appreciation of the merit in pictures is an individual quality, and according to one's development of the faculty of interpretation and perception of the beautiful and true in art is credit given or withheld.

Hence is it a matter of serious import to those on whom rests the responsibility of accepting or rejecting work along new and unusual lines, to pass judgment upon the strength or weakness of these fads, in view of the influence upon the future of that art for which the National Academy stands sponsor.

If Mr. Caswell, when in a receptive mood, would pay another visit to the present exhibition, and note carefully the numerous examples of really fine work shown, I believe his pride in American art would be reawakened. "KING."

"Undesirable Citizens."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Is, in your opinion, a man who happens to have a different view in regard to governing people than by the present system, who believes in the philosophy of Socialism, an undesirable citizen? And if a person be an "undesirable citizen," and he be born in this country, what are we to do with him? Inasmuch as we cannot deport natives, I suppose you would be in favor of hanging them. Better serve notice to Upton Sinclair, Prof. G. D. Herron, Spargo, Prof. Goldings, and other intellectuals.

Novel or History?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On your first page to-day is a headline that says: "Sixteen-Year-Old Hangs Himself—Lad Found Dead by His Little Brother—Was Addicted to Dime Novels," and later on you state: "The boy later traded the yellow-covered books for a United States History. He had read an account of the hanging of John Brown and the story * * * may have prompted him to take his life." Does this mean that United States Histories are dangerous reading for young America? Being a writer of dime novels, (as well as other priced stories,) I am interested in the question. LURANA W. SHELDON.

MISS BURLINGAME WEDS TRACY HOPPIN

Bishop Courtney Performs Ceremony in Chancel of St. James's Church.

MARRIAGE OF MISS ROPER

Miss Mary B. Bradley Becomes the Bride of William K. Grove—Four Weddings of Yesterday.

Tracy Hoppin, a grandson of ex-Guv. William Warner Hoppin of Rhode Island, was married to Miss Constance Burlingame, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Livermore Burlingame of this city, in the chancel of St. James's Church, in Madison Avenue, yesterday afternoon, Bishop Frederick Courtney of St. James's officiating.

The church was decorated witb palms and Easter lilies. The bride wore a gown of white satin, trimmed with point lace from her grandmother's wedding gown. Her tulle veil was bordered with point lace, and was caught with orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of valley lilies.

Edward Livermore Burlingame, father of the bride, gave his daughter in marriage. The bride's only attendant was Miss May Dows, a niece of Mrs. Benjamin Brewster. The gown worn by the maid of honor was of white chiffon, bordered with roses. Her leghorn hat was also trimmed with pale roaes, and she carried a bouquet of Bridesmaid roscs.

Frederick Street Hoppin, Jr., a brother of tbe bridegroom, was the best man. The ushers were Howard C. Sherwood, Arthur C. Nash, Wirt Howe, and Roger Burlingame, a brother of tbe bride, of this city; Francis Greene of Providence, and Archibald Tisdale of Boston.

Following the ceremony a small reception for intimate friends and relatives of the two families was held at the residence of the bride's parents, 47 East Eighty-third Street.

The bride is a granddaughter of the late Anson Burlingame, at one time Minister to China. Mr. Hoppin is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Street Hoppin of Providence, and is also a nephew of J. Pierpont Morgan. He was graduated from Harvard University, Class of '03, and is a well-known artist.

Among those invited to the reception were:

Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, Mr. and Mrs. William Hoppin, Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Beckwith, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Scribner, Mr. and Mrs. George R. Schieffelin, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin H. Blashfield, Dr. and Mrs. Francis P. Kinnicutt, Mrs. Hilborne L. Roosevelt, Miss Dorothy Roosevelt, the Misses Shippen, Mrs. Benjamin Brewster, Mrs. E. L. Baylies, Mr. and Mrs. George Brewster, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Gould Jennings, Miss Johanna Davidge, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Scribner, Charles Gould, Loyal Farragut, and Mr. and Mrs. Grenville Tremaine.

Mr. and Mrs. Hoppin will travel for a time in this country, and plan to go abroad for the Summer. They will return from Europe in the Autumn, and will make their residence in New York.

The Cook—Roper Wedding.

Walter Cook, Jr., a son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Cook of New York and Miss Margaret Carmichael Roper, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Roper of Pelham Manor, was celebrated yesterday at Christ Church, Pelham Manor. As the church is a small one, having formerly been the private chapel of Bolton Priory, relatives and intimate friends only were invited to it. The reception following at Bolton Priory was also small.

Miss Roper was attended by a matron of honor, Mrs. Witherbee Black; a maid of honor, Miss Jessie M. Stevens. The bridesmaids were Miss Ethel Wood of Boston and Miss Mary Haydock of Germantown, Penn.

Mr. Cook's best man was his brother, Dr. Edward Cook, and the ushers selected were William Sayre, Herbert L. Coffin, Arthur H. Gotthold, and Langdon Roper.

Miss Mary B. Bradley a Bride.

The wedding of William Kepner Grove to Miss Mary Brodhead Bradley, daughter of Herbert N. Bradley and granddaughter of the late Capt. Edgar Brodhead, U. S. N., took place at 8:30 o'clock last night in the All Angels' Church, West End Avenue and Eighty-first Street, the Rev. Dr. S. De Lancey Townsend officiating.

Mrs. Herbert N. Bradley was the matron of honor. The best man was H. Ray Paige of New Haven, Conn. The bridesmaids were the Misses Asenath Deming, Alice Baker, and Helen Martin of Gloversville, N. Y., and Emily Draz and Mabel L. Haskin of this city. The ushers were Messrs. Hudson Booth, Charles G. Nichols, George K. Le Van, Allan N. Corwin, Ward B. Belknap, and George B. Campbell.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. H. N. Bradley, 303 West End Avenue. Mr. and Mrs. Grove left last night for a week's trip motoring. They will live at 166 Park Avenue, East Orange, N. J., in the Autumn.

BIJUR—WERTHEIM.

Marriage Not Put Off at the Request of Bridegroom's Dying Father.

Invitations for the wedding of Abram Bijur of 46 East Seventy-third Street and Miss Angelita Wertheim, daughter of Jacob Wertheim of 5 West Seventy-sixth Street, which was to have taken place at Sherry's on Monday night, were recalled on Sunday owing to the death of apoplexy on Saturday night of Isaac Bijur, father of the bridegroom, but at the dying request of Mr. Bijur the ceremony was not canceled, and the couple were privately married yesterday afternoon at the Wertheim home.

A dinner in honor of the bride and bridegroom, the bridesmaids, and the bridegroom's attendants was in progress at the Wertheim home on Saturday evening when word was received that Mr. Bijur had been stricken with apoplexy at his residence. The son hurried from the scene of the festivities to his father's bedside and was in time to see his father alive.

The Wertheim home is the mansion formerly occupied by the present Secretary of Commerce and Labor, Oscar S. Straus, and was recently rented to the present tenant. The Rev. Joseph Silverman officiated at yesterday's ceremony. The bridegroom is a nephew of Nathan Bijur, the lawyer, who is well known in Jewish charitable work.

WEDDINGS OF TO-DAY.

Miss Christian to Marry Mr. Aspinwall—Miss Woolworth's Nuptials.

Miss Phoebe Christian, daughter of the Rev. Dr. George Martin Christian of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, will be married at 11:30 o'clock this morning to Francis Aspinwall, son of Mrs. Helen Redfield. The ceremony will take place in the church in West Forty-sixth Street, of which the bride's father, who will officiate, is the rector.

A large wedding was planned, but owing to the recent death of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. William Weir of Philadelphia, relatives and intimate friends only have been asked.

The bride's only attendant will be her sister, Miss Margaret Douglass Christian. Breck Aspinwall, a brother of the bridegroom, will be his best man. Dr. Robert M. Jones, Edward Ten Broeck, and William Quaid are to be the ushers. A wedding breakfast in the rectory of the church, 144 West Forty-seventh Street, will follow the ceremony.

Another of to-day's weddings will be that of Miss Edna Woolworth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin W. Woolworth of 960 Fifth Avenue, to Franklyn Laws Hutton at 4 o'clock in the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Fifth Avenue and Forty-fifth Street.

BOOKMAN—BLUN.

The marriage of Miss Olga Blun, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Blun of 15 West Seventy-sixth Street, and Dr. Samuel Bookman took place last night at Delmonico's. The Rev. Dr. Josepb Silverman officiated. The bride was attended by her two sisters, Mrs. Sigmund Klee and Mrs. Louis Long, as matrons of honor. Albert Erdman was best man. Miss Nanette Ehrman waa maid of honor. The ushers were Dr. Arthur Bookman, Fred Bookman, Edwin Blun, Dr. Percy Freidenberg, Louis Grumbach, and Phiness Sondheim. Dr. and Mrs. Bookman will pass their honeymoon abroad.

HARRIS—KLEIN.

William Harris, Jr., and Miss Sibyl Klein, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hermann Klein, were married by a civil service yesterday morning at the home of the bride's parents, 154 West Seventy-seventh Street. There were no attendants and only the immediate relatives were present. Mr. and Mrs. Harris are sailing to spend their honeymoon abroad and will spend a year in Paris before returning to New York.

BRUCE—PARROTT.

Osborne Fitz-Randolph Bruce of 556 West 160th Street, was married to Miss Madeleine Parrott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Moore Parrott, in Grace Church, Broadway and Tenth Street, yesterday afternoon, the Rev. Edward Parrott of Cridwell, Lake George, N. Y., a brother of the bride, officiating.

Miss Birdie Frank Engaged.

The engagement is announced of Miss Birdie, daughter of A. B. Frank of 48 East Eighteth Street, and Laurens A. Cook. Mr. Cook is a graduate of Columbia, a well-known athlete, and brother of Alfred A. Cook. The wedding will take place next month.

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Mrs. Roosevelt entertained this evening at a musical lecture in the White House. The decorations were all of the most charming Spring blossoms, and the East Room, where the programme was given, was in its gala attire. Arthur Nevin gave an illustrated lecture with a number of excerpts from his Indian opera "Pola." This is the first opera of its kind, and the field is a picturesque one. Mr. Nevin has handled his subject intelligently and cleverly, and the distinguished company that asked to hear this weird and interesting music was enthused and impressed.

The Postmaster General and Mrs. George Von L. Meyer will take possession of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dickinson Jewett on Connecticut Avenue on May 1. They have been for the last two months in the house which Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt occupied during the Winter.

The Japanese Ambassador and Viscountess Aoki have again taken a cottage at Buena Vista for the coming Summer. Their son-in-law and daughter, Count and Countess Hatzfeldt-Trachenburg, and their own little daughter, who have spent the latter part of the season with them, will sail for their home in Germany on May 14.

Mrs. Stanley Matthews entertained at a luncheon to-day in honor of Mrs. Beydan, sister of Mrs. Joseph Hobson, who has come over from Rome for a Spring visit.

The Countess Von Moltke Hitfelde, daughter of Mme. Bonaparte, arrived yesterday at the home of her mother for her annual visit. Mrs. Edgar Newbold of New York has been the guest of Mme. Bonaparte for some time.

Miss Audrey Sackett of New York is the guest of Mrs. Thomas T. Gaff, and will remain until after the wedding of Miss Gaff and Dr. Cary Langhorne on April 30.

Mrs. Allan McLane Hamilton of New York is the guest of Mrs. George L. Bradley.

Mrs. Perry Belmont entertained at a bridge party this afternoon, when she had ten tables set in the ballroom.

Social Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. Joselyn Herle Evans (Miss Rumsey) have sailed for England, where they will make their home.

Mrs. James Flower and Miss Florence Flower will entertain this afternoon with bridge at their residence, 41 East Sixtieth Street.

There will be a dance to-night on board the Naval Reserves' ship Granite State which will be attended by a number of New York society men and women. Several well-known New York matrons are the patronesses. The dance is given under the auspices of the First Battalion, N. M. N. Y. Mrs. Stephen H. P. Pell, Mrs. Joseph Ewing, Mrs. John Bloodgood, Mrs. Sidney de Kay, Mrs. A. F. Newcomb, Mrs. Charles S. Bates, and others are among the patronesses.

For the benefit of the Washington Square Day Nursery and Summer Home a concert was given yesterday afternoon at Sherry's, and was attended by a fashionable audience. The artists who contributed to the programme were Mr. and Mrs. Gilibert and Mme. Calvé. Mr. Ray was the accompanist. The selections rendered included the duet from "Veronique," by Messenger, sung by Mr. and Mme. Gilibert, and "La Flute Enchantee," Mozart, by Mme. Calvé and Mr. Gilibert. Among the patronesses of the event were Mesdames Henri Gourd, George B. McClellan, John H. Davis, Le Roy Dresser, F. Burrall Hoffman, Henry C. Frick, J. Herbert Johnston, and Charles H. Ditson; the Misses Georgine Iselin, Marguerite Pierson, Serena Rhinelander, Grace Eldridge, Ruth Lawrence, Margaret Remsen, and Josephine Noel.

Talk of Mapleson for Conried's Job.

A new possible successor to Heinrich Conried in the directorship of the Metropolitan Opera House was mentioned last night on Broadway. This is Col. Mapleson, the son of the Col. Mapleson who formerly conducted a season of opera at the Academy of Music. The second Col. Mapleson is in Paris, and it is said he has been in negotiation with one of the Metropolitan's Directors. A brother, Lionel Mapleson, is librarian at the Metropolitan.

Miss Barnato to Sing in Opera.

Emily Barnato, a niece of the late Barney Barnato, has been engaged by José van den Berg as one of the sopranos for his season of opera at the West End Theatre, which opens on May 6. In the last Winter Miss Barnato has been singing in private concerts.

Mme. Oda's First Ibsen Performance.

Madame Oda, the Danish actress, who is now in New York, will make her first appearance here as Rita in Ibsen's drama, "Little Eyolf," at Carnegie Lyceum, on May 13. She will give her first performance in the original text, but will later play in English. She is to be supported by an American cast.

Sudermann's "Blumenboot," (The Flower Boat,) acted here for the first time last night by the Irving Place company, is capital satiric comedy for two scts, develops an interesting study of character contrasts in the third, and eventuates into what promises to be domestic tragedy. It does not exactly end so, for the author has apparently compromised with his conscience sufficiently to provide what is akin to, if it is not exactly, the conventional happy ending. One can scarcely charge Sudermann with being commonplace, even when he is least satisfactory in this work, but the splendid idea upon which the play is founded promised better results than are attained.

The beautiful Thea, capricious by nature and by instruction—her mother is a sort of amateur Nietzsche individualist—this Thea also cries out to be herself, though she confesses that she does not know what that self is. But she is determined to find out. Naturally not having a very clear idea of the Superman, or, for that matter, the Superwoman, Thea, with her half-baked theories goes in for marriage on the side with plenty of latitude for friendships on the other. Being rather a useless member of society herself, her defection does not so much metter on its own account. But with a mother who winks at lawbreaking, if indeed she does not positively encourage it, Thea before long is also able to put her married sister on the road to deception, with resultant sorrow and heartbreak to the husband, who remains the only decent member of the family. Before all is over there is discovery, forgiveness, and repentance, and a pleasant frame of mind for those playgoers who do not like to go home leaving the protagonists at odds with one another.

Last night's performance was a benefit for Hedwig von Ostermann, and a full house testified to her popularity. Her Thea was a vivacious creature of much physical attractiveness and abundant volatility. Joe Hegyi, blonde antithesis to Miss von Ostermann's dark beauty, was the good sister, playing as usual with much natural charm. Adolph Winds was excellent as the old grandfather. Several of the other parts were fairly well acted, and several of them were played very badly. But the performance was good enough to provide a fair perspective on the play.

"THE MERMAID" PRESENTED.

The Musurgia Society Gives Edwards's New Cantata at Carnegie Hall.

The Musurgia Society gave its third concert of the season last evening in Carnegie Hall under the direction of Walter Henry Hall. The ranks were swelled on this occasion by the addition of the members of the Brooklyn Oratorio Society, and the feature of the programme was the presentation of Julian Edwards's cantata, "The Mermaid," text by Daniel Amadeus Atterbottom.

Mr. Edwards is well known as a composer of light opera, but this was practically his first bow aa a serious composer before a New York audience. The cantata is written for chorus, soprano, tenor, and orchestra. The chorus sings the descriptive bits, the soprano impersonates the Mermaid, and the tenor the Youth who is lured to a watery grave.

There are four principal themes used in the construction: The "Call" theme, the "Rune" theme, "the Magic Spell," and the theme of "Beauty or Fascination." These are woven into an instrumental accompaniment, which usually represents the restlessness of the ocean. The soprano part is written with rather a careless regard for the voice. The intervals are difficult and the effect at times is scarcely pleasing. There is little interesting music for the Youth except the description of the Mermaid's dance.

George Hamlin sang the tenor part and made all that could be made of it, and Mrs. Viola Waterhouse, a charming soprano, did a like office for the part of the Mermaid. After it was over Mr. Hall turned the attention of the audience to Mr. Edwards, who sat in a box, and the composer rose and bowed to the applause. The chorus waved their handkerchiefs, and there was much enthusiasm. The work is light, short, and pleasing, and will probably be sung much by chorial societies throughout the country.

In the second part of the programme George Hamlin sang two Strauss songs, "Morgen" and "Caecelie." Mr. Hamlin was probahly the first to introduce Strauss songs to this country, and no onc sings them better than he. Mrs. Waterhouse sang an air from "Don Giovanni," and the choral societies ended the programme with selections from Elgar's "Bavarian Highland Suite."

WANT HAMMERSTEIN OPERA.

And He Wants to See the Money for Opera in Other Cities First.

A Washington newspaper printed a rumor yesterday that a new Opera House would be built in that city, to be furnished with opera by Oscar Hammerstein. When a TIMES reporter asked Mr. Hammerstein about this last night he said he had received offers from Philadelphia, Boston, and Washington relative to the establishment of opera companies in those cities, but nothing had been decided.

"I shall make no moves until sufficient money to finance such undertakings is put up," said Mr. Hammerstein.

Julia Marlowe Also Gratified by Their Reception in London.

Special Cablegram.

LONDON, April 23.—E. H. Sothern says that both he and Julia Marlowe are highly gratified at the reception accorded them by the audience last night and the treatment given to them by the critics to-day. He is not willing to say it was an error of judgment to open their London season with "The Sunken Bell," but admits that the play is not one likely to appeal strongly to British audiences.

What pleased him and Miss Marlowe most was the cordiality of the welcome extended to them in spite of the unattractiveness of the play.

"Miss Marlowe and I," said he, "have read much in the American papers concerning the attitude of English audiences toward Americans on opening nights. In fact, what we had read about the ridicule and booing on such occasions had caused us considerable trepidation; but this was quickly dissipated by what we believe was our kindly, and even flattering, reception.

"Now that our first appearance has been made, I believe we will be able to work to better advantage. We greatly appreciate the fairness of the critics in withholding judgment as to our merits as actors until we are seen in a play better suited to a London audience."

LONDON, April 23.—Judgment for £100 was entered to-day jointly against the proprietors of the New York vaudeville paper Variety and its London correspondent in a libel suit by Alfred Butt, director of the Palace Theatre here.

The article complained of dealt with the recent music hall war in London. The chief objection made was to a statement that nobody believed that Butt was paying Marie Tempest £150 a week, and to the statement that Butt made a practice of splitting commission percentages.

Butt is known by New York variety actors aa "Baby" Butt.

OPERA CHORUS GIRLS DINE.

Manhattan Singers Treat Themselves and Admit No Men.

The chorus of American girls, which haa been one of the features of the success of the season at the Manhattan Opera House, gave a dinner to themselves last night at the Café Boulevard. TO SING "SALOME" IN PARIS.

Olive Fremstad Said to Have Accepted an Offer Made Through De Reszke.

Olive Fremstad is to sing "Salome" in Paris, according to a statement sent to the newspapers late last night. Mme. Fremstad is now on the road with the Metropolitan Opera Company. It is known that the soprano received many European offers to sing the part after her success here. The present offer, however, is said to have come through Jean de Reszke.

Mme. Fremstad is to sail for Europe on La Lorraine on May 2. The dates for the performances of "Salome" are May 17, 21, and 24. The Paris production has been postponed many times owing to disagreements with the composer.

Opera Opens St. Paul Auditorium.

ST. PAUL, April 23.—The Conried Opera Company arrived in St. Paul to-day from Omaha, and opened the theatre part of the new municipal auditorium with "Tannhauser" to-night. The house was filled, many persons having come from the Dakotas, Montana and Winnipeg for the occasion.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

William H. Arnoux.

William H. Arnoux, once Judge of the Superior Court of this city, died yesterday after a long illness in Vineyard Haven, Mass., at the age of 76. He formerly lived in New York. Aside from his Judgeship, Mr. Arnoux was well known here through his connection with the law firm of Arnoux, Ritch & Woodward of this city, of which he was a member for twenty-five years.

Mr. Arnoux was born in New York in 1831. At the age of 15 he was prepared to enter the junior class of Princeton College, but his father had destined him for a mercantile career. So he devoted himself to business for four years and then began the study of law. He was admitted to the bar in 1853, practicing thereafter with leading law firms of this city.

He served as Judge of the Superior Court of New York from 1882 to 1895, afterward resuming his law practice. He was a member of the New York State Bar Association, and its President from 1889 to 1890. He was a member and ex-Vice President of the American Sons of the Revolution, a member of the American Museum of Natural History, the American Geographical Society, the New England and New York Societies, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and the American Institute of Civics. Judge Arnoux was a student of science, literature, and art.

Thomas B. Riter.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 23.—Thomas B. Riter, President of the Riter-Conley Manufacturing Company, one of the greatest independent iron and steel concerns in the country, died at his home here early this moring. He was 67 years old. Although he had been a sufferer from Bright's disease for several months, his death was unexpected. Mr. Riter was one of the founders of the Riter-Conley Company. He began work as a blacksmith when a young man, and first started a small shop with John H. Conley, which grew into the immense concern it is today. Mr. Riter was several times a millionaire, and was one of Pittsburg's foremost self-made men.

He leaves a widow and one son, Joseph Riter.

Peter Cumming.

Peter Cumming, one of the founders of the Broadway Savings Institution of 23 Park Place, died yesterday at his home, 7 West Eighty-second Street. He was 90 years old. Mr. Cumming was born in Scotland and came to New York in 1846.

Soon after his arrival in this country he obtained a place in the National Broadway Bank. Five years later he started the movement that ended in the incorporation of the Broadway Savings Institution. He was its first manager. Later he became its President, resigning this post only two years ago.

At the time of his death he was a member of the savings bank's board. His wife died several years ago. Several grandnieces and grandnephews are his nearest surviving relatives.

Samuel Graasman.

Samuel Graasman of the firm of B. Rothschild & Co., clothing manufacturers of Rochester, died yesterday afternoon in Minneapolis. He was born in this city, and for twenty-five years had been in the local office of the Rothschild Company at 725 Broadway. At the time of his death he was traveling in the interests of the company.

New York Defeats Boston by Timely Hitting in Final Game.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 23.—The "Giants" defeated Boston this afternoon in the final game of the series, by the score of 4 to 2. It was a batt'e between Pitchers Ferguson and Young, with the honors in favor of the former. For six innings only one man on each side reached the third base, and the crowd was becoming excited when in the seventh Devlin singled, took second on a poor throw by Orendorff, and scored on Bresnahan's drive to left. The ice being thus broken, Dahlen and Corcoran bith hit for singles in the eighth, and the former scored.

In the ninth Shannon went to first on called balls, and Devlin hit to third. McGann singled, scoring Shannon and Devlin, making the score 4 to 0.

Boston's first run was made on Bates's double, Tenney's sacrifice, and Beaumont's triple in the eighth. In the ninth Burke, batting for Orendorff, scored on a base on balls and singles by Bates and Beaumont. Score:

Abbaticchio's Hit Was Timely.

ST. LOUIS, April 23.—The St. Louis Nationals lost again to-day to Pittsburg, 7 to 5. The etart of the game was delayed half an hour by wet grounds. Pittsburg won in the eighth inning, when Abbaticchio got a three-base hit. The visitors were assisted by Beebe, who made a balk, sent Sheehan to first base on balls, and allowed Lynch and Anderson to single. Score:

Detroit Bunched Hits and Beat St. Louis Easily.

DETROIT, Mich., April 23.—Detroit found it easy to hit Morgan and won the game in the first three innings, erratic fielding by St. Louis helping some.

The visitors started a rally in the ninth, but Mullin struck out Frisk and Stone, checking it. The day was dark, damp, and cold, affecting both play and attendance. Score:

Y. M. C. A. Baseball Championship.

The Young Men's Christian Association has arranged for an inter-branch baseball tournament, to begin on Saturday. The branches that have entered are the West Side, East Side, Harlem, Washington Heights, and Williamsbridge. There will be two series, the senior and the junior. The seniors will play in the afternoon, while the juniors will play in the morning.

The Spalding Baseball Trophy will be awarded to the championship team. To win this trophy, the teams must win two out of three games with each other, and then the winner of these series will play the Brooklyn branches. The schedule arranged by the committee follows:

April 27—East Side vs. Harlem; Williamsbridge vs. Washington Heights. May 4—West Side vs. Washington Heights; Harlem vs. Williamsbridge. May 11—West Side vs. East Side; Harlem vs. Washington Heights. May 18—West Side vs. Williamsbridge; East Side vs. Washington Heights. May 25—West Side vs. Harlem; East Side vs. Williamsbridge. May 30—East Side vs. Harlem. Williamsbridge vs. Washington Heights. June 1—West Side vs. Washington Heights; Harlem vs. Williamsbridge. June 8—West Side vs. East Side; Harlem vs. Washington Heights. June 15—West Side vs. Williamsbridge; East Side vs. Washington Heights.

Between the Innings.

President Comisky is concerned over Lee Tannehill, who was spiked at St. Louis. The injury to his left foot has kept the clever Chicago American League infielder in bed, and there are signs of blood poisoning. Under the best conditions he will not be able to play for several weeks.

William Gilbert will play this season with the Trenton Tri-State League club, where he is to receive the same salary that he got for playing second base for the Giants. Manager Carnen of Trenton has purchased Gilbert's release from Newark.

President Frank Farrell of the New York Americans yesterday released Hughes to Montreal and Castleton to Atlanta. Both pitchers were tried both in preliminary and championship games, but were not thought to be fast enough for a major league team.

A bill has passed the lower house of the Michigan Legislature permitting Sunday ball games at Detroit. The opponents of Sunday baseball will endeavor to have the bill reconsidered, and failing in that will fight it in the Senate.

President Noyes of the Washington Baseball Club has written to August Herrmann requesting a speedy settlement of the Jake Stahl case.

The Eastern League season will open to-day. Buffalo is scheduled to play at Montreal, and Toronto will begin the season at Rocheeter. The Eastern division of the leaguo will not begin championship games until to-morrow, when Jersey City will go to Providence, and Baltimore plays on the Newark grounds.

TENNIS DOUBLES FINAL.

Larned and Wrenn, in Fine Form, Beat Little and Behr.

William A. Larned and George L. Wrenn, Jr., won the first prize in the round robin doubles yesterday on the canvas-covered court of the St. Nicholas Rink, Sixty-sixth Street and Columbus Avenue. The pair of veteran tennis experts not only displayed brilliant form, but on the manoeuvres of the court they easily gained the distinction of generals against Raymond D. Little and Karl H. Behr, Jr. The latter forced the playing through three sets before Larned and Wrenn won at 4—6, 8—6, and 6—4.

In the estimation of the experts Larned and Wrenn have seldom shown better all-around form in their doubles than in the final of the indoor series against Little and Behr. Both hit the ball hard and with powerful strokes made their shots for placement and passes go true to the mark. In the first set Larned was a trifle slow in getting started. It was due to this that his side lost the set, although the point score was very close. In the second eet the team work of the two veterans was well-nigh perfection. They protected their territory against the smashes and volleys which Little and Behr had used in the previous set to win aces. The summary:

Men's Round Robin Doubles.—Third round—William A. Larned and George L. Wrenn, Jr., defeated Raymond D. Little and Karl H. Behr, Jr., 4—6, 8—6, 6—4.

Strife has developed within the lawn tennis ranks over the question as to where the Western doubles championship will be played this season. This is partially due to the new arrangement which is to bring the title-winning teams of the West, East, and South into a special tournament on the courts of the Crescent Athletic Club. The winning pair of this series is to play Holcombe Ward and Beals C. Wright in the challenge match for the championship at Newport.

For many years the Kenwood Country Club of Chicago has held the Western doubles meeting. This year the Onwentsia Club has clashed with the smaller organization. Wishing to relieve itself of all responsibility in the matter, the National Association merely eet the date as the week of July 27 for the playing of the important doubles, and left it to the Western Lawn Tennis Association to determine where the tournament should be held.

Two meetings have already been held, but as the supporters of Onwentsia and Kenwood remain evenly divided in the voting, no result has been arrived at. Both Kreigh Collins, last year a member of the international team, and Louis H. Waidner favor Onwentsia for the tournament.

OKENITE CAPTURES STERLING STAKES

Belmont Entry, at Odds On, Easily Takes the Feature Race.

FOUR FAVORITES BEATEN

King's Daughter, with High Weight, Runs the Fastest Six Furlongs of Aqueduct Meeting.

The two-year-olds that ran at the Aqueduct track yesterday had the hurden of the racing to carry, the number of horses in the two events for two-year-olds exceeding the total number of horses in all the other races of the programme.

The crowd conceded the Sterling Stakes to August Belmont's Okenite, a winner at Washington and at Aqueduct last week, and the Belmont gelding wae sent to the post favorite at 5 to 2 on over Oxford and Glid, his only opponents. The race was of one mile, and for the first three-quarters Okenite looked beaten, for to Okenite'e lead away from the post Glid went to the front with a rueh and elipped far away from the favorite. Okenite dropped back into last place on the far turn, Oxford there leaving him and going on after Glid.

Entering the stretch, Oxford took the lead from Glid and swung into the straight so far in front of Okenite that the crowd already wae acclaiming Oxford as the winner, when Okenite began his effort for the prize. Into the last quarter Oxford held his lead, and then his rush after Glid began to tell on him, and in the final quarter Okenite, under a little rousing, passed him and won easily at the end, by three parts of a length, in 1:40, the time equaling the best performance of the meeting.

In advance of the last race M. L. Hayman's Apple Toddy was talked of as one of the smart two-year-olds making up the field, but there were tips out on half a dozen of the runners, Royal Vane starting favorite, with Bridge Whist, Bellwether, and Transvaal the next three choices, while Apple Toddy went to the post more or less neglected at 10 to 1. Bellwether, the leader at the start, raced out in front attended by Transvsal and Apple Toddy into the last quarter, where Apple Toddy drew out in the lead, and, hard ridden to the end, won by a length from Transvasl, with Bellwether, stopping fast, a close third.

The largest field of the day ran in the fifth of the races for two-year-olds, with Biskra the post favorite over Citizen, the latter a son of Voter, carrying the colors of James R. Keene. Look, from the Oneck Stable, broke out of the crowd early in the race, and into the closing strides held first place, but at the end Look was tiring and stopping, and Citizen, closing in good style, went to the front about the last sixteenth pole, and won the race handily, two lengths away from Biskra, which beat Look a neck for second place.

In the six-furlong handicap a field of five horses ran, with Thomas C. McDowell's fast filly King's Daughter the top weight at 126 pounds, in her first race of the season. The weight on King's Daughter, more than anything else, caused Cressina and the Western colt Sir Edward to be made the choices over her, but Cressina, the post favorite, was outrun at the start, while King's Daughter went out with Sir Edward, and carried him such a pace that he was ready to stop at the half mile. King's Daughter then went on alone, and won the fastest six furlongs of the meeting, in 1:13, clear of Cressina, which closed at the end and was second. Summaries:

On Sunday the sloop motor boat Jennie R., from Stillwell's Pier, Gravesend Beach, at the Fishing Banks, caught 80 cod and a number of blackfish.

Good flounder fishing is reported at Rockaway Beach, Schmeike's Hole, and the Drain, near Yankee Channel. The catches made on Monday were: D. Brown, 75; Fred Bloch, 68; Henry Spatz, 80; Joe Tsussig, 91, and Charles Bjur, 181 flounders.

The first salmon to be taken at tha Bangor Pool, Bangor, Me., was landed by Charles Bissel of Brewer, Ma. The fish weighed 18½ pounds, and Mr. Bissel was an hour landing the fish.

The steamer Taurus will resume trips to tha Fishing Banks on Sunday, leaving Pier No. 1, foot of Battery Place, at 8:20 A. M. daily, except Monday, until further notice. The Taurus will not start from nor land at the pier at Thirty-first Street, East River, as heretofore, but arrangements will shortly be made at piers at 129th Street and Twenty-first Street, in addition to Pier No. 1, North River.

The result of the trips of the clubs last Sunday was: Al Meyers at Shinnecock Point on the Easy Times, 614 flounders; Sunrise from Stapleton, cod; Star off Coney Island, 25 cod, 47 flounders, and a party on Banshee, cod and sea flounders.
